1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

For the purpose of this study, it must be illustrated in the beginning that Austria is a federal state consisting of the Federation and nine federal states, the Laender. Under the Austrian federal system, apart from the Federation also the Laender are authorised to issue legislative acts, the competences of the respective federal entities being laid down in Art. 10-15 of the Austrian Constitution. The Laender have their own Parliaments (Landtag), responsible for formal legislation, and Governments as supreme administrative organs. For the purpose of the implementation of the present Directive, it has to be decided in the first step whether the Federation or the Laender are competent to issue legislation in the field of reception conditions for asylum seekers. At present, the federal entities are sharing the opinion that both sides are competent in the field (for a closer explanation see below at Q.3.), therefore no single basic norm of transposition can be identified, because the Federation and the Laender are responsible for different steps of the procedure. The Laender Acts have equal rank on their respective territories.

1) Federal Basic Welfare Support Act

Bundesgesetz, mit dem die Grundversorgung von Asylwerbern im Zulassungsverfahren und bestimmten anderen Fremden geregelt wird (Grundversorgungsgesetz - Bund 2005 - GVG-B 2005)
Federal Law Gazette 405/1991, last amendment Federal Law Gazette I 100/2005
Date of publication of latest amendment: 16 August 2005

Entry into force: 17 August 2005 (entry into force of new Title, Subtitle and Abbreviation as well as Sect. 9 §§ 3a and 3b and Sect.10 § 1) and 1st January 2006
Earlier amendment relevant for transposition of the Directive: Federal Law Gazette I 32/2004
Date of Publication: 27 April 2004
Entry into force: 1st January 2005

Consolidated German version at http://ris.bka.gv.at/bundesrecht/ (search page), see also at http://www.unhcr.at/fileadmin/unhcr_data/pdfs/rechtsinformationen/A-Gesetze/A_-_Grundversorgungsgesetz_Bund_2005_-_1486.pdf

The law is applicable only to asylum seekers in the admissibility procedure, which is in line with the Agreement concluded between the Federation and the Laender (see below at Q.2), laying down the Federation's responsibility to grant reception conditions in this first stage of the procedure. Once asylum seekers are admitted to the regular procedure, the responsibility for reception of asylum seekers devolves upon the Laender.

Although there is no formal reference to the Directive, the law was basically intended to transpose the Directive. A reference can be found in the Basic Welfare Support Agreement (see Q.2. below at 1). The law also contains several provisions not covered by the Directive (eg. Sect. 12 on advice on and support of voluntary return). Like the Laender Acts as well, it was designed also to transpose Council Directive 2001/55/EC of 20 July 2001 on minimum standards for giving temporary protection in the event of a mass influx of displaced persons and on measures promoting a balance of efforts between Member States in receiving such persons and bearing the consequences thereof, by including special provisions on cases of mass influx of displaced persons, eg. Sect. 11 § 3).

2) Care Acts of the Laender:

2.1. Burgenland

Burgenland Care Act
Gesetz vom 18. Mai 2006 über die vorübergehende Grundversorgung von Asylwerberinnen und Asylwerbern und sonstigen hilfs- und schutzbedürftigen Fremden (Asylwerberinnen und Asylwerber, Asylberechtigte, Vertriebene und andere aus rechtlichen oder faktischen Gründen nicht abschiebbare Menschen) im Burgenland (Burgenländisches Landesbetreuungsgesetz - Bgld. LBetreuG)
Law Gazette of Burgenland 42/2006
Date of Landtag decision: 18 May 2006
Date of publication: 11 August 2006, entry into force: 1st September 2006

According to Sect. 12 § 3 the law is designed to transpose EC Directives 2003/9/EC, 2001/55/EC, 2004/81/ECand 2004/83/EC.[1]

Carinthia Basic Welfare Support Act
Gesetz vom 4. April 2006 über Maßnahmen zur vorübergehenden Grundversorgung für hilfs- und schutzbedürftige Fremde (Asylwerber, Asylberechtigte, Vertriebene und andere aus rechtlichen oder faktischen Gründen nicht abschiebbare Menschen) in Kärnten (Kärntner Grundversorgungsgesetz – K-GrvG)
Law Gazette of Carinthia 43/2006
Date of Landtag decision: 4 April 2006
Date of publication: 4 July 2006, entry into force: 5 July 2006

According to Sect. 12 the law is designed to transpose Directives 2003/9/EC and 2001/55/EC (special provision in Sect. 5).

German version also at:
http://www.unhcr.at/fileadmin/unhcr_data/pdfs/rechtsinformationen/A-Gesetze/A_-_Kaerntner_Grundversorgungsges_-_1717.pdf

2.3. Lower Austria

Lower Austria Basic Welfare Support Act
NÖ Grundversorgungsgesetz
Law Gazette of Lower Austria 9240-0, No. 15/07
Date of Landtag decision: 14 December 2006
Date of publication: 15 February 2007, entry into force: 16 February 2007

According to Sect. 26 the law is designed to transpose Directives 2001/55/EC, 2003/9/EC, 2004/81/EC and 2004/83/EC.

2.4. Salzburg

Salzburg Basic Welfare Support Act
Gesetz vom 14. März 2007 zur Sicherstellung der vorübergehenden Grundversorgung von hilfs- und schutzbedürftigen Fremden in Salzburg (Salzburger Grundversorgungsgesetz)

[1] Rules on Directives 2001/55/EC (special rules in Sect. 8), 2004/81/EC (Sect. 2 § 1 no. 6 declares the law applicable for people who are victims of human trafficking) and 2004/83/EC (Sect. 2 § 1 no. 2 declares the law applicable for people having been granted humanitarian status, no. 3 on people who cannot be expelled for factual reasons and no. 5 for people having been granted asylum during the first four months from the decision).

Law Gazette of Salzburg 35/2007
Date of Landtag decision: 14 March 2007
Date of publication: 30 May 2007; entry into force: 1st July 2007

According to Sect. 22 the law is designed to transpose Directives 2001/55/EC, 2003/9/EC, 2004/81/EC and 2004/83/EC.

2.5. Styria

Styria Care Act
Gesetz vom 5. Juli 2005, mit dem die Landesbetreuung von hilfs- und schutzbedürftigen Fremden geregelt wird (Steiermärkisches Betreuungsgesetz – StBetrG)
Law Gazette of Styria 101/2005
Date of Landtag decision: 5 July 2005
Date of publication: 18 October 2005; entry into force: 19 October 2005

According to Sect. 15 the law is designed to transpose Directives 2003/9/EC, 2001/55/EC and 2004/83/EC.[2]

German version also at:
http://www.unhcr.at/fileadmin/unhcr_data/pdfs/rechtsinformationen/A-Gesetze/A_-_Steierm_Betreuungsgesetz_-_1718.pdf

2.6. Tyrol

Tyrol Basic Welfare Support Act
Gesetz vom 15. Dezember 2005, mit dem das Tiroler Grundversorgungsgesetz erlassen wird
Law Gazette of Tyrol No. 21/2006
Date of Landtag decision: 15 December 2005
Date of publication: 14 February 2006, entry into force: 1st March 2006

According to Sect. 22 the law is designed to transpose Directives 2001/55/EC, 2003/9/EC, 2004/83/EC.[3]

Provisions on reception conditions for asylum seekers, have been included into the general Social Welfare Act, the relevant paragraphs for the purpose of the Directive being Sect. 1, 3 § 4, Sect. 7a, 9-13, 15 § 8 and Sect. 35 of the Social Welfare Act.

[4] Retroactive entry into force.
[5] Sect. 7 Kundmachungsgesetz.

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

- Put as an annex to your report a paper copy of each norm in the original language with a reference number to help the reader to find it easily;
- Send us as an electronic version of each norm or a weblink to the text (this will be used for the website we are building);
- Provide the texts of any translation of the above norms into English if they are available.

NOTE: all laws are available after publication at www.ris.bka.gv.at/auswahl (search page in German). Since 2004 the official publication of all Federal Laws is done via Internet.
A selection of legal texts translated into English is usually published on the UNHCR website (http://www.unhcr.at/information-in-english/austrian-asylum-legislation.html), most of the federal acts have been translated by now (as far as the Aliens Police Act is concerned, only those parts relating to detention have been translated). The Welfare Support Acts of the Laender have not been translated by UNHCR.

1) Basic Welfare Support Agreement

Agreement between the Federation and the Laender concerning joint measures for the temporary granting of basic welfare support to aliens in need of assistance and protection […]

Vereinbarung zwischen dem Bund und den Ländern gemäß Art. 15a B-VG über gemeinsame Maßnahmen zur vorübergehenden Grundversorgung für hilfs- und schutzbedürftige Fremde (Asylwerber, Asylberechtigte, Vertriebene und andere aus rechtlichen oder faktischen Gründen nicht abschiebbare Menschen) in Österreich (Grundversorgungsvereinbarung - Art. 15a B-VG)

The main purpose of the Agreement was to clarify the distribution of competence within the federal system in order to facilitate the transposition of the present Directive. According to Art. 1 § 2 the Agreement is devoted also to Council Directive 2001/55/EC of 20 July 2001 on minimum standards for giving temporary protection in the event of a mass influx of displaced persons and on measures promoting a balance of efforts between Member States in receiving such persons and bearing the consequences thereof. It contains a special provision concerning this group in Art. 8.

According to Art. 1 § 1 the Agreement applies to "aliens in need of assistance and protection in Austria (asylum seekers, persons having entitlement to asylum, displaced persons and other persons who may not be deported for legal or practical reasons)"

3) Care Facility Entry Regulation

9) Information sheet on rights and duties of asylum seekers

10) Information sheet on the asylum procedure

11) More Laender legislation:

a) Social Welfare Legislation

The competence to issue legislation in the field of social welfare lies with the Laender. Apart from Vorarlberg, which has included welfare support for asylum seekers in its Social Welfare Act, other Laender rather exclude asylum seekers from social welfare than include them. For further information see the relevant questions on social welfare.

b) Hospital legislation.

The organisation and financial fundament of hospitals also lies within the competence of the Laender on the basis of legislation on basic principles provided by federal legislation (special form of distribution of competences under Art. 12 of the Austrian Constitution). For the purpose of this study, these Acts are of minor importance, because they only include one provision pertaining to asylum seekers, excluding repayment of costs of hospitalisation. however, most of the Acts have not yet been brought in line with the new asylum legislation. The latest amendments are not relevant for the purpose of this study.

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

Under the Austrian Constitution, it does not seem entirely clear whether the duty to grant adequate reception conditions to asylum seekers falls within the scope of asylum, which is within the competence of the Federation (Art. 10 § 1 no. 3 and 7 of the Federal Constitutional Act), or social welfare, falling within the competence of the nine Laender). For a long time, the reception of asylum seekers was effected basically by the Federation on the basis of the "Federal Care Provision Act" (now Federal Basic Welfare Support Act). However, this system did not cover all asylum seekers but left a large number of them in homelessness. Some Laender therefore also took some responsibility and created care systems on the basis of their competence in social welfare. Since it was at the time seen as a matter of social law, the Federation took up this responsibility without constitutional obligation under the system of competences, acting not as an authority, but as a private actor (Privatwirtschaftsverwaltung). In 2003 the Supreme Court (Oberster Gerichtshof), as the last instance court in private law matters, issued a significant decision on the federal care system, ruling that even if the Federation was not acting under administrative law, it was still bound by fundamental rights laid down by the Constitution, above all the equality principle. Therefore, no asylum seeker could be denied benefits of federal care, if he or she fulfilled the requirements laid down by law. In view of rising numbers of asylum seekers and the date of transposition of the Directive pending, the Federation demanded more action from the Laender and after three years of negotiations on a new repartition of duties, the Federation and the nine Laender concluded an agreement, which is provided for in Art. 15a of the Austrian Constitution as a constitutional instrument. This Basic Welfare Support Agreement ("Grundversorgungsvereinbarung") stipulates that the Federation is responsible for granting reception conditions in the first phase of the procedure, the admissibility procedure (Art. 3 of the Agreement; see below Q.11.), while the Laender are responsible after an application for asylum has been declared admissible (Art. 4). The theoretical background of this repartition of duties is that while an asylum seeker has not yet been admitted to the asylum procedure, he or she is subject to aliens law as a part of legislation guaranteeing public order and security. Therefore, at this stage of the procedure, the asylum seeker's neediness is not a criterion for his or her admission to federal care, but all asylum seekers are taken into federal care. This solution also serves their availability for the carrying out of the admissibility procedure. After having been admitted to the procedure and thus residing legally on the territory, his or her welfare falls within the scope of social welfare.[6] In a decision of 3rd October 2006, Reference number G33/06 ua, the Constitutional Court has accepted this repartition of competences as in conformity with the Constitution. The costs of all measures provided for by the Agreement are partitioned between the Federation and the Laender (Art. 10; see also Q.10.). The Agreement aims at granting equal benefits all over the country (Art. 1 § 1) and lays down which benefits must be granted by the parties, but it does not convey rights to individuals itself.

As a result, this means that the Federation as well as the Laender must adopt legislation in order to grant reception conditions to the degree of their responsibilities under the Agreement.
Although it seems clear that for the purpose of transposition of rules of European Law, the Federation remains solely responsible, it seemed necessary to reveal the Austrian system of competences. Moreover, it has to be added that only the Ministry of the Interior replied to the practical questionnaire distributed for the sake of this study. Apparently, the federal entities decided that since the Federation is accountable to the European Commission for the transposition of the Directive, additional information from the part of the Laender was not deemed necessary. Therefore, the information used in the following derives from an analysis of the Laender legislation as far as available, as well as telephone interviews with Government officials and NGOs.

Apart from the special system in reception conditions for asylum seekers, it can be resumed that social welfare legislation in general falls within the competence of the Laender (as part of "poverty legislation", see Art. 12 § 1 no. 1 Federal Constitutional Act; the right to social welfare benefits is in most Laender subsidiary to the Welfare Support Acts). Moreover, the Laender are competent in the fields of youth welfare and hospitals (see also Art. 12 § 1 no. 1). These domains are shared by the Laender with the Federation, which has the right to adopt legislation on the general principles, while the Laender are responsible for implementing legislation. The Federation has renounced this right in the field of social welfare, therefore the Laender are solely responsible.

Aliens Legislation falls within the competence of the Federation, to a certain extent conditions covered by this questionnaire are provided by the Asylum Act 2005 (eg. documents or information rendered to asylum seekers during the asylum procedure) or the Aliens Police Act 2005; legislation on employment is equally the Federation's competence (Art. 10 § 1 no. 11, except for employment in the agrarian sector), as well as – for the present study – legislation on the school system (with special competences of the Laender in a series of organisational questions, see the repartition of competences in Art. 14 Federal Constitutional Act).

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

The only permissible way to grant benefits to persons under the Rule of Law as understood by the Austrian Constitution is by formal legislation, because only this choice provides the possibility that the norm be reviewed by the Constitutional Court as to its constitutionality. Regulations may only be issued on the basis of a law and by the federal entity competent for legislation in the field. As explained in Q.3., the Basic Welfare Support Agreement is an agreement between the federal entities which does not convey rights to individuals. The Agreement has been transposed or will be transposed by the Federation and the Laender by law.

Additionally some laws and proposals contain an authorisation of administrative bodies to rule specific questions by legislative regulation. Subordinate regulations may always be issued according to Austrian constitutional law. In cases where the reception of asylum seekers (meaning the supply of all or nearly all benefits granted to asylum seekers, as accommodation, food, counselling, payment of benefits provided in money) has been accorded to NGOs (eg. Vorarlberg, Salzburg, Vienna…), the Land remains the responsible political and administrative organ. However, the quality of reception conditions to be met and the rules of the house have not been fixed by law but have been included in the contracts with the NGOs.

This system chosen has a significant effect on the possibilities to enforce asylum seekers' rights. At current, Salzburg is the only Land which has not yet enacted legislation, but is granting benefits de facto by applying the Basic Welfare Support Agreement. A (non-official) internal regulation telling the administration how to apply it in practice has been issued. A problem arises out of this repartition of competences, in so far as the Federation and the Laender have to reach an agreement if asylum seekers are to be moved from a federal care facility to one of the Laender. In cases where none of the Laender is willing to accept to take over an asylum seeker, he or she does not have access to a legal remedy (see below at Q.11.).

It is important to note that the European Convention on Human Rights has the status of Constitutional Law in Austria, so that laws, regulations or administrative decisions can be challenged before the Constitutional Court in view of their conformity with the Convention, especially with the guarantees provided by Art. 3 and 8.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

In view of the relatively complicated system of distribution of competences in Austria with regard to reception of asylum seekers, the Directive has been transposed in an individual way in the Basic Welfare Support Agreement. The Laender have either chosen individual ways of transposing the Agreement (eg. Vorarlberg Social Welfare Act) or copied to a large extent the provisions of the Agreement or of the Federal Act. Most of them did not visibly take into account the specific guarantees foreseen by the Directive. Therefore, not all of the Laender Acts are very detailed. Only the Lower Austrian Act is more elaborated, and contains a series of provisions, which have been taken over from the Directive, because they were not included in the Agreement (eg. the list of vulnerable persons whose interests have to be taken into account, Sect. 6 § 4). This is, however, rather a positive example, because Lower Austria took into account the Directive when transposing the Basic Welfare Support Agreement, which other Laender did not.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

As far as existing or previewed legislation is concerned, references can be found at Q. 1 and 2. The Federation has issued the above mentioned regulations concerning prohibition of unauthorised entry and rules of the house. Administrative instructions are hardly ever published in the legal information system database, and could not be gathered from the Ministry of the Interior, so all information given on such instructions are taken from information given by NGOs and other internet sources. Several provisions of the Directive were not transposed in federal legislation explicitly, others were introduced into the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act in the form of a general guarantee, lacking however concrete instructions concerning procedures to be applied or measures to be taken by the authorities in order to grant the effective implementation of these rules.

As far as the Laender are concerned, the above mentioned legislation has either been adopted or is currently in the legislative process. No information on further implementing texts, apart from the legislation given, could be gathered. According to Sect. 7 § 1 of the Styria Care Act the Government is authorized to issue a legislative regulation prohibiting unauthorised access to care facilities run by the Land "if this is necessary in the interests of order in the care facility, of the prevention of attacks against life, health, the freedom of humans or property of beneficiaries, or the protection of equipment of the centre". In case this regulation has been published already, it can however not be found in the legal information system. Such regulations are, however, not necessary for the implementation of the Directive.

A Basic Welfare Support Act for Salzburg has not yet been issued, but apparently – according to the website of the Landtag giving information on the outcome of a meeting of the Landtag constitutional committee – the Act has been adopted on 14 March, its publication may therefore be expected soon.

Practical rules are also contained in specific contracts concluded between the Federation or the Laender with NGOs. But these provisions differ from Land to Land and are not public.

As far as the new (or forthcoming) legislation of the Laender is concerned, it must be said that the Basic Welfare Support Acts are rather imprecise and leave a large margin of appreciation to the officials in charge, without providing the necessary rules how to make use of their discretionary power. The legitimacy of such legal provisions under the rule of law as understood by the Austrian Constitution may be doubtful. The Acts contain very general guarantees of benefits granted to asylum seekers, including only a list taken over from the Basic Welfare Support Agreement. Since the Agreement was only devoted to the repartition of duties between the Federation and the Laender and not to the granting of rights to individuals, the Laender Acts are generally short of the much more detailed guarantees foreseen by the Directive, because they put more emphasis on copying the Basic Welfare Support Agreement and did not always take into account the provisions of the Directive. While these Acts are intended to transpose the Directive, the effectiveness of its implementation may be doubted. This applies mainly to those Laender which issued legislative acts soon after the Agreement entered into force. Laender which only recently issued legislation show a more differentiated picture.

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

For the Federation see the Government Bill on the Basic Welfare Support Agreement. The legal project for the Federal Welfare Support Act was based on a report of the Parliamentary Committee responsible for Internal Affairs, and has been changed during the legislation process, which can be followed at:

The reasons for the amendments proposed at the occasion of the implementation of the Agreement can be found in the protocols of the legislation process in Parliament, at:

There were no other extensive preparatory studies done about necessary changes at the occasion of the transposition neither on the level of the Federation or in the Laender. The results of the usual preparatory work done in the course of the legislative process are incorporated in the explanatory notes which are attached to draft proposals and Government Bills and are published with those. The explanatory notes issued relating to the Basic Welfare Support Agreement have definitely known a thorough preparation and have been copied to a large extent by the Laender in the explanatory notes of their drafts and bills.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

Constitutional Court

VfGH 14 June 2007, G 14/07-10, G 40/07-6
The Constitutional Court turned down a request of the Administrative Court to abolish the provision in the Aliens Police Act which allows to take asylum seekers in whose case it can be assumed that the alien's application for international protection will be declared inadmissible lacking Austrian responsibility to assess the application (Dublin cases) into detention pending deportation. The Administrative Court claimed that the provision according to which the aliens police authority had to assess the likelihood of the application being turned down, was unconstitutional, arguing that in the light of Art. 5 § 1 lit. 1 ECHR detention could only be ordered when the asylum authority had expressed its intention to expel the persons concerned. The Constitutional Court upheld the position of the Government which had argued in the legislation procedure that the ECHR does not ask for a formal expulsion procedure to order detention and the assessment of the police authority is therefore sufficient.

VfGH 16 March 2007, B 1397/06-9
The Constitutional Court turned down a complaint lodged by an asylum seeker who argued that an amendment of the Family Allowances Act which excluded asylum seekers from benefits granted under the act was unconstitutional. The Court ruled that the legislator had a margin of discretion when deciding on the granting of measures intended to support families and that it was allowed to require a special close relationship to Austria. It could therefore not be considered unconstitutional if the legislator excluded a group of persons from benefits which does not have a right to residence under the Settlement and Residence Act but who receive basic benefits under the basic welfare support system. Since the Court estimated that the complaint had very little chances of success, it decided to turn it down without entering into the merits.

VfGH 8 March 2006, G41/05 ua (no number in the Collection of Decisions yet)
The Constitutional Court turned down several applications of Independent Administrative Tribunals in the Laender (UVS) for a constitutionality test of Sect. 9 § 2 and 3 of the Federal Care Provision Act (old name of the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act) and for abrogation of the said provisions. The provisions have been newly published in 2004 – before the end of the procedure. Therefore the Constitutional Court ruled that the authorities did no longer have to apply the provisions in question, whereas the new provisions had not been challenged, so that there was no competence for the Constitutional Court to abrogate the provisions in question in the law currently in force.

VfGH 3 October 2006, G 33/06a (no number in the Collection of Decisions yet)
The Constitutional Court turned down renewed applications of two Independent Administrative Tribunals in the Länder (UVS) for a constitutionality test of Sect. 2 § 2 and 3 of the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act, FLG I 100/2005, arguing the legislator has a margin of discretion when deciding on the competences of authorities as long as the "core" of "asylum matters" which lies with the competence of the Independent Federal Asylum Board, is not being touched.

The Constitutional Court turned down an appeal of an asylum seeker who sought damages for state liability for failing to transpose the Directive. Since the claimant relied on facts upon which a decision could have been given by an administrative or a judicial organ, the Constitutional Court declared itself incompetent to decide on the matter. Irrespective of the fact that the Federal Welfare Support Agreement does not grant a legal claim to asylum seekers, the claimant would have had to address the ordinary courts and sue either the Federation (for Labour Legislation) or the Land Tyrol (for Social Welfare Law).

VfGH 9 March 2005, Collection of Decisions No. 17495
The Constitutional Court ruled that the legal advisor, who is responsible to represent unaccompanied minor asylum seekers, remains responsible after an application has been turned down for inadmissibility until the minor is assigned to a care facility in the Laender and that he or she may file an appeal for the client. Only when the asylum seeker has been assigned to a care facility, the youth welfare office of the Land concerned will take over responsibility.

containing a lengthy discussion as to why the initial reception centre cannot be considered a care facility an applicant has been assigned to)

Supreme Court
OGH 19 October 2005, OGH 7 Ob 209/05v
The High Court ruled that in the present case an unaccompanied minor asylum seeker must be placed under the guardianship of the youth welfare office, even when his or her accommodation, food, clothing, schooling and medical care are covered by reception conditions according the Welfare Support Agreement. The decision on guardianship has to be taken with respect to the welfare of the child, irrespective of the fact that the minor is over 14 years old and may therefore take care of minor affairs himself. In the present case the applicant, who had lost both father and mother, claimed that he did not speak German well and needed someone to support and assist him and take care of his affairs by way of an overall responsibility such as provided for by the legal system.

Independent Administrative Tribunal for Upper Austria

UVS Oberösterreich 13 March 2006, VwSen-400775/7/SR/Ri
(see also already on 8 February 2006, VwSen-400764/3/SR/Ri)
The Independent Administrative Tribunal for Upper Austria ruled that an asylum seeker, whose application has been turned down in the first instance, may not be taken in detention, if upon an individual examination of the asylum seeker's situation there is no need to safeguard his or her return. Detention can be justified if there are reasons to presume that the asylum seeker would go into hiding. Since he was granted reception conditions and there are no reasons to assume that these would be withdrawn, and in view of the conduct of the asylum seeker in Austria, no individual security need could be established. The authority would have had to apply more lenient measures.
See also a similar case where UVS Vienna displayed a similar reasoning:
UVS Vienna, 5 July 2006, 01/10/5607/2006/9

UVS Oberösterreich 16 March 2006, VwSen-700002/6/WEI/An
The Tribunal repealed a decision on withdrawal of reception conditions because the first instance authority had not been able to demonstrate that the asylum seeker had committed an aggressive attack, due to its failure to carry out an investigation procedure and to adequately reason its decision. (see below at Q 21.E.)

Independent Administrative Tribunal for Burgenland
UVS Burgenland 6 September 2006, 166/10/06046
The Tribunal had to decide on a complaint against a detention order with which the aliens police authority (competent under the Aliens Police Act) ordered detention pending deportation upon an asylum seeker, who was in a Dublin procedure where consultations were lead with Poland. After the asylum authority received a negative answer from Poland, it started consultations with Slovakia. The Tribunal ruled that detention pending deportation could not be upheld, because the aliens police authority was obliged by the Aliens Police Act to make sure that detention would last as short as possible. Although the expulsion decision relevant for detention is taken by a different authority, the aliens police authority has to take measures against delays or in case of delays cannot uphold detention. In the present case, consultations could have been started earlier, which caused an unnecessary delay the aliens police authority would have had to consider.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

As explained above at Q.3., the system of reception conditions in Austria is marked by political discussions on whether the Federation or the Laender are responsible for granting reception conditions which led them to conclude the Basic Welfare Support Agreement, which partitions the duties between the parties. The Agreement obliges the parties to transpose its provisions into their own legislation, which all of them have done or envisaged.
Carrying out the procedure on granting asylum remains a federal competence and is done by the branch offices of the Federal Asylum Office which are situated in the Laender.

The Agreement stipulates that the Federation is responsible for asylum seekers during the admissibility procedure and therefore has to take care of all the duties relevant in this first stage (information, documentation etc). Currently, there are five federal care facilities, among which two initial reception centres (Erstaufnahmestellen – EAST[7], which are responsible for carrying out the admissibility procedures and are attached to relatively large accommodation centres), two smaller facilities[8] used for asylum seekers who are in a procedure in which the Dublin II-Regulation is applied. Moreover, there is an initial reception centre at Vienna International Airport (see below, at Q.11.). If an application has been declared inadmissible, the asylum seeker will remain in one of these centres until his or her departure from Austria. If an application is declared admissible, the asylum seeker shall be assigned to a care facility in one of the Laender. A coordination office (Koordinationsstelle) set up by the Federation in the initial reception centres is responsible to arrange this assignment and to organise the transport of asylum seekers to their new place of residence (Art. 3 § 2 of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement). According to Sect. 6 § 1 of the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act, the office shall seek the accordance of the responsible office in the Land.

The Laender are obliged to take over a certain quota of asylum seekers which is determined in relation to the percentage of their population. They are obliged to provide for the necessary "infrastructure" (accommodation and other material support of asylum seekers) which they can either organise themselves or outsource. If they do not take the due amount of persons into their care, the additional costs incurred by another entity will have to be compensated at the end of the settling period. The maximum costs for benefits are also laid down in the Agreement, which are used not only for settlement between the [7] EAST Ost in Traiskirchen, Lower Austria and EAST West in Thalham, Upper Austria.

[8] In Bad Kreuzen, Upper Austria and in Reichenau, Lower Austria.

Federation and the Laender, but also for compensation paid to accommodation providers and for the calculation of the amount of money paid to asylum seekers who are not accommodated in a care facility but live individually. The Laender also decide on dismissal of asylum seekers from care in accordance with the Federal Asylum Office and have further organisational duties supporting the Office in carrying-out the asylum procedure and facilitating the repartition system. They remain responsible for reception of asylum seekers until a final decision on the application has been issued. However, if the asylum procedure is not closed within 12 months from the date it has been recorded, the cost will have to be carried by the Federation again according to the amount fixed by the Agreement.

Several federal entities have issued a call for tender and consequently outsourced the management of care facilities or the provision of social counselling to private organisations. Often in these calls for tender the requirements to be met have been set, and organisations have been chose according to a rating of the services offered .In the federal care facilities, reception conditions are provided by the company European Homecare, which has won the contract to provide accommodation, food, social care and other benefits to asylum seekers in the federal care facilities.

According to the information that could be gathered, the current system of care in the Laender is the following:
In Burgenland, Carinthia, Lower Austria and Styria material reception conditions are organised basically, if not exclusively by the Government. NGOs have been commissioned with the provision of care activities, and also provide information (partly limited, eg. not really in Carinthia), legal and social counselling.
Salzburg (Caritas), Vorarlberg (Caritas), Upper Austria (Caritas and Volkshilfe) have concluded contracts with NGOs which organise the whole reception system (ie receipt of applications, communication of decisions, running of care facilities or payment and monitoring of private guesthouses providing reception conditions in kind, payments to asylum seekers, information, legal and social counselling). Formal decisions are being taken by the Governments.
Tyrol is the only Land where care is effected by the Government.

In Vienna the responsible organisation is the Fonds Soziales Wien (a fund financed by the Government which has taken over a series of tasks in the area of social affairs of the Land from the governmental department of social affairs), which has contracts with about 15 NGOs running different projects (social care, accommodation of unaccompanied minor refugees, women). The fund is responsible for distributing asylum seekers to the care facilities and has commissioned Caritas (Caritas Asylzentrum) with the running of a basic care and welfare service centre, where health insurance is organised and reception conditions provided in money are paid to asylum seekers. Also, the Fonds Soziales Wien has commissioned several NGOs with care provision to asylum seekers. Furthermore, a number of NGOs provide information, legal and social counselling. Since asylum seekers have no legal title to benefits under the Basic Welfare Support Act, the Fonds Soziales Wien does not decide by formal decisions under the Administrative Procedures Act.

Since Vienna currently fulfils its quota by about 150%, it has issued an instruction that only those asylum seekers can be granted reception conditions who have been resident in Vienna before 1st May 2004 (date of entry into force of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement). After the entry into force of the Basic Welfare Act, it turned out that there were a lot more asylum seekers living in Vienna in self-organised accommodation than had been expected. A great number of these people were as a consequence granted reception conditions (in money) by the Land. There is fear in Vienna, that if a general entitlement to all residents was granted, a lot of asylum seekers would come to Vienna on their own initiative.

The Ministry of the Interior has a contract with organisations which provide care to persons who are in detention pending deportation, including asylum seekers (Schubhaftbetreuung). These organisations are not supposed to provide legal counselling. One of them relies to almost 100% to funding of the Ministry of the Interior and the European Refugee Fund, its independence from the government may therefore be called into question.

Vienna which was the first Land to proceed to legal transposition, failed to introduce a legal entitlement to basic welfare support benefits into the Vienna Basic Welfare Support Act. This means that there are no administrative decisions on the granting or withdrawal of benefits and consequently no means to appeal against negative decisions before an administrative authority. However, following the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court but there is access to the civil courts in cases of withdrawal, where benefits may be claimed if the applicant meets the preconditions set by legislation.

Q.11. Q.11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II Regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

According to the Asylum Act 2005, the procedure is split into two stages, an admissibility procedure and the "ordinary" procedure on eligibility. There are special provisions for procedures carried out at airports and for applications filed by family members of a refugee or an asylum seeker (which do not have an effect on reception conditions). To be brief, the following description is as short as possible and therefore cannot take into account all details of the procedure.

During the admissibility procedure the Federation is responsible for granting reception conditions. An application for asylum is usually first made before a police organ, but has to be recorded at an initial reception centre (EAST) to start the procedure (Sect. 29). From that moment, the Federal Asylum Office has to declare an application inadmissible (Zurückweisung) within a period of 20 days[9] after the application has been recorded at the initial reception centre, otherwise it must declare the application admissible. An application for international protection can be declared inadmissible basically if an asylum seeker could have seek protection in a safe third country (Sect. 4 § 1 Asylum Act 2005)[10] or if another state is responsible to carry out the asylum procedure on the basis of a contract or the Dublin II Regulation (Sect. 5 § 1 Asylum Act 2005)[11]. It can also grant asylum or declare the application unfounded (Abweisung). If an appeal against a negative decision declaring the application unfounded is lodged which has or is granted suspensive effect, the application is considered admissible. For the period of 20 days after the application has been recorded, the asylum seeker's residence is tolerated (geduldet) on the territory of the district administrative authority where the asylum seeker receives welfare support, after that time he or she is tolerated on the whole Austrian territory if not admitted to the regular procedure (Sect. 12 – unless there is a right to residence on a different legal basis). Negative decisions in the asylum procedure are combined with an expulsion order[12]. An appeal against a negative decision on admissibility does not have suspensive effect, but the appeal against an expulsion order can be granted suspensive effect by the second instance – the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal – within a period of seven days. During this period the expulsion order must not be effected. Unless the asylum seeker is taken in detention, he or she remains in a federal care facility until the final decision on admissibility or the – voluntary or forced – departure from the country.

Dublin II procedure: An application can be rejected in the admissibility procedure if the asylum seeker may seek protection in a safe third country (Sect. 4 Asylum Act, which does not make a difference for reception conditions) or if another country is responsible to conduct the asylum procedure according to the Dublin II Regulation (or according to another treaty referring to such responsibility; Sect. 5). According to Sect. 39 § 3 no. 4 Aliens Police Act an asylum seeker may be arrested and according to Sect. 76 § 2 no. 4 he or she may be detained by the police authorities, if because of the result of the police interrogation, search or photographing and fingerprinting it can be assumed that the [9] Exceptions are possible in Dublin II consultation procedures and when an asylum seeker fails to contribute to the procedure or eludes from the procedure (Sect. 28 § 2 Asylum Act 2005).

[10] The application may not be turned down if a negative decision would violate Art. 8 ECHR, if the asylum seeker is a national of an EEA-country or if a very close relative (as laid down by the Act) has been accorded international protection in Austria.

[11] Unless there is a real risk that protection cannot be granted in such a country, for very specific reasons lying in the person of the asylum seeker.

[12] Exception: if the asylum seeker has the right to residence on a different legal basis or if the expulsion would constitute a breach of Art. 8 ECHR (Sect. 10 § 2 Asylum Act). If the effectuation of an expulsion order would constitute a breach of Art. 3 ECHR which is not permanent, the Federal Asylum Office has to declare that the deportation has to be suspended (Sect. 10 § 3).

application of the asylum seeker will be rejected for lack of responsibility of Austria for its examination.

If an asylum seeker is in detention, reception conditions are not granted (Sect. 2 § 3 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act). The rights of the asylum seeker during detention are laid down in the Detention Regulation (Anhalteordnung), which also allows for medical care and other guarantees. If they are not detained, asylum seekers who are in a procedure under the Dublin II Regulation (mainly families) are sometimes not accommodated in an initial reception centre, but moved to live in one of the federal care facilities outside an initial reception centre ("care centres", Sect. 1 no. 4 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act). NGOs complain that often when asylum seekers are released from detention for the purpose of application of more lenient measures, or when someone applies for asylum during detention pending deportation, they are not, or at least not immediately, taken into the reception conditions system. The same accounts for situations in which asylum seekers have been taken into detention and are later released when the Administrative Court holds that detention is illegitimate (see also below at Q.14).

If consultations pursuant to the Dublin II Regulation are initiated, the asylum seeker has to be informed within 20 days. The time limit of 20 days for declaration of inadmissibility of an application is not applicable in this case (Sect. 28 § 2 Asylum Act 2005).

Airport procedure: A special regime is provided for cases of asylum applications at Vienna International Airport, where an initial reception centre (to carry out the admissibility procedure) is installed, but no care facility. An asylum seeker who makes an application for asylum after having arrived at the airport or during a deportation via the airport has to be brought to the initial reception centre, unless the Federal Asylum Office allows his or her entry to the country if a rejection or a dismissal of the application is unlikely. As long as the entry is not permitted, the asylum seeker must remain within the border control area or the initial reception centre. Nevertheless, he or she is always allowed to leave the country (Sect. 31 et seq. Asylum Act 2005). The Federal Asylum Office has to inform UNHCR of the decision envisaged within one week after the asylum seeker has been brought before the Office. An application can only be dismissed (refusal of asylum) or rejected for protection in a safe third country if UNHCR agrees. Consultations under the Dublin II Regulation must be initiated within one week. The time limit for appeals is one week; the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal must take a decision within two weeks. The authorities do not issue an expulsion order (because the asylum seeker has not entered the country yet) but may proceed to the execution of the refusal of entry (Zurückweisung) after a final decision has been taken. Apparently, the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act is not deemed applicable to the transit zones of the airport and the care facility does not appear on the official statistic published on the website of the Ministry of the Interior. However, care is provided by an NGO (Caritas) in the special transit zone, and given the definition of a federal care facility in the Act as "any accommodation outside an initial reception centre, where welfare supply for the basic needs of asylum seekers is actually granted" (Sect. 1 no. 4 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act), the care facility should be considered a federal care facility under the Act.

The Caritas "airport social service" (Sozialdienst am Flughafen) offers accommodation for 35 persons and is co-financed by the Federal Government, the Government of Lower Austria (where Schwechat is actually situated) and Caritas. Asylum seekers are not allowed to leave the special transit zone, unless for the purpose of departure from Austrian territory or in case of authorisation (eg. for medical purpose). Under Austrian usage, the asylum seeker's obligation to stay at the airport is not considered detention, but a means to "secure the refusal of entry to the territory" (Sicherung der Zurückweisung). However, the Constitutional Court has in cases under the old legislation accepted that depending on the circumstances confinement could amount to detention.[13] The maximum period of confinement of an asylum seeker to the special transit zone is six weeks (Sect. 32 § 4 Asylum Act 2005).

After an application has been declared admissible, the asylum seeker may remain in the federal care facility for a maximum period of 14 days until he or she can be assigned to a care facility of a Land (Sect. 6 § 2 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act). From the decision on the admissibility onwards, the asylum seeker has a right to residence in the Austrian territory. From the moment of assignment to a local care facility, the Laender are responsible for granting reception conditions. Apart from different organisational duties of the Federation and the Laender under the Basic Welfare Support Agreement, the benefits which are to be granted to asylum seekers according to the Agreement by the Federation and the Laender are the same, as listed in Art. 6 of the Agreement and special benefits for unaccompanied minor refugees in Art. 7. However, since there are in the end ten different regimes of reception, and since the actual guarantees have to be provided for by law, conditions actually granted can vary in legislation and in practice.
The Laender remain responsible until a final decision on the application is issued or the asylum seeker has left the country.

Until an agreement between the coordination office and the Land can be reached, the asylum seeker may remain in federal care for a maximum period of 14 days. According to the information gathered by NGOs, there are cases where Laender refuse to take over asylum seekers assigned to them by the coordination office, or where no assignment decision is issued, in such cases the asylum seeker will often remain in the federal care facility (initial reception centre) for some time without legal basis and is then dismissed without formal decision, hence without the possibility to file an appeal, since the federation is no longer competent under the federal care system. The Laender do not accept or refuse to take over asylum seekers from the coordination office by formal decision, so that there is no legal remedy against a negative decision in that stage of the system either. (See Q 15 for details).

Q.11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

A differentiation will be made between conditions during the admissibility procedure ruled by the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act and conditions guaranteed in the later stage under the Laender Acts, as far as information could be gathered. A reference to the Dublin II procedure or the procedure at the airport will only be made if relevant under the particular question.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q.12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

A combination of these elements is possible, depending upon the individual system in the care facility: there is organised accommodation, where food is also provided, organised accommodation where food is not provided but foodstuffs are given in kind or a certain amount for food is paid in money or in vouchers, and individual, eg. self-organised accommodation, where benefits are provided in money. In the federal care facilities and the majority of the other facilities, reception conditions like housing and food are provided in kind and a pocket money of 40,- Euro per month as well as a sum of 150,- Euro per year for clothing is paid to the asylum seekers. Apparently European Homecare also has a repertory of clothes given to asylum seekers when they arrive at an initial reception centre if needed, especially in winter. If an asylum seeker is accommodated individually, reception conditions are provided in money.
Other benefits are provided in a combination of these elements, depending on the system provided for by the Government or NGO responsible. In Salzburg schooling material has to be bought by asylum seekers themselves and is later refunded upon presentation of the receipt, a certain amount for clothing is given in vouchers. In Vorarlberg pocket money is paid to a bank account which is opened for each asylum seeker upon arrival.

The benefits to be granted are listed in the Basic Welfare Support Agreement and have been taken over by legislation of the federal entities either by reference to Art. 6 and 7 of the Agreement[14] or by listing them anew[15]; (note: Art. 7 refers to minor refugees, see below Q.31.)

[14] Sect. 2 § 1 and Sect. 1 no. 3 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act; Sect. 1 § 1 Upper Austria Basic Welfare Support Act; Sect. 7a § 1 Vorarlberg Social Welfare Act.
[15] Sect. 4 Burgenland Care Act; Sect. 3 Carinthia Basic Welfare Support Act; Sect. 5 Lower Austria Basic Welfare Support Act, Sect. 6 § 1 Salzburg Basic Welfare Support Act; Sect. 4 Styria Care Provision Act; Sect. 5 Tyrol Basic Welfare Support Act; Sect. 3 § 1 Vienna Basic Welfare Support Act.

Benefits according to Art. 6 include:

- accommodation, ensuring the respect of human dignity and family unity[16]
- food
- a monthly pocket money (of € 40,-) which is not paid to asylum seekers in individual accommodation
- if necessary a medical screening at reception of an asylum seeker
- health insurance under the Austrian insurance system (by payment of the insurance premium)
- other necessary benefits not covered by health insurance upon individual decision
- measures for persons in need of special care
- information, counselling and social care effected by qualified staff with a view to their guidance in Austria and to voluntary return
- costs of transport in case of change of accommodation and of citation to a public authority
- costs of travel to school and costs of schooling material
- measures to ensure a structured daily routine where necessary (aimed at minors)
- provision of clothing
- costs of funeral
- counselling, travel costs and a nonrecurring financial aid in special cases of voluntary return

Art. 9 of the Agreement sets the maximum cost for the benefits mentioned, which are used for the calculation of refund between the federal entities, but also applied to asylum seekers when they receive reception conditions in money[17]:
The amounts paid in case of individual accommodation are the following (in Euro):

- for food for adults and unaccompanied minors	180,-
for other minors	80,-
- for accommodation of a single person	110,-
for families (minimum two persons)	220,-
- schooling material per child per year	200,-
- for clothing per person per year	150,-

- for transport to school (up to a maximum amount fixed by law) - the actual costs

Higher amounts may be paid in Burgenland (Sect. 9, in individual cases), Tyrol (Sect. 9, to avoid undue hardship – up to the maximum amount of social aid granted to nationals) and Styria (Sect. 11, in well-founded cases, eg. to avoid undue hardship, or if it serves the integration of the asylum seeker – up to the maximum amount of social aid granted to nationals).

[16] Nearly all federal entities provide that accommodation must be "suitable": Federation Sect. 1 no. 3, Burgenland Sect. 4 § 1 no. 1, Carinthia Sect. 3 § 1 lit. a, Lower Austria Sect. 5 § 1 no. 1, Styria Sect. 4 § 1 no. 1, Tyrol Sect. 5 § 1 lit. a, Upper Austria Sect. 3 § 1, Vienna Sect. 3 § 1 no. 1, Vorarlberg Sect. 7a § 1.
[17] Sect. 9 Burgenland, Sect. 6 § 1 Carinthia, Sect. 7 § 1 Lower Austria, Sect. 10 Styria, in Salzburg the Government may set maximum costs by regulation (Sect. 6 § 4); Sect. 5 Tyrol. Other Laender do not fix the sums in their legislation, but apply the Agreement in practice.

Carinthia additionally grants an amount of 10,- Euro for the purpose of leisure activities of persons living in organised accommodation (Sect. 6 § 1 lit. l) and 3,63 Euro per person per tuition unity for German courses for unaccompanied minor aliens which cover a maximum of 200 tuition unities (Sect. 6 § 1 lit. m).

All Laender provide in their Hospitals Acts that unlike other aliens asylum seekers cannot be asked to pay the actual cost of hospitalisation[18], but only the contributions determined under health insurance (which are covered by welfare support, see above).

In most of the Laender, granting of social welfare benefits is among other requirements subject to the fact that the asylum seeker has a right to residence on the Austrian territory. Since asylum seekers are only tolerated during the admissibility procedure, no access to social welfare is granted in this stage of the procedure. After the application has been declared admissible or has become admissible by law, in most of the Laender social aid can only be granted if there is no possibility to ask for support on a different legal basis (eg. Salzburg, Sect. 6 § 5 Social Welfare Act; Lower Austria, Sect. 4 § 5) or if no benefits are being granted on a different basis (eg. Burgenland, Sect. 2 § 1; Upper Austria, Sect. 6 § 3). In Tyrol (Sect. 4 § 3 Basic Social Welfare Act[19]), Upper Austria (Sect. 7 § 1 Basic Welfare Support Act), in Styria (Sect. 4 § 1a Social Welfare Act) and in Vienna (Sect. 7a § 4 Social Welfare Act), it is explicitly excluded for persons receiving benefits from basic welfare support. In Carinthia (Sect. 4 § 2 Social Welfare Act) granting of social aid is possible to avoid undue hardship, in Vorarlberg, basic welfare support benefits are seen as a part of social welfare and regulated in the Social Welfare Act. In all Laender where access to benefits of social welfare is not excluded, asylum seekers do not have an entitlement to benefits of social aid, these can be granted[20], leaving a margin of appreciation to the officials in charge and causing considerable discrepancies in the practice of the Laender offices. While for example in Vorarlberg asylum seekers are granted social aid when they are dismissed from a care facility, in order to protect them from homelessness[21], asylum seekers are generally not granted social aid in most the other Laender.

Beneficiaries of social aid may be asked to repay the sums obtained if they have an income or acquire means another way later. In some of the Laender, this does not account for benefits granted under the welfare system. The exceptions are Vorarlberg, where the welfare system for asylum seekers has been incorporated in the Social Welfare Act and therefore falls within the same rules (benefits granted can be reclaimed up to a period of 10 years from the date when they were granted; Sect. 9 and 11 Social Welfare Act). Lower Austria provides for a time limit of three years to reclaim benefits (Sect. 14 § 1). Burgenland (Sect. 5 § 6) and Tyrol (Sect. 10 § 1) only state that asylum seekers may be asked to repay benefits granted when they acquire financial means (with the exception in Tyrol of benefits granted to minors).

[20] In most Laender a formal decision under the Administrative Procedures Act is being issued (including the right to a reasoned decision and legal remedies), in others no such formal decision is issued to asylum seekers (Sect. 4 § 5 Lower Austria Social Welfare Act, Sect. 6 § 3 Upper Austria Social Welfare Act). However, the granting of benefits is in any case still subject to fundamental rights, especially to the equality principle, under the Austrian Constitution.

Q.12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

A person in self-organised accommodation may just about live on the amount paid[22], but in comparison with the minimum amount of social aid for nationals it is significantly lower – it is about 50% of average social aid or even less. This fact has also been criticised by the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in its observations of 25 January 2006 E/C.12/AUT/CO/3[23].

The Ministry of the Interior argues that differences in the character of benefits under social welfare and basic welfare support respectively are the reason for different amounts paid: While social aid is meant to support persons lacking sufficient means of subsistence who will be asked to repay benefits granted once he or she acquires means, the concept of basic welfare support is that it cannot be reclaimed when an asylum seeker acquires money later.

The amount of social aid varies in the Laender, regularly a certain amount for means of subsistence (Lebensunterhalt) and accommodation are being set by regulation. In some Laender two additional monthly rates are being paid. The actual figures for a single person are the following (for means of subsistence plus an additional allowance for accommodation, rates for 2007):

Burgenland	€ 433,-
Carinthia	€ 435,- plus € 149,-
Lower Austria	€ 501,30 plus € 92,30
Salzburg	€ 421,- plus € 408,- (basis: 40 m^2 for a single person)
Styria	€ 507,- plus the actual rent if it is adequate

[22] It was considered insufficient or hardly sufficient by representatives of different NGOs, and sufficient by the Ministry of the Interior.

[23] http://www.unhchr.ch/tbs/doc.nsf/(Symbol)/4a217b5c9439b901c125711500571f80?Opendocument, p 3, at D.15.

Tyrol	€ 431,20 plus actual rent for max 40 m^2 for a single person
Upper Austria	€ 542,30 plus € 101,10 for accommodation or more if it is adequate
Vienna	€ 427,- plus € 256,-
Vorarlberg	€ 480,40 plus the actual rent if it is adequate

As for asylum seekers who live in organised accommodation where accommodation and food are being provided in kind, there has been criticism that food was sometimes insufficient and not good.[24] However, the underlying survey was based on a small and not representative sample. Other than that, there is no information on complaints about insufficient conditions of care. Reception conditions granted in kind can be considered sufficient to ensure a standard of living adequate for (physical) health, even if maybe not for personal well-being. The amounts paid to care providers by the Federation have been criticised by NGOs in the context of the call for tender for care provision at the federal care centres, stating that the low prices tendered by European Homecare must be at the expense of quality, especially in the area of social care, and especially concerning special care measures for specially vulnerable persons, which are two areas involving higher personnel expenditure.[25] NGOs also stress that care facilities run by them are generally co-financed by other resources, since the financial contribution as laid down in the Basic Welfare Support Agreement is not sufficient to guarantee an adequate standard of living.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. Q.13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

The Austrian Asylum Act 2005 provides only for one application for international protection in its Sect. 2 § 1 no. 13. It is defined as any "a request howsoever made by an alien in Austria to be accorded the protection of Austria"[26]. This application is presumed to be aimed at being granted asylum status (Sect. 3 Asylum Act 2005), or, if this status is denied, the application is presumed to be aimed at being granted subsidiary protection (Sect. 8 Asylum Act 2005).

Q.13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

Yes, the scope is extended, see A above. Since there is only one application for international protection, in the course of the procedure, it has to be decided first on granting asylum status, and if this is denied it has to be decided on granting subsidiary protection. Other forms of protection cannot be claimed separately in Austria. In any procedure, the question whether or not the deportation of an asylum seeker is permissible must also be answered.

The scope of application of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement is furthermore extended to other "aliens in need of help and protection". The groups of aliens that are entitled to welfare support are listed it Art. 2 § 1 of the Agreement and contain among others aliens who have been granted humanitarian status, who can for legal or factual reasons not be deported, or aliens who have been granted asylum, for a certain period of time.
These groups are entitled to the same conditions.

Q.13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

No. An asylum request can only be submitted to an embassy by a family member of a person who has been granted asylum or subsidiary protection in Austria (Sect. 35 Asylum Act 2005). As applicants are not accommodated in diplomatic representations, the law does not provide for reception conditions in such cases. According to Sect. 1 § 1 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act reception conditions are only granted to asylum seekers whose applications have been "recorded" (see below at Q.14.). According to Sect. 35 § 4 Asylum Act 2005 an application is only recorded once the asylum seeker submits it at an initial reception centre inside the country.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

The Austrian Asylum Act 2005 differs between applications which are "made" (gestellt; basically at the border before a security organ) and applications which are "recorded"[27] at an initial reception centre (eingebracht). When an asylum seeker asks for protection before a police organ, the police organ has to arrest him or her and take him or her to the initial reception centre (after having made a first interrogation and search of the asylum seeker). In exceptional cases where an asylum seeker has a right to residence inside the territory, he or she will be asked to go to the initial reception centre to have an application recorded there. Reception conditions only start when the asylum seeker appears before the initial reception centre, because this is the moment when he or she starts to be an "asylum seeker inside the admissibility procedure" granted reception conditions according to Sect. 2 § 1 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act. Sect. 1 no. 1 defines the "asylum seeker in the admissibility procedure" as "an asylum seeker whose application for asylum has been recorded…".

At this stage of the procedure, the asylum seeker does not have to be in need of help and protection. According to the legislation of the Laender, this is a requirement at a later stage (see relevant questions below).

NGOs claim that there is a practical problem in the case of persons who apply for asylum while already in detention pending deportation, or asylum seekers who are in a Dublin procedure and therefore in detention (see Q.33. on detention) and are then released for the sake of more lenient measures or because the Administrative Court has declared the underlying detention order illegitimate. It can be noted that these people are often not – or at least not immediately- taken up in the reception system. The reason for this may be a lack of communication between the police authorities who are responsible to order release and the authorites responsible for granting reception conditions who are not informed of such a release nor make an effort to keep track of asylum seekers in detention. The same accounts for persons whose application is considered admissible during detention and who are then to be transferred to one of the Laender. They are released from detention but are not granted reception conditions until they are assigned to one of the Laender and the respective Land has given its consent. Lower Austria explicitly demands an assignment decision for admission of an asylum seeker in basic welfare support legislation[28], other Laender require it in practise.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

As stated at Q.10. reception conditions granted by the Federation end when the Federation is no longer competent under the Basic Welfare Support Agreement. According to Sect. 2 § 1 the Federation grants reception conditions to asylum seekers, as long as there is no decision on the admissibility of the application and as long as the proceedings are not discontinued (Sect. 1 no. 1 of the Federal Act). Proceedings may be discontinued under Sect. 24 Asylum Act 2005, when an asylum seeker absconds from the procedure (ie when his or her place of stay is not known and cannot be established by the authority or when he or she leaves the country) and the relevant facts of the case cannot be established. Moreover, conditions are granted to asylum seekers if their application has been declared inadmissible or unfounded until their departure from the territory. – In cases where applications are declared unfounded in the admissibility procedure, an appeal having or being granted suspensive effect will render the application admissible by law. At this moment, the competence of the Federation ends (see above Q.10.).

Generally reception conditions end when a final decision on the application for asylum is taken. During the appeals procedure before the second instance, the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal[29], reception conditions are continuously granted, irrespective whether the appeal has suspensive effect or not. A decision is final, when there are no more ordinary legal remedies at disposal. The Senate's decision is usually final.

When an asylum seeker whose application has been turned down, brings a complaint before a High Court[30] (an irregular remedy), practice is differing in the Laender. Apparently in some Laender, asylum seekers continue to benefit from reception conditions when the High Court has accorded the complaint suspensive effect.[31] In other Laender reception conditions end with the final decision of the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal. The Basic Welfare Support Act of Lower Austria explicitly states in Sect. 4 § 2 no. 3 that in case suspensive effect is granted to a High Court complaint, the asylum seeker will recover the right to reception conditions.

There is one important gap after the end of the admissibility procedure in the practical implementation of the burden sharing system of the Federation and the Laender, which needs to be pointed out at this place:
After an application has been declared admissible, the Federation is no longer competent to grant reception conditions, therefore there is no appeal against a dismissal from a federal care facility. The Laender are obliged to take over asylum seekers assigned to them, but there is no legal remedy accorded to the asylum seeker, because this obligation for the Laender arises only from the Basic Welfare Support Agreement.[32] If a place cannot be found for the asylum seeker in one of the Laender, and a decision on assignment is not taken, he or she may remain in the federal care facility for two weeks (Sect. 6 § 2 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act). NGOs state that it happens regularly that asylum seekers are dismissed from federal care after these two weeks without perspective to accommodation and other conditions, because the Laender refuse to take asylum seekers into their care which have not been assigned to them. Asylum seekers who are being released from detention pending deportation because their application was declared admissible in Dublin procedures find themselves in the same situation (see above at Q.14.). As for possible legal remedies in these cases see below Q.22.A.

[29] However, when an appeal does not have suspensive effect and during the time frame until suspensive effect is granted by the Tribunal, the asylum seeker may be detained.
[30] A complaint can be made before the High Administrative Court by an asylum seeker claiming a breach of law by the asylum decision, and before the Constitutional Court, if the asylum seeker claims a violation of his or her constitutional rights or the application of an unconstitutional legal norm.
[31] Information given by the UNHCR Office in Austria.
[32] The only remedy against a breach of an agreement under Art. 15a of the Constitution is a complaint which can be brought before the Constitutional Court according to Art. 138a of the Constitution by the Federal Government or one of the Laender Governments. The Constitutional Court is competent to decide whether a breach of the Agreement has occurred.

Most of the Laender Acts stipulate that reception conditions also end when the asylum seeker leaves the territory of the Land.
Moreover, reception conditions end when they are withdrawn (see below Q.21.).
Reception conditions are suspended during the time an asylum seeker is in detention (see below Q.33.).

On the contrary, some Laender are also granting benefits after a final decision has been taken in that they are applying the provisions on reception conditions to persons who have been granted subsidiary status or who are in the territory on the basis of a regulation enacted in a case of mass influx of aliens, people having a right to residence for humanitarian reasons and persons who cannot be deported (Burgenland, Carinthia, Lower Austria, Salzburg, Styria, Tyrol) as well as persons who have been granted asylum for a period of four months from the decision granting asylum (Carinthia, Burgenland, Salzburg) or even for 12 months from the positive decision (Styria); and finally to aliens who are or were victims of trafficking in human beings, even when they have entered Austrian territory illegally (Burgenland). It can be noted that the fact that persons having been granted asylum stay in the reception conditions system after a positive decision deprives them from access to social security benefits equal to nationals and is seen as an obstacle to early integration, especially in the case of Styria, where the period of time where refugees stay in reception centres is particularly long.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Yes. Asylum seekers who have lodged a successive asylum application within six months after the first application has been decided finally, may be excluded from reception conditions according to Sect. 3 § 1 no. 3 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act. The same provision has been included in the respective Acts in Burgenland (Sect. 5 § 3 no. 4), Salzburg (Sect. 9 § 1 no. 5), Styria (Sect. 5 § 1 no. 2), Tyrol (Sect. 6 § 1 lit. b), Upper Austria (Sect. 3 § 2 no. 4) and finally Lower Austria, where reception conditions can also be denied if an application has been made later than six months from the final decision, if it can be assumed that the aim of the application was to prevent deportation or to acquire financial benefits from the Land or other advantages (Sect. 8 § 1 no. 2 and 3).

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q.17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Federation: The Federal Basic Welfare Support Act does not contain any obligation to provide information on rights and benefits of asylum seekers under the Act. Sect. 29 § 1 Asylum Act 2005 states that immediately after lodging an application the asylum seeker must receive general information (Orientierungsinformation). There are information sheets informing about rights and duties of asylum seekers (provided for by Sect. 17 § 9 Asylum Act 2005), which are also relevant to the withdrawal of reception conditions. The paper informs in particular about the duty of the asylum seeker to be at the authorities' disposal to carry out the procedure and about the legal consequences of a violation.[33] The information sheet provides little information on material reception conditions, and particularly no information on benefits asylum seekers are entitled to.

In the Laender, legislation provides that asylum seekers must be informed about their duty to give all the necessary information to determine whether they are in need of help, and about the legal consequences of providing false information in Burgenland (Sect. 5 § 2), Carinthia (Sect. 3 § 7) and Styria (Sect. 5 § 6). In Lower Austria Sect. 5 § 2 provides that asylum seekers must be informed about their rights and duties under the Basic Welfare Support Act within 15 days, in writing and possibly in a language the asylum seeker can understand, or, if appropriate, orally. According to Sect. 3 of the Salzburg Basic Welfare Support Act persons covered by the act must be informed about their rights and obligations "when they are taken over into care". Information has to be given possibly in writing and in a language the asylum seeker can understand. Vorarlberg the authorities are obliged by Sect. 35 § 2 and 4 to inform asylum seekers on rights and duties, legal consequences of failure to furnish information to determine if the asylum seeker is in need of help, as well as information on the place of residence, health care, organisations which can provide legal counselling or other forms of care, possibly in writing and in a language the asylum seeker can understand.

In fact, the provision of information is depending on the organisation: As far as information could be gathered[34], usually social counsellors (of the Government or of NGOs) are available at accommodation centres, and they visit private care facilities regularly. Newly arrived beneficiaries are informed about their rights and duties, available health care (eg. a list of doctors in the region, possibilities of special care if available, leisure activities etc). Legal orientation should also be provided by counsellors, but may not always be guaranteed[35]. NGOs in the Laender claim that the information provided to asylum seekers in the initial reception centres is rather insufficient and when they arrive in the Laender, they are usually poorly informed. The Basic Welfare Support Agreement provides that costs for information, counselling and social care (not including costs for interpreting services) are being paid for one social counsellor per 170 asylum seekers (Art. 9 no. 9). The Federation and the Laender have transferred this provision into their legislation.

Q.17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

At the beginning of the asylum procedure, the information sheet is handed out to asylum seekers. There is additional information furnished in the federal reception centres by means of placards and there is an information desk in the initial reception centres.

[33] Information given by Ministry of the Interior.
[34] Information given by NGOs.
[35] Legal orientation should also be provided by counsellors, but may not always be guaranteed due to time and language constraints.

In the Laender there is often no written information on rights and duties in general, most of the information needed is given orally by the social counsellors.

Q 17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

Federation: According to Sect. 17 § 9 Asylum Act 2005 the information sheet must be held available in the languages the asylum seekers may reasonably be supposed to understand. There are translations in 34 languages; additional translations can be made when necessary.[36]

In the Laender, often information sheets only contain addresses of doctors, legal advisors, special care facilities, therefore a translation is not considered necessary. If there are translations, they are usually in the most common languages (eg. French, English, and Russian).[37] The social counsellors working for NGOs provide most of the common languages of the asylum seekers.[38]

Q.17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

The information sheet is handed over to an asylum seeker immediately when his or her application is being recorded at the initial reception centre.[39]
As a rule the deadline is respected also when oral information is given by social or government counsellors. However, it seems that asylum seekers must show an interest in gathering information and ask for counselling; otherwise they might not get information.[40]

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q.18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

The information sheet handed out in the initial reception centres states that independent legal and refugee advisors (see below at Q.22) are available (it also says that a list is attached[41]) and the information is given that private advisors may also be employed, but no names or addresses are given. Asylum seekers are also informed that they may turn to NGOs, and several names are given, but this list is not comprehensive. Moreover the information sheet on the asylum procedure informs that they may turn to UNHCR, providing the address. A list of doctors or medical care facilities is not given, but medical assistance is provided in the reception centres.

In the Laender there are not always lists of NGOs, especially where only one NGO is responsible (eg. Voralberg, Salzburg). As a rule there is a list available in the housing facilities for asylum seekers mentioning the responsible counselling centre for them. At the counselling centre all the other information (e.g. about health care) is available. But this also depends on the particular system in the federal state.[42] Asylum seekers in detention are not always informed about all organisations promoting their interests. This accounts particularly for Laender where the authority has entered into a contract with one organisation to provide social and/or legal counselling. In such cases, it happens that representatives of other organisations do not have access to places of detention, unless they can argue they want to see a specific person of who they know he or she is in detention (which is hardly possible lacking information on the names of these persons), or unless an asylum seeker asks for a specific contact. Here, it is often not possible to establish contacts between detainees and NGOs.

Q.18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

In federal care facilities there is an information desk and information material at disposal.
In the Laender this depends on the counselling centre. Sometimes written information is given by information sheets, lists of addresses (eg. of legal counsellors or of doctors), or on notice boards in care facilities.

Q.18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

Since written information consists mainly of lists of addresses, these lists are usually in German.
If information is provided by NGOs when they are in charge of legal and social counselling, they usually have trained staff skilled in the necessary languages.

Q.18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

There are about 15 different NGOs and other organisations active in that field (most of them only in one or a few federal states). There is no umbrella organisation.[43] Among the most important ones are Caritas, Diakonie, Volkshilfe, SOS Menschenrechte; specialised organisations or projects for traumatised persons, eg. Omega, Zebra; Netzwerk Asylanwalt (a legal counselling project of UNHCR, Caritas, Red Cross and other partners), Asylkoordination (a cooperation of a large number of NGOs in the field), and plenty of others, sometimes very small ones. Networks of these NGOs often promote the provision of care for vulnerable persons (eg. separated children and traumatised persons).

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

When an asylum seeker's application has been recorded at an initial reception centre, a Procedure Card is issued (Sect. 50 Asylum Act 2005, Verfahrenskarte), which is a title to stay in the initial reception centre and to enjoy reception conditions.

Following a positive admissibility decision asylum seekers are issued a Residence Entitlement Card (Sect. 51 Asylum Act 2005: Aufenthaltsberechtigungskarte) which is a proof of identity and a proof that the asylum seeker is legally residing in the territory.

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

There is no exception for airport procedures, but in practice, in airport procedures[44] and when an asylum seeker is in detention, a Procedure Card is usually not delivered – this accounts mainly for procedures where the Dublin II Regulation is applied.

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

On the first document delivered to the asylum seeker (Verfahrenskarte), the date of invalidation is inserted by the authority. There are no rules on the period of validity, but the state of the procedure will also be shown on the document, so that this might be relevant for the period of validity. When an application is admissible, the identity document (Aufenthaltsberechtigungskarte, Sect. 51 Asylum Act 2005) must be issued, which is valid until the asylum seeker is obliged to leave the country because an enforceable decision has been taken or the procedure is discontinued (eg. because the asylum seeker absconded from the care facility). Then he or she must return it to the competent police authority (Sect. 51 § 2 Asylum Act 2005)

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[45]?

[44] ICF II Report, p 12.

The deadline for delivery of the Verfahrenskarte is three days (Sect. 17 § 6 Asylum Act 2005). However, the deadline only starts when an application for asylum has been recorded at an initial reception centre (for the procedure see above paragraph 2 of Q.11.). NGOs confirm that this deadline is generally respected, with the exception of cases when asylum seekers are in detention.

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

There is no such possibility.

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

There is an electronic database called "Care Information System" (Betreuungs-informationssystem – BIS), which contains information about the name, date of birth, distinguishing marks, country of origin, data of his or her documents, profession, religion, ethnic group and state of health (Sect. 8 § 1 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act). It is run by the Ministry of the Interior, and is separate from the registration system for aliens, but authorities may use data from the aliens registration system.
There is also a "Central Procedure Database" which comprises information on applications, decisions and legal remedies of asylum seekers and authorises asylum authorities to share information acquired by them on this database (Sect. 56 Asylum Act 2005).
Moreover, there is an electronic database called "Asylum Seekers Information System" (Asylwerberinformationssystem, AIS), which is a part of a larger information system of the Ministry of the Interior ("electronic criminal police information system", elektronisches kriminalpolizeiliches Informationssystem) which comprises also the aliens information system and Schengen information system (EKIS/FIS/SIS). AIS contains information eg. on procedural stages, registered place of residence, police measures (arrest, detention) etc.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers[46]:

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

[45] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[46] Nota bene: the case of detention is covered by other questions and should be ignored under this question.

Until the decision on admissibility, but for 20 days at the longest, the asylum seeker's residence is only tolerated within the administrative district he or she is living in. His or her stay is tolerated on the whole territory if this is necessary to fulfil legal duties, if he or her has been summoned by a court or an administrative authority or if it is necessary for medical care or treatment (Sect. 12 § 2 Asylum Act 2005).
At a later stage, the asylum seeker's freedom to move can be limited to a certain area, which must be at least the area of an administrative district, if the right to residence is withdrawn ("prohibition of return", Rückkehrverbot, Sect. 62 Aliens Police Act), because the asylum seeker represents a risk to public order and security or other reasons cited under Art. 8 § 2 ECHR. In this case he or she may not be deported.
Restriction to a district may also be a more lenient measure when detention would be legitimate.
According to NGOs there are no reports that this measure would often be invoked in practice.

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

There is no choice for needy asylum seekers to choose their place of residence, but they are assigned to a certain place by the authorities. In the admissibility procedure, they have to stay in a federal care facility, and after that decisions on the distribution of asylum seekers to the Laender are taken by the coordination office of the Federal Asylum Office with the consent of the Laender according to their quota and depending on availability.
The procedure to be applied by the coordination office is not laid down by law, and no more information on a possible different legal basis or on the practical functioning of the office could be gathered. Of course, the coordination office is also bound by the Austrian constitution and therefore has to take decisions individually and objectively (under the constitutional equality principle). When assigning asylum seekers to a specific place of residence it also has to find an agreement with the Land concerned which also has an interest that asylum seekers fit within the social structure already existing.

Generally the Laender grant benefits only to asylum seekers whose place of residence is in the territory of the Land[47]. If an asylum seeker moves to a certain Land individually, he or she is theoretically entitled to reception conditions under most of the respective Laender Acts. Lower Austria (Sect. 3 § 2 no. 2 and 3), Salzburg (Sect. 5 § 1 no. 2 and 3) and Upper Austria (Sect. 3 § 2 no. 1 and 2) declare this to be a reason for exclusion from benefits. Carinthia requires that an asylum seeker has been assigned to the Land by the coordination office, but provides for an individual decision to take also other asylum seekers into care (Sect. 1 § 2 Carinthia Basic Welfare Support Act,). In other Laender, [47] Sect. 3 § 2 Burgenland, Sect. 3 § 1 no. 1 Lower Austria, Sect. 2 § 1 Carinthia, Sect. 3 § 3 Styria, Sect. 4 lit. c and Sect. 2 § 3 Tyrol, Sect. 1 § 1 Upper Austria, Sect. 2 § 1 Vienna and Sect. 7a § 1 Vorarlberg.

however, the asylum seeker may also be excluded from reception conditions in this case being regarded as not needy since he or she could get support from other resources.[48] Only Vienna does not grant an entitlement to reception conditions and has issued a regulation that no asylum seekers will be taken into care who have not been residing in Vienna before 1st May 2004 (see above Q.10.).

In the legislation of some of the Laender, the right to a specific form of accommodation is explicitly excluded (Lower Austria Sect. 7 § 2; Salzburg, Sect. 2 § 3, Upper Austria Sect. 1 § 2, Burgenland concerning the right to a specific place of residence Sect. 5 § 4).

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

There is hardly any choice for needy asylum seekers[49]. Upon making an application, asylum seekers are arrested and are taken to one of the initial reception centres by the authorities. Asylum seekers who are residing on Austrian territory legally might choose one of them to have their applications recorded, but this is a fairly infrequent case.
Under Art. 3 § 2 Basic Welfare Support Agreement the Federation is obliged to install a coordination office whose task it is to distribute asylum seekers to the Laender. After an application has been declared admissible, the coordination office will assign the asylum seeker to a certain place of reception in one of the Laender with the consent of the Land in question. There is no formal decision and therefore no right to file a remedy against this decision. However, the authority is of course bound by constitutional requirements to decide individually and objectively.

Rules for the distribution are laid down in the Federal Welfare Support Act and the respective Laender Acts:
Under the Federal Welfare Support Act (Sect. 2 § 2), the decision on the place of residence of the asylum seeker has to take into account family relations, the special needs of single women and minors, and ethnic particularities.
The Basic Welfare Support Agreement obliges the federal entities to take into account family unity when providing accommodation to asylum seekers (Art. 6 § 1 no. 1) and to grant special conditions to unaccompanied minor refugees (Art. 7 § 1 and 2). These provisions have been taken over by the Laender Acts (see above Q.12.).

[48] Information given by the UNHCR Office in Austria.
[49] Persons who address themselves to an Initial Reception Centre will usually be accepted there.

An asylum seeker may apply for the right to move to another care facility, then the government has to give its consent – if the asylum seeker wants to move to another Land, the government there must give its consent, too. If an asylum seeker leaves the assigned place of reception, reception conditions may usually be withdrawn because the asylum seeker is not considered to be in need of help anymore.
The asylum seeker may also apply for permission to move from an accommodation centre to individual accommodation, though there is no such procedure foreseen by the Laender Acts, and some Acts stipulate explicitly that there is no right to a specific form of reception conditions (Sect. 7 § 1 Lower Austria and Sect. 1 § 2 Upper Austria). Such permission is seldom given. Apparently some Laender only accept such a change in accommodation after a certain waiting period which is not laid down by law.[50]

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)[51]

Before the entry into force of the new legislation, the Austrian Red Cross and several NGOs created emergency facilities (Notquartiere), asylum seekers who were denied access to other care facilities because of capacity limits could turn there. Under the new legislation the Federation is obliged to provide for the initial reception of asylum seekers and may outsource this task (Art. 3 § 1 and 5 Basic Welfare Support Agreement). The Federation is also responsible for creating contingency capacities with a view to meeting accommodation shortages in the Laender (Art. 3 § 4). At the moment the number of places seems enough. There are no rules on a formal procedure for the distribution of places yet.

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

An asylum seeker who is restricted to the area of the administrative district during the first 20 days of the admissibility procedure does not need a permission to leave the assigned area, if this is necessary to fulfil legal duties, when he or she is summoned to a judicial or administrative authority or when it is necessary for the provision of medical care and treatment (Sect. 12 § 2 Asylum Act 2005). There is no provision allowing other exceptions. If the asylum seeker leaves the assigned area, he or she is no longer tolerated on the territory and may thus be arrested and taken back to the district of his or her residence, and a fine may be imposed on him or her under the Aliens Police Act (Sect. 120).

[50] ICF II-Report, p 24.
[51] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

The decision restricting the place of residence of an asylum seeker to an assigned area under Sect. 62 Aliens Police Act has to be done by an individual formal decision (Bescheid) which can be appealed. There is no possibility to apply for a permission to leave the assigned area, but a stay outside the assigned area is not considered an infringement, if it was necessary, especially for the purpose of medical treatment or the fulfilment of other legal obligations (Sect. 121 Aliens Police Act).

For both categories, this means that if an asylum seeker leaves the assigned area without such reasons foreseen by law, this constitutes an administrative offence. It will be determined during the administrative criminal procedure whether or not his stay outside the assigned area was necessary and therefore justified.

An asylum seeker may not leave his assigned place of accommodation for more than 24 hours according to the rules of the house for the federal care facilities, without giving reasons for his or her absence, otherwise he or she might be expelled from the care facility. The decision on withdrawal of federal care must be taken according to the procedure explained in Q.21.

Q.21. Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Rules of reduction and withdrawal exist in the Federal and in the Laender legislation. Some cases mentioned there are not foreseen in the Directive. Hardly any of them make a distinction between cases in which reception conditions can be withdrawn or restricted, nor do they state explicitly which forms of restrictions can be imposed. Since all the benefits foreseen in the Basic Welfare Support Agreement must be considered necessary to satisfy basic needs, the only thinkable restriction of benefits can be the restriction or withdrawal of pocket money.

In all of the Acts, access to emergency health care is guaranteed.[52]

Under the Federal Welfare Support Act and several of the Laender Acts reception conditions can be withdrawn, restricted, or legal restraints can be imposed, when:

- an asylum seeker represents a risk to the order of the care facility (with or without a reference to a continuous severe violation of the rules of the house of a care facility) (Sect. 2 § 4 no. 1 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act; Burgenland Sect. 5 § 3 no. 1; Carinthia Sect. 3 § 3; Lower Austria Sect. 8 § 1 no. 5; Salzburg, Sect. 9 § 1 no. 3;

[52] Federation Sect. 2 § 4; Burgenland Sect. 5 § 5, Carinthia Sect. 3 § 4, Lower Austria Sect. 9, Salzburg Sect. 9 § 2, Styria Sect. 4 § 5, Tyrol Sect. 5 § 3, Upper Austria Sect. 3 § 7, Vienna Sect. 3 § 4 and Vorarlberg Sect. 7a § 5.

Styria Sect. 4 § 3 no. 1; Tyrol Sect. 5 § 3 lit. a; Upper Austria Sect. 3 § 2 no. 6; Vienna Sect. 3 § 3; Vorarlberg Sect. 7a § 5 lit. b)

- an asylum seeker has been evicted from the care facility by a police organ under Sect. 38a Security Police Act (Sicherheitspolizeigesetz). Under this provision, a police organ may evict a person from a place of accommodation and its neighbourhood if there has been an aggressive attack before and an attack against life, health or freedom of another person is to be expected. (Sect. 2 § 4 no. 2 Federal Welfare Support Act; Burgenland Sect. 5 § 3 no. 1; Carinthia Sect. 3 § 3; Styria Sect. 4 § 3 no. 2; Salzburg Sect. 9 § 1 no. 2; Tyrol Sect. 5 § 3 lit. c; Vienna Sect. 3 § 3 second indent; Vorarlberg Sect. 7a § 5 lit. b second indent)
- an asylum seeker has been convicted of an exceptionally serious crime and therefore represents a risk to the community (Sect. 2 § 5 Federal Welfare Support Act; Carinthia Sect. 5 § 3 lit. d; Upper Austria Sect. 3 § 2 no. 9, all in connection with Sect. 6 Asylum Act 2005)

  Other Acts stipulate the condition that a reason for exclusion from asylum under Sect. 13 of the Asylum Act 1997 is given, which refers to exclusion grounds under Art. 1 F of the Geneva Convention (Sect. 13 § 1) and allows for exclusion from asylum when an alien for cogent reasons constitutes a danger to the security of the Republic or when he or she has been convicted of a particularly serious crime and, by reason of such punishable act, represents a danger to the community (Sect. 13 § 2; Carinthia Sect. 3 § 3[53]; Styria Sect. 4 § 3 no. 3; Vienna Sect. 1 § 5; Vorarlberg Sect. 7a § 5 lit. c, with a reference to Art. 2 § 4 Basic Welfare Support Agreement); Salzburg (Sect. 9 § 1 no. 1) and Lower Austria (Sect. 8 § 1 no. 4) refer to the new provision on exclusion grounds in Sect. 6 Asylum Act 2005.
- an asylum seeker resorts to severe violence. (Tyrol Sect. 5 § 3 lit. b)
- an asylum seeker displays unacceptable behaviour vis-à-vis other residents or the management of the care facility. (Upper Austria Sect. 3 § 2 no. 6 second indent)

Moreover, asylum seekers may be excluded from reception conditions if they:

- are nationals of an EU member state or of Switzerland, Norway, Iceland or Liechtenstein Sect. 3 § 1 no. 1
- do not comply with requests to provide information on their identity and their need for support, or refuse to cooperate in the asylum procedure (Sect. 3 § 1 no. 2; Burgenland Sect. 5 § 3 no. 3; Lower Austria Sect. 8 § 1 no. 6; Salzburg Sect. 9 § 1 no. 8; Upper Austria Sect. 3 § 2 no. 3 and no. 7; Vorarlberg Sect. 7a § 5 lit. a);
- lodge an application for international protection within six months after a final decision of an earlier application (successive applications) Sect. 3 § 1 no. 3; Burgenland Sect. 5 § 3 no. 4; Lower Austria Sect. 8 § 1 no. 2; Salzburg Sect. 9 § 1 no. 5; Upper Austria Sect. 3 § 2 no. 4;
- Lower Austria also excludes asylum seekers from basic welfare support, when a successive application has been lodged more than six months from the final decision on the first application, if there are facts which justify the assumption that the second application was lodged with the purpose to avoid deportation or to obtain financial benefits from the Land or other benefits (Sect. 8 § 1 no. 3).

[53] The provision also mentions Sect. 6 § 1 no. 4 which also refers to a serious crime as mentioned in the other provisions.

- do not cooperate in the establishment of the facts necessary to carry out the asylum procedure Sect. 3 § 1 no. 4;
- have abandoned the assigned place of accommodation for more than three days or do not reside there regularly (Burgenland Sect. 5 § 3 no. 5, Lower Austria Sect. 8 § 1 no. 9, Salzburg Sect. 9 § 1 no. 4)

In Lower Austria benefits may also be denied, withdrawn or reduced if the asylum seeker does not provide evidence that the application for international protection was lodged within four weeks from his or her arrival in Austria. In Salzburg (Sect. 9 § 1 no. 7) and Upper Austria (Sect. 3 § 2 no. 10) reception conditions may be withdrawn or reduced if an asylum seeker unjustifiably refuses to take up an employment.
In Upper Austria (Sect. 3 § 2 no. 11) reception conditions may be withdrawn or refused if a third party is obliged by law or contract to provide similar benefits. Lower Austria (Sect. 4 § 1) stipulates that in this case the applicant is to be considered not needy. In other Laender persons who are entitled to benefits from other sources would most probably not be considered needy.

In Salzburg (Sect. 9 § 1 no. 6) and Lower Austria (Sect. 8 § 1 no. 8) reception conditions may be withdrawn or refused if an asylum seeker continuously uses the money paid in cash for purposes other than originally intended.

In Lower Austria (Sect. 9) and Upper Austria (Sect. 3 § 6), decisions must be taken individually under consideration of the proportionality principle taking into account the specific situation and the question whether the asylum seeker is a specially vulnerable person. The Vienna Basic Welfare Support Act refers to Art. 1 § 2 Basic Welfare Support Agreement in case of withdrawal, refusal or restriction of benefits, the Carinthian Act refers to its Sect. 1 § 3, both provisions referring to the provisions of the Directive.

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice[54]?

It has been transposed only by Lower Austria (Sect. 8 § 1 no. 1) and Upper Austria (Sect. 3 § 2 no. 5): In case of late applications there is no legal entitlement to benefits anymore in these Laender, but a margin of appreciation is left to the Laender Government. In other Laender it can be assumed that in such cases asylum seekers would be considered not needy because they had been able to support themselves on other means before filing an application.
There is no information whether there are cases in practice.

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

In the Federation and the Laender, decisions on reduction or withdrawal have to be taken individually by the administrative authorities (the administrative district authorities or more often the government itself, depending on the Land). According to most of the Laender Acts[55], a formal written decision (Bescheid) has to be issued only when the asylum seeker asks for it. The procedure is determined by the Austrian Administrative Procedures Act (Allgemeines Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz; AVG) which grants basic procedural guarantees. Sect. 7 lays down the impartiality principle and Sect. 58 § 2 states that decisions which do not fully acknowledge claims must always be reasoned.
Several Laender Acts provide for additional requirements for the procedure.[56] The Federal Basic Welfare Support Act – which is applicable in the admissibility stage of the procedure – also asks for a previous interrogation of the asylum seeker if possible (Sect. 2 § 6).

In Vienna, decisions on withdrawal are not taken formally under the Administrative Procedures Act because the institution responsible for granting and withdrawing benefits, the Fond Soziales Wien, does not have competences as a public authority. Decisions are subject to the substantive requirements laid down by the Basic Welfare Support Act. Of course the authority, when fulfilling official duties, is also bound by the Austrian constitution and especially the equality principle, asking for an objective and impartial decision. The Government is responsible for the supervision of the staff of the fund but has no decision-making authority.

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the Directive respected (see the documentation pack you received at our meeting in Brussels in April)?

Since the ECHR has the status of Constitutional Law in Austria, it must be respected in all administrative decisions, decisions on withdrawal can be challenged before the Constitutional Court, if the asylum seeker alleges a breach of Art. 3 or Art. 8 ECHR. If reception conditions are withdrawn, emergency healthcare must be granted (Federal and all Laender Acts).
In cases where there is no legal basis at present or where decisions are not taken under the Administrative Procedures Act, the Supreme Court may also become involved, because it is competent to rule on claims for compensation for violations of Community Law (see the case brought before the civil court as described at Q.21.E.). The Supreme

In Vorarlberg, decisions on denial, withdrawal or restriction of reception conditions always have to be taken by formal decision (Sect. 7a § 6).
[56] A decision can only be taken after a hearing of the asylum seeker in Burgenland (Sect. 5 § 3), Tyrol (Sect. 21 § 1) and Carinthia (Sect. 9 § 4).

Court also has to take into account constitutional law in its decision-making, even if it has no competence to rule on constitutional matters.
In some Laender (eg. Vorarlberg[57]) asylum seekers will receive social aid, when material benefits have been withdrawn; in some Laender (eg. Upper Austria, where asylum seekers are not entitled to social aid, Sect. 6 § 3 Social Welfare Act) benefits are usually entirely withdrawn, so that the asylum seeker is deprived of any financial substance to live on.

Q.21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome[58]?

One decision on the merits is accessible on the website of the Independent Administrative Tribunal for Upper Austria (http://www1.land-oberoesterreich.gv.at/uvs/ (search page)).
The Independent Administrative Tribunal – acting as second instance in application of the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act, because the initial reception centre East (Thalham) is situated in Upper Austria – repealed a decision on withdrawal of reception conditions following an appeal. The appellant claimed that an aggressive attack he was said to have committed had never occurred, a fact that was confirmed by the alleged victim. (The victim was allegedly thrown out of the first floor of the care facility into a snow hump while he said he had jumped himself for fun). The Tribunal held that the authorities had failed to carry out an investigation procedure, but only took over the very short official note remitted by the police officer who had investigated the incident, although the evidence was unclear. Moreover, it had failed to adequately reason its decision as to why the appellant had severely violated the rules of the house and why there was imminent danger emanating from him so that his further stay in the premises was considered unacceptable. The authority had also not explained why in the interest of public welfare for reasons of imminent danger the exclusion of the suspensive effect of the appeal was deemed necessary.

In September 2005 the Constitutional Court had denied its competence to rule on claims for benefits based upon the fact that the Directive had not been transposed and referred claimants to the ordinary civil courts to claim compensation from the Laender or the Federation, depending on the benefit they intended to claim (with the Supreme Court (Oberster Gerichtshof) as last instance court). The civil courts are competent to decide on cases of state liability for failure to transpose Community law, if damage has been caused by an act of an administrative authority or a court. If damage has been caused because of a decision of an administrative authority on an application for a work permit, the Federation is accountable (because under the Constitution employment is a federal competence). The Land (in the present case: Tyrol) is accountable for decisions taken by the authorities on the amount of social welfare (a constitutional competence of the Land), irrespective of whether the asylum seeker is entitled to benefits or not (see above at Q.9., VfGH 26.9.2005, A 10/05).

Another case had been brought before a civil court in Linz/Upper Austria in April 2006 by an Austrian lawyer who claimed benefits for a client from the Land Upper Austria (where at current there is no legal basis for reception conditions). The claimant, who had been living in a care facility in Linz, had been evicted from care for reasons he contested in the action brought before the court. No other benefits were being granted to him, and apparently he was not insured in the health insurance system anymore. He argued that the Directive was directly applicable and that he therefore had a right to be taken up in the care system again, claiming material benefits for the future and compensation for the time he had been without welfare support.[59] The procedure ended with an agreement between the applicant and the Land that benefits would be provided further on.

Q.22. Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

Under Austrian legislation, as has been indicated above at Q.3. and Q.15., there are two possibilities for the public authorities to act: legislation can either foresee that they must act under administrative law, then they have to follow the rules of the General Administrative Procedures Act, leading to an appeals procedure before administrative appeals authorities or tribunals and allowing for complaints to the High Administrative and Constitutional Courts. But – especially when it is about granting benefits to which an applicant shall not be entitled – legislation might also authorise them to act under private law. In such cases there is generally no legal remedy. However, under the recent jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in the case of benefits granted on a private law basis (see above at Q.3.), it seems to be accepted that the equality principle requires that benefits be granted equally to all applicants fulfilling the criteria set by law. Therefore, in case of withdrawal or refusal of reception conditions, an asylum seeker may file an application for (re)admission to the care facility before the civil court, against whose decision an appeal is possible. In such procedures, interim measures may also be applied for.
The civil courts are also competent to decide claims for compensation for failure to transpose the Directive in those Laender where currently a legal basis does not exist (see above at Q.21.E.)

This Austrian administrative specific renders the situation relatively complicated. However, the appeals procedures and problems arising in the field of reception conditions should be pointed out in the following.

[59] Information given by the claimant's legal representative.

Appeals against all formal decisions by administrative authorities are brought before Independent Administrative Tribunals (according to the Federal and Laender Basic Welfare Support legislation[60]) These are situated in the Laender and meet the requirements of Art. 6 ECHR. They decide in the last instance, against their decision, which is considered final, a complaint before the High Administrative Court is possible.
Only Vienna does not provide for an appeal, because decisions of the Fonds Soziales Wien are not taken formally under the Administrative Procedures Act. Here, an application for readmission before a civil court can be possible in cases of withdrawal of reception conditions[61], but it must be remembered for cases of refusal that Vienna requires that an asylum seeker should have been resident in the territory before 1st May 2004.

The decision on assignment of an asylum seeker to a certain place in a Land cannot be appealed by him or her, since it is only communicated to him informally (Sect. 6 § 1 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act).

In cases where after a positive decision on admissibility a decision on assignment of an asylum seeker to a certain Land is not taken (as described above at Q. 15), NGOs state that it happens regularly that asylum seekers are dismissed from federal care after two weeks. In this case, a legal remedy against the Federation would be vain, lacking federal competence under the Constitution.
But also the Laender refuse to grant reception conditions in such cases to asylum seekers who have not been assigned to them by the coordination office. Where the decision comes under private law, an application for admission before a civil court is possible. If the Land issues a negative formal administrative decision, an appeal is possible. However, in some Laender[62], the assignment decision is a prerequisite for granting welfare support (see above at Q.20.B.), there a legal remedy against a negative decision would not have any effect. In other Laender, the assignment is no legal requirement. However, according to NGOs also those sometimes refuse asylum seekers without taking a formal decision, although they might be obliged to do so under their respective Welfare Support Acts. In such cases, the only remedy against inaction of the authority is laid down in Sect. 73 of the Act (Devolutionsantrag), but can only be filed after a period of six months.
It seems unclear whether the asylum seeker has a possibility to oblige the coordination office to take a assignment decision, since this requires the consent of the Laender.

According to the Administrative Procedures Act a formal decision always has to contain the information on possibilities of appeal (Sect. 61). An appeal against a formal administrative decision (Bescheid) has to be submitted within two weeks from the date of delivery of the first instance decision (Sect. 63 § 5).

According to the Administrative Procedures Act an appeal usually has suspensive effect. Suspensive effect of an appeal can be excluded by the authority adopting the decision if early enforcement is in the interest of a party or for the common good because of imminent danger. (Sect. 64 Administrative Procedures Act).

Under the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act (Sect. 9 § 3), in Burgenland (Sect. 11 § 5) and Upper Austria (Sect. 4 § 3), suspensive effect can be granted in this case by the Independent Administrative Tribunal. The Basic Welfare Support Act for Lower Austria authorises the Independent Administrative Tribunal to exclude suspensive effect in addition to the possibilities stated in the Administrative Procedures Act, if there are facts that justify the assumption that the asylum seeker is not needy, if an asylum seeker did not comply with the conditions or orders issued when granting reception conditions or if he or she not just temporarily left Lower Austria or has taken residence outside the Land, or if the asylum seeker's place of residence is unknown.

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

During the admissibility procedure, asylum seekers have the right to assistance provided by a legal advisor in the initial reception centre (Sect. 64 Asylum Act 2005; Rechtsberater), their obligation, however, is to assist asylum seekers in the admissibility procedure, but they can also provide information in such cases. During the procedure on eligibility at the Offices of the Federal Asylum Office asylum seekers can seek the assistance of a "refugee advisor" (Sect. 66 Asylum Act 2005, Flüchtlingsberater) – the latter, however, only have limited resources[63]. No legal assistance (Verfahrenshilfe) is foreseen for persons who do not have the means to pay for a legal advisor in the second instance procedure. Only when a case is brought before the High Administrative Court, legal aid can be granted by the Court upon application (Sect. 61 High Administrative Court Act), and a lawyer will be provided by the Bar Association. Legal aid can be granted by the Independent Administrative Tribunals only in administrative criminal procedures.
If a case is brought before a civil court (eg. in Vienna), legal assistance (Verfahrenshilfe) can be granted according to Sect. 63 ff of the Rules on Civil Procedures (Zivilprozessordnung).

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones[64]?

There are no decisions under the new legislation. Apparently several Independent Administrative Tribunals intend to challenge their competence as second instance before the Constitutional Court, arguing that the competent authority under the constitution would be the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal. They have done so under the old legislation, but the Constitutional Court did not rule on the question.

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

The possibilities of complaint depend on the system of care. In federal care facilities, there is no formal mechanism of complaint. Complaints can be made anytime before employees, NGOs or legal advisors[65].
In the Laender the situation depends on the organisation of the care system. Usually there are regular controls of the care system effected by social counsellors and/or government officials. In Salzburg there are regular controls of the care facilities effected by officials. Complaints will often be made before the social counsellor who will forward the information on the circumstances of the case to the Government. In Vorarlberg, Caritas has introduced an internal management system for complaints, reaching from individual counsellors to heads of department and then to the Government. In Lower Austria, asylum seekers can complain at the counselling centres or directly at a specific office at the Government of Lower Austria, in Vienna there is a complaint procedure before the responsible institution, the Fonds Soziales Wien.
Apparently the way in which the different offices deal with these complaints is very different.[66]

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

Most of the Basic Welfare Support Acts do not define the term "family". In the Asylum Act 2005 and the Aliens Police Act the definitions cover only spouses and minor children. Lower Austria also provides a similar definition (Sect. 2 § 1 no. 3). The Upper Austria Basic Welfare Support Act explicitly refers to non-married partnerships which are put on an equal footing with marriage (Sect. 2 § 1). The Austrian aliens legislation, however, does not treat unmarried partners like married couples.
Practice shows that the authorities are more generous, and housing is provided also to more distant relatives in one place, as far as possible. The only case where families are often separated is in procedures in which the Dublin II Regulation is applied. Often, adult male family members are detained while women and children are not.[67]

All Basic Welfare Support Acts have taken over the provision of Art. 6 § 1 no. 1 Basic Welfare Support Agreement which stipulates that housing must be granted with respect to family unity[68].

Q.24. Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

There are four federal care facilities, among which two big initial reception centres and two smaller facilities.
In the Laender a combination of different premises exists. The usual differentiation made in Austria is between organised accommodation centres and organised private facilities. Accommodation centres exist only in some of the Laender and are generally rather small; most asylum seekers live in organised private hotels and guesthouses or flats that have been adapted for the accommodation of asylum seekers.

The statistics only differ between organised accommodation and individual accommodation in private flats organised by the asylum seekers themselves. Individual accommodation is scarce in the Laender, frequent only in Lower Austria and Vienna[69] (see Q.10.). The Burgenland Basic Welfare Support Act specifies in Sect. 4 § 1 no. 1 that accommodation shall generally be provided in places organised by the Land, private accommodation is accessible only under certain conditions.

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers?[70] Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

Federation: 1423 (initial reception centres and federal care facilities)
Laender: 29.200 (16.000 in accommodation centres and 13.200 in organised private premises)[71]

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?[72]

The total number seems to be sufficient[73], especially since the amount of applications for international protection has decreased. However, the quotas set by the Basic Welfare Support Agreement internally are not met, which leads to political difficulties within the federal system.

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

see Q. 32 B und C
Art. 3 § 4 Basic Welfare Support Agreement obliges the Federation to create contingency capacities in the Laender for cases of accommodation shortages. According to Sect. 11 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act, the Ministry of the Interior must create these capacities to cope with unpredictable and inevitable shortages of places in the Laender. It may therefore declare military camps a care facility by regulation. No other specific measures are foreseen.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

To a certain extent there are different categories depending on the stage of the procedure. Asylum seekers are, unless detained, accommodated in two big accommodation centres attached to the initial reception centres[74] during the beginning of the admissibility procedure. If their applications are not admitted they may be transferred to one of the two other, smaller federal care facilities (especially in procedures where the Dublin II Regulation is applied, which often take longer).
Upon admission, they are transferred to smaller facilities in the Laender to undergo the eligibility procedure. Facilities in the Laender can be accommodation "centres", which are by nature generally relatively small, or private guesthouses. These categories are however not linked to the stage of the procedure but come as the management systems of reception conditions and the infrastructure are different in the Laender.
For more detailed information on the repartition of duties between the Federation and the Laender see above at Q.10. and 11.

[73] Information given by NGOs and the Ministry of the Interior.
[74] EAST in Traiskirchen and Thalham.

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

Asylum seekers remain in the federal care facilities for a maximum of 20 days (and probably longer up to 14 days, until a place in one of the Laender is found). In the Laender there are no time limits, but in practice it seems that the permission to move to private premises is seldom given and according to NGOs the authorities in the Laender have a general idea that asylum seekers should stay in accommodation centres for about half a year (or sometimes even a year) before moving to individual accommodation.[75]

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

In all the premises there are rules of the house, provided for by the management of the care facility. There is no general rule applicable for all facilities. The Federation has issued rules of the house, but no information could be gathered if these are still up to date or if they have been replaced by new ones with the new Basic Welfare Support Act. In addition, a regulation prohibiting entry to federal care facilities for unauthorised persons has been issued by the Ministry of the Interior. If the Governments of the Laender are responsible for organising reception conditions, they might decide on the rules of the house themselves (eg. Sect. 7 § 3 Styria Care Act). Since they are also responsible for concluding contracts with NGOs and other service providers they do have at least an indirect influence on these rules. Above all, it is them who decide on withdrawal of benefits for the breach of such rules. Apparently the rules in the different premises are quite similar.[76]

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision? Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones? [77]

[75] Information given by NGOs, see also ICF II-Report, p 24.
[76] Information given by NGOs.

The Basic Welfare Support Agreement authorises the federal entities to foresee sanctions in case an asylum seeker poses a threat to the order inside the care facility. The Federal Basic Welfare Support Act (Sect. 2 § 4 no. 1) and the rules of the house for the federal care facilities provide that in case of breach of the rules, reception conditions may be limited or withdrawn. A thinkable limitation can only be the withdrawal of pocket money, but no further information on a relation between breaches of rules and sanctions could be gathered. Sanctions are also foreseen in other rules of the house but these are in general not made public, so that there is equally not much information. Apparently in Styria, where the rules of the house are issued by the government, sanctions can be imposed by the (public) management of the facility and start at eg. 5 Euro for minor violations.[78]

In case of violent behaviour, asylum seekers are usually expelled from the place of accommodation. If there are other difficulties between the management of the care facility and the asylum seeker, he or she is often transferred to another care facility.[79]

The formal decisions of the authorities fall under the same rules as in Q.21. C and 22.

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

Asylum seekers are not officially involved. In individual guesthouses, asylum seekers may take over organisational duties (eg. taking care of the keys of the premises etc), but there is no general custom. There is no organised form of representation of asylum seekers in the places of accommodation.

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

In the Federation and in most of the Laender asylum seekers can work on a voluntary basis inside the accommodation centres and are allowed to fulfil tasks which are directly linked to their accommodation and care (eg. cleaning, kitchen, transport etc).[80] These works are generally remunerated, the amount depending on the management of the centre (€ 3 to 5 per hour, according to a federal regulation[81]). If there are eg. cleaning plans and cleaning is limited to the asylum seekers' own rooms and the ordinary cleaning of the premises they are living in (especially in smaller facilities) it is usually not paid.

In Burgenland this form of work is considered mandatory.[82]

In addition, the Federation the Laender or the local authorities can draw on asylum seekers for non-profit services. These are usually also remunerated and can be rendered on a voluntary basis.[83]

All these possibilities for asylum seekers to work fall outside the legislation on aliens' employment and

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

Since accommodation centres are not closed asylum seekers can always enter into contact with legal advisors, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs, though the costs of travel for this purpose are not foreseen by the benefits listed in the Federal and the Laender Acts. Moreover, it has to be remembered that during the admissibility procedure an asylum seeker's stay is only tolerated within the district of his or her residence. Social counselling is provided in all care facilities. Access to UNHCR is guaranteed under Sect. 63 Asylum Act 2005. Moreover, these people cannot be excluded from permission to enter care facilities (see below at B.).

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

The Federal Care Facility Entry Regulation, issued by the Ministry of the Interior, provides that unauthorised entry to federal care facilities is prohibited, unless the person has a legitimate interest in such entry or stay. UNHCR personnel is always authorised to enter federal care facilities (Sect. 1 § 2). Moreover, legal advisors and representatives of NGOs are considered to have a legitimate interest in entering the care facility (Sect. 1 § 3). According to Sect. 1 § 3 no. 2, organs or representatives of organisations in charge of providing care have a legitimate interest when they need to enter a care facility in order to provide these tasks. While the legal requirement appears to be that they must have been commissioned by the asylum seeker, NGOs do not seem to encounter big difficulties and even non-official confidants are usually granted access.[84] They need an entry permit which is issued by the management of the house between 8 am and 5.30 pm according to the federal rules of the house.

In most of the Laender access to accommodation centres is not limited. The only Land where there is a legal authorisation to issue a regulation on prohibition of entry is Styria (see Sect. 7 § 1). Such a regulation has not (yet) been issued.

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

The access of persons with a legitimate interest as explained above cannot be limited. No information could be gathered on the Styrian regulation on prohibition of entry to care facilities. Apparently under the regulation access can be limited for NGOs.

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

There is a mandatory medical screening taking place in both initial reception centres. It includes an x-ray of the lungs and a test for tuberculin for children and pregnant women. It does not include a HIV test.
In addition, the voluntary visit of a doctor must be admitted in the initial reception centre.[85]

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Every asylum seeker undergoing an asylum procedure in Austria and included in the system of reception conditions enjoys health insurance[86]. Health insurance covers all direct treatment costs. Additional costs for necessary treatment like psychotherapeutical care and other benefits not covered by the insurance can also be covered by reception conditions upon an individual decision[87]. If reception conditions are withdrawn or restricted, access to emergency healthcare is guaranteed in the Federal and all Laender Acts.[88]

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?[89]

The initial reception centre in Traiskirchen hosts four general practitioners, three doctors trained in psychology and two specialists (x-ray and lungs). Reception conditions cover also psychological care and other benefits not paid for by the health insurance system.[90]
In most other reception centres asylum seekers go out to see practitioners who would make referrals to specialist doctors as appropriate.
There are no doctors coming to the centres in a periodical way (only when they are called because of emergency cases). Frequently travelling costs to doctors and hospitals are to be paid by the asylum seekers themselves. The language barrier is also an important obstacle to adequate health care.[91]

Q.28. Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

Asylum seekers do not have access to the labour market during the first three months after an application has been registered, Sect. 4 § 3 no. 7 Aliens Employment Act (Ausländer-Beschäftigungsgesetz, AuslBG).
During this period, asylum seekers are also not allowed to work on the basis of self-employment (which is not covered by the Aliens Employment Act) according to Sect. 7 § 2 Federal Basis Welfare Support Act.

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

[88] All Acts speak of "emergency healthcare", only Vorarlberg and Salzburg grant access to "emergency healthcare and the essential treatment of illnesses". In practise, this differentiation in wording will not make a difference. [90] Art. 6 § 1 no. 6 Basic Welfare Support Agreement, taken over by the respective Federal and Laender legislation (see above at Q.12.A).
[91] Information given by NGOs.

Yes, asylum seekers need a work permit (Beschäftigungsbewilligung) under the Aliens Employment Act, which has to be applied for by a possible future employer (Sect. 3 § 1). The authorities have to decide on first applications for regular work permits within six weeks (Sect. 20a).
Ordinary work permits can be granted for one year, work permits for professions which are usually limited to a specific time of the year (seasonal work) can be limited to the time necessary (Sect. 7 § 1 and 2), but to a maximum period of six months. In this case, a second work permit cannot be issued immediately after an earlier work permit has expired
According to an administrative instruction issued by the Ministry of Economic Affairs and Employment, asylum seekers shall only be granted work permits for seasonal work. If a person has been working for 52 weeks within the last 24 months, he or she will be able to achieve an "ordinary" work permit under the above mentioned provision. This is the necessary period of work until an employee is entitled to unemployment benefits and is considered to be available on the labour market.[92] Given that this possibility can therefore only become relevant after two years, it should be reminded that access to the labour market is only open to asylum seekers as long as a final decision has not been taken (unless they have a residence permit on a different legal basis).

Other forms of work permits are not accessible to asylum seekers.

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

Taking into account the limitation of asylum seekers to seasonal work, the priority for EEA and Turkish nationals (below at D.) and the fact that the work permit has to be applied for by the future employer, NGOs criticise that the present rules are so strict that in practice they exclude asylum seekers from the labour market.[93]
The general conditions for the granting of work permits are laid down in Sect. 4 et seqq. Aliens Employment Act. According to Sect. 4, a work permit has to be issued if the status and development of the labour market allow it and if no important public or economic reasons stand against it. According to Sect. 4b § 1 the labour market allows an employment of an alien if, for the vacation in question, no national and no other alien admitted to the labour market is available. In addition, a maximum number of aliens to be granted work permits per year are supposed to be set by the Federation and cumulatively by the Laender for enterprises on their territory. Among other conditions it has to be expected that the employer will employ the asylum seeker in his business and that rules on wages and working conditions will be respected.
There are no other rules on specific conditions of work.

[93] ICF II-Report, p 16.

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

In addition to the above mentioned conditions, there is priority for EEA citizens and Turkish nationals falling under the association agreement, as well as other third country nationals under certain conditions (eg. when they are entitled to unemployment allowances or already have a work permit; Sect. 4b § 1).

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

There are no rules excluding asylum seekers or other aliens from vocational training. However, access to vocational training is linked to the availability of a person on the labour market. The "Labour Market Service" (Arbeitsmarktservice, AMS) is an institution installed by law which fulfils public duties on the one hand (eg. payment of unemployment benefits) and provides other services. According to Sect. 32 of the Act on the Labour Market Service (Arbeitsmarktservicegesetz, AMSG), the institution has to provide its services with a view to placing unemployed persons in vacancies, securing employment and securing the subsistence of unemployed persons. The target of the AMS must be to aim at combining the markets of demand and supply of the workforce and thus to secure the employment of all persons who are available on the Austrian labour market (Sect. 29 AMSG). The competent offices of the AMS only afford access to courses to asylum seekers who are within the system of unemployment benefits, thus who have been working at least 52 weeks during the last 24 months. Moreover, a right to legal residence on the territory is necessary for being considered available on the labour market, it is not sufficient if an asylum seeker is only being tolerated. Since asylum seekers are not integrated into the system of the employment service, they do not have access to vocational training.[94]
Apparently there are a lot of asylum seekers who are still under the old asylum legislation, who are therefore in the work process and have access to unemployment benefits and vocational training. The competent offices generously offer German courses, and sometimes training in nursery schools. Other courses are scarcely offered to asylum seekers, but his is subject to the individual official in charge.[95] Under the new Asylum Act 2005 it will depend on the progress of the asylum procedure, because asylum seekers can be considered "available" on the labour market if they have a right to residence. This is granted during the first and second instance procedure (unless where an application has been declared inadmissible in the asylum procedure, and when in such cases suspensive effect is not granted by the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal). If suspensive effect is being granted by the High Administrative Court, the asylum seeker still has a right to residence then.

[95] Information given by a member of the Upper Austrian Chamber of Labour.

If an asylum seeker meets the requirements for his or her admission to a university, he or she does not have to pay a tuition fee only if he or she comes from a country listed in annex 1 or 2 of the regulation on the tuition fee (Sect. 3 § 1 Studienbeitragsverordnung 2004). In addition to that, some (small) scholarships are available.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

The rules have changed with the whole revision of the aliens law regime. Unlike before, access to a more favourable follow-up work permit (issued after an employment of 12 months) now depends upon lawful establishment on the territory (Niederlassungbewilligung), a requirement which cannot be met by asylum seekers. This work permit is attributed to aliens themselves (and not to the employer), and is valid on the territory of a Land, for a maximum period of two years. Due to the shorter duration of asylum procedures envisaged under the new asylum legislation and the fact that asylum seekers often will not have a right to residence on the territory but will only be tolerated, they will frequently not be considered "available" on the labour market and therefore not have access to work permits exceeding seasonal work or vocational training.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

Under the federal legislation, reception conditions are being granted without this requirement[96]. However, if the asylum seeker has an income or other means, he or she will have to refund the costs incurred according to Sect. 3 § 2 of the Federal Welfare Support Act.
In the Laender, reception conditions are subject to the fact that the asylum seeker is in need of help and protection (hilfs- und schutzbedürftig). Persons who do not have the necessary means of subsistence for themselves and their family members are considered to be in need of help[97]. If it appears that asylum seekers have an income or other resources, they can be asked to refund. The income of relatives of the asylum seeker, who are obliged to maintain the asylum seeker by law (eg. parents, children), can equally be deducted from benefits granted, and these relatives can be asked to refund.

Reception conditions can also be granted in part, if the asylum seeker's needs are adequately satisfied.[98] When asylum seekers have an income this is deducted from any financial benefits they can get (e.g. pocket money).[99]
According to NGOs, asylum seekers who leave the care facility for more than three days can be dismissed from a care facility, applications for re-entry into the care system are often rejected because the asylum seeker is not considered in need of help anymore[100] (see eg. Sect. 5 § 3 no. 5 Burgenland Welfare Support Act; see also No. 9 of the Rules of the House for the federal care facilities, which provides that reception conditions may be withdrawn if the asylum seekers leaves the care facility for more than 24 hours without reason).

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30. Q.30. A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

The Basic Welfare Support Agreement provides for special measures for unaccompanied minor applicants in its Art. 7. Other than that, no special provisions for specific groups are provided.
The Federal Basic Welfare Support Act provides that the special needs of single women and minors are to be taken into account in the process of assignment of asylum seekers to a place of reception. Sect. 30 Asylum Act 2005 considers persons with mental health problems due to torture or an equally severe incidence a specially vulnerable group. Lower Austria (Sect. 9) and Upper Austria (Sect. 3 § 6) refer to the needs of specially vulnerable person to be taken into account in procedures on withdrawal of benefits. In Sect. 7a § 3 Vorarlberg stipulates that ethnic particularities, individual needs of the beneficiary and special needs of particularly vulnerable persons are to be taken into account when granting welfare support benefits, especially concerning medical support. Single women and minors, elderly people, disabled people or persons who have been subject to torture, rape or other forms of psychological, physical or sexual violence are considered particularly vulnerable persons.
According to Sect. 4 no. 5 of the Salzburg Basic Welfare Support Act specially vulnerable persons are to be considered: minors, disabled persons, elderly persons, pregnant women, single women or men with minor children, as well as persons who have suffered from torture, rape or other serious forms of psychological, physical or sexual violence. There is, however, no further specific reference to this group of persons in the Act.

[98] Information given by Ministry of the Interior.
[100] ICF II-Report, p 22.

In all other legislation, there is no reference to persons with special needs, such groups can only be identified from the context of benefits granted, which include measures for persons in need of particular care (*Pflegebedürftig*e)[101], health insurance and benefits not covered by insurance on the basis of an individual decision, and information, counselling and social care (Art. 6 Basic Welfare Support Agreement).

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

According to Sect. 30 Asylum Act 2005 asylum seekers who are suffering from a mental health problem because of torture or an equally severe incidence are a specially vulnerable group. If the problem amounts to a disease, a negative decision on the merits cannot be taken in the admissibility procedure and his or her special needs shall be taken into account in the further course of the procedure. Benefits granted under reception conditions include "other necessary benefits not covered by health insurance upon individual decision" (for references see Q.12.). This means that the additional costs of psychotherapy or other necessary medical treatment are covered when granting reception conditions. However, according to the information provided by a physician working in the field, "these facilities are scarce and places there are insufficient.[102] For persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence several NGOs provide psychotherapy. Access to psychotherapy for the latter group is often difficult since all NGOs are based in the provincial capitals and travel costs are usually not covered. Also these NGOs have long waiting lists. Other assistance for them than psychotherapy is scarce."[103] Another limit for access to psychotherapy is the language barrier, since the costs of translation services are equally not covered.
Disabled persons can apply for nursing allowance and fund their necessary support. Measures for persons in need of special care (Pflegebedürftige) are covered up to an amount of € 2480,- per person per month
In the initial reception centre in Traiskirchen, there are special premises for single women and for unaccompanied minors. There, women are provided with an information pack on rights of women in Austria[104]. There are no special care structures for them in Thalham.[105] For pregnant women with families no special procedures are foreseen and there is no similar procedure for single fathers[106]. Unaccompanied minors shall be placed in special forms of accommodation and be granted benefits which go beyond ordinary welfare support and which are listed in Art. 7 of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement.

[101] Art. 6 § 1 no. 7 Basic Welfare Support Agreement. 2480 Euro per month are to be paid for accommodation in special institutions if necessary according to Art. 9 no. 6.

[106] Single fathers with minor children are defined as specially vulnerable persons in Sect. 4 no. 5 of the Salzburg Basic Welfare Support Act.

At the moment, there seems to be a sufficient number of places available for separated children in the Laender.

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

There is no procedure laid down in legislation for the identification of such groups. The Federal and Laender Acts only add to the list of benefits to be granted, "other necessary benefits not covered by health insurance upon individual decision". In the Austrian administrative system, a formal negative decision will have to be taken if an asylum seeker claims specific benefits under this provision. If a question can only be answered by an expert (eg. whether a person is a minor or whether a person is traumatised) an expert opinion will have to be obtained under the ordinary administrative procedure.

The persons concerned shall be identified possibly by the police organs or asylum authorities during the first interview. Their specific need can be taken into account at any stage of the procedure. According to Sect. 20 Asylum Act victims of violations of sexual self-determination shall be interviewed by organs of the same gender. The procedure before the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal, which is in general public, can be carried out in camera.[107]

According to the information gathered by NGOs, persons who have visible special needs should be identified upon arrival at the reception centre. Others with invisible needs will either contact NGOs dealing with persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence themselves. Most of them get this information through fellow countrymen or they are identified by local doctors, reception centre staff, and above all during social counselling. But as the counselling only takes place on a voluntary basis, not every asylum seeker makes demand of these offers. But since even NGOs often do not have expert personnel who could for example identify traumatised persons, social counsellors can only be attentive to situations, experience and emotions asylum seekers describe during an interview which could provide an indication of special needs.[108]

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Generally, medical assistance is provided under the ordinary health care system by doctors who have a contract with the social insurance institution, or by a series of projects providing special intercultural counselling and psychotherapy. Medical care is generally adequate also for persons with special needs (elderly, minors, pregnant women etc).

[108] Information given by NGOs.

In the federal care facility in Traiskirchen, three specialists are providing psychological care. However, as far as psychotherapy and other treatment of traumatised persons and victims of torture is concerned, in both systems (health insurance and special projects) resources are scarce and there are long waiting lists. In addition, interpretation and travel costs, which are not covered by health insurance, are huge obstacles in the access to necessary assistance.[109]
The most important NGOs in the field (Ankyra, Innsbruck/Tyrol, ASPIS, Klagenfurt/Catinthia, Hemayat, Vienna, Oasis, Upper Austria, Onderos, Salzburg and Omega and Zebra, Graz) have created a network under the title "Intercultural psychotherapy for extremely traumatised persons" (Interkulturelle Psychotherapie nach Extremtraumatisierung) which is coordinated by the Asylkoordination in Vienna.[110]
In a recent publication on the identification of traumatised persons during the asylum procedure[111] Klaus Ottomeyer, who is the coordinator of the project Aspis, organised at the University of Klagenfurt/Carinthia and offering psychological care to asylum seekers and refugees, criticises that reports of asylum seekers on traumatising experience are not adequately being registered during the asylum procedure by the expert appointed. The author points out that often experts do not discern symptoms described by their patients as signals for post-traumatic stress disorders or did not draw the necessary conclusions. In other cases the expert opinions given are reported to be so short that the findings of the expert could not be reconstructed from his or her report on the examination of the patient. This study is supposed to be published in autumn this year.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

18 years (Sect. 21 § 2 of the Civil Code).

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Up to the age of 15 years, minor asylum seekers are subject to compulsory education under Sect. 1 § 1 of the Compulsory Education Act, and are subject to the same rules as nationals. Unless special education projects of NGOs are being offered (which target mainly older asylum seekers), lessons are given at school within the ordinary school system. Minor asylum seekers who do not (yet) have the necessary knowledge of the language of tuition to follow classes as ordinary pupils can be accepted as extraordinary pupils according to Sect. 4 School Tuition Act.

For minors over 15 years, there is no legal title to be admitted to a specific school, but admission is subject to fulfilment of legal requirements (eg. language skills, a certain standard of tuition – usually the requirement is the positive conclusion of tuition at a lower school, sometimes also certain minimum grades, or places available) which are laid down in Sect. 4 § 2 Act on the Organisation of Schools. Also here, the provisions applying for asylum seekers are the same as for nationals.
Access can also be granted to minor refugees older than 15 years, but it lies within the competence of the school to decide whom it admits for tuition. Of course, the school management is also bound by legislation, but has discretion as to the fulfilment of legal requirements.

Education is generally provided for unaccompanied minors, who are in special forms of accommodation and care (eg. projects run by NGOs). For accompanied minors, living with their family in "ordinary" care facilities, access to education is not always provided, depending on the place where the minor lives.[112] This is also due to the fact that transport costs are not always provided to minors who are not covered by compulsory education.[113]
Art. 7 § 3 no. 5 of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement stipulates that for unaccompanied minors an integration plan shall be elaborated and measures taken to make use of existing schooling, education and vocational activities with a view to self-preservation. Decisions on the future of accompanied minors are to be taken in the interest of the welfare of the child by their guardians. The Ministry of the Interior deems that there is no reason to restrict the guardians' rights in this respect.[114]

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Usually minors who are subject to compulsory education are not integrated into the schooling system during the admissibility procedure, because they are supposed to stay there only for 20 days. If this time limit is exceeded, they are enrolled in the public schools. The time limit of three months is usually not exceeded. However, NGOs and UNHCR state that this provision has been violated in several cases of minor asylum seekers who were in a procedure under the Dublin II-Regulation.[115]
If minor refugees cannot attend ordinary classes due to a lack of language skills, they can be accepted at public schools as extraordinary pupils for 12 months at the maximum. This time limit may be extended for another 12 months if the minor failed to acquire the language skills necessary to attend classes and if he or she cannot be held responsible for this failure.

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

At some schools, specific language classes for students with insufficient knowledge of German are available. These classes are being offered in addition to or as a preparation for ordinary tuition. In the larger care facilities and accommodation centres run by NGOs there are language classes available, in most guesthouses in small villages on the countryside there are no possibilities to attend language classes.

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

They are. Minors are generally accommodated with their parents, the person responsible for them, or if possible with other relatives, even when they are less close.

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

In general, minors have the same access to health care, especially to psychotherapy and other necessary medical treatment as adults (see Q.30.D). Art. 7 Basic Welfare Support Agreement obliges the federal entities to grant benefits to unaccompanied minors which go beyond benefits granted to adults and must comprise social and psychological support when needed. Moreover, "such persons shall be assisted by initial clarification and stabilization measures whose purpose should be to strengthen their emotional state and create a basis of trust". This provision has been taken up by the Federation and nearly all the Laender in their legislation[116] (see Q.12.A). Only Vienna has not issued a provision concerning special benefits for minor asylum seekers with special needs.
In practice, for unaccompanied minors in special forms of accommodation the necessary care and counselling is granted there. For all other minors, the situation depends on the place they are living in. Special support is subject to a lack of supply in some areas, which complicates access, lack of places in general, waiting lists for psychological support and lack of interpreting services.[117] Moreover, since there are no screening procedures the special needs of accompanied minors or of minors who are not living in a special form of accommodation granting specific social counselling are often not being identified.

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

According to Sect. 2 § 7 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act Sect. 16 § 5 Asylum Act 2005 is also applicable in questions of capacity to act and representation of minors in the procedure under this Act. Thus, during the admissibility procedure unaccompanied minors are represented in federal care matters by the legal advisor of the initial reception centre. After admission of an application and assignment of the minor to a place of reception in one of the Laender, the youth welfare office of the respective Land is responsible (see also the jurisdiction of the Constitutional Court, B 1290/04, above at Q.9.).

Youth welfare is a constitutional competence of the Laender, therefore all Laender have their own Youth Welfare Acts which are generally applicable to minor asylum seekers as well. These Acts grant assistance to all minors whose interests cannot be represented by their parents or other persons. Several Basic Welfare Support Acts of the Laender explicitly refer to their Youth Welfare Acts, declaring them applicable as far as care is concerned[118] or granting at least access to the data of the care information system (database) to the youth welfare offices.[119] The youth welfare office may also take the minor under guardianship in a formal procedure. During the admissibility procedure, this is often not done because it can be expected that the minor will leave the reception centre soon and move to another Land or country. In the Laender, it depends on the particular youth welfare office, which policy it takes on unaccompanied minors. In some Laender youth welfare offices do not take steps to take unaccompanied minors under guardianship.[120] In a recent decision, the High court ruled that an unaccompanied minor has a right to be taken under guardianship in the interest of his or her welfare (see above at Q.9., OGH 7 Ob 209/05v).

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

According to Art. 7 § 1 Basic Welfare Support Agreement unaccompanied minors must be accommodated in special shared accommodation groups (for minors with special needs), special accommodation centres (for minors unable to care for themselves) or other suitable accommodation, or in individual accommodation.[121]

In practice, unaccompanied minors are rarely accommodated with foster families during the asylum procedure. This is a solution which is only being used exceptionally in case of minors below 14 years or asylum-seeking children with relatives in Austria[122]. NGOs complained that the number of places available for unaccompanied minors in special accommodation facilities was insufficient and were concerned about inadequate placement of minors.[123] Apparently, this situation has changed so that right at the moment the number of places seems to be sufficient.[124]

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

Tracing of family members is done within the regular asylum procedure. If relatives of the minor are in Austria, they can be found via the aliens information system. If relatives are within the Eurodac-system, they can be traced there.

All information gathered during this procedure is subject to the general confidentiality provisions of the Austrian Constitution, the Data Protection Act and the regulations on duties of public servants. Moreover, Sect. 54 of the Asylum Act 2005 provides that asylum authorities may only use personal data for the fulfilment of the tasks assigned to them and Sect. 57 rules which authorities may receive data collected in the Asylum seeker information system, the procedure database or the aliens information system.

Art. 7 § 1 no. 2 and 4 Basic Welfare Support Agreement provide that special care for unaccompanied minors covers tracing their family members and in case making family reunification possible. This provision has been taken over by the Federation, Upper Austria and Vorarlberg (by general reference to Art. 7), Burgenland (Sect. 7 § 3 no. 2 and 4), Carinthia (Sect. 4 § 3 lit. b and d), Styria (Sect. 8 § 3 no. 2 and 4) and Tyrol (Sect. 7 § 3 no. 2 and 4). Tracing of family members, but not family reunification is foreseen in Lower Austria (Sect. 6 § 3 no. 2) and Salzburg (Sect. 6 § 2 no. 4). No reference to the tracing of family members is made in the Basic Welfare Support Act for Vienna.

Since according to the legal provisions, tracing is part of special care for minors, those responsible under the respective care systems will have to take adequate measures.

Unaccompanied minors are generally accommodated in special forms of accommodation, run by specialized organisations which in practice are well informed about and make use of the Red Cross Tracking Service.[125]

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

There are no exceptional modalities. Until specific needs of asylum seekers (eg. psychotherapy, other medical care or accommodation in nursing homes) are identified, they receive the usual reception conditions.

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

There are no exceptional modalities. In practice, when places in accommodation centres are rare, asylum seekers may be given the permission to live individually in private apartments and reception conditions will be granted in money. When a Land refuses to take over asylum seekers assigned to them by the coordination office for lack of free places in accommodation centres, the coordination office will have to find another place of residence.

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

Under Art. 3 § 4 Basic Welfare Support Agreement and Sect. 11 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act, the Federation is obliged to provide contingency housing capacities as a precaution for capacity limits in the Laender with a view to meeting unpredictable and inevitable accommodation shortages in the Laender. In consultation with the Ministry of Defence, military camps can be declared accommodation centres by regulation.

Q.32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

Asylum seekers who arrive at Vienna International Airport are subjected to the special procedural rules under Sect. 31 et seqq. Asylum Act 2005. The existing legislative norms do not provide any special provisions for reception conditions for asylum seekers who are confined to the special transit zone at the airport. Moreover, it is not considered to fall under the Federal Basic Welfare Support Act, so that no reception conditions are being granted there on a legal basis. The care facility existing there [125] Information provided by the Red Cross Headquarters Vienna.

(Sondertransitheim) is run by the NGO Caritas[126], which provides social and legal counselling, food and accommodation for 35 persons. However, there is no legal responsibility of the Government to guarantee the maintenance of the place of reception, nor are formal decisions on reception conditions taken and judicial remedies granted. Above all, asylum seekers are not entitled to a place in the care facility of the special transit zone and might be forced to remain outside in case of exhaustion of places. In addition, there is a particular zone "to secure the refusal of entry to the territory" in the transit area (Zurückweisungszone) to which social counsellors do not have access.
Under the wording of the Federal Basic Support Act, the care facility at the airport is not necessarily excluded from the scope of application of the Act (Sect. 1 no. 5, according to which a care facility is any "accommodation outside an initial reception centre, where the satisfaction of basic needs of an asylum seeker is being factually granted"). Moreover, the Care Facility Entry Regulation 2005 explicitly defines in its Sect. 1 § 1 no. 3 the accommodation at Vienna International Airport (Building 800) as a "care facility".

In fact, the care facility at the airport seems to be simply ignored by legislation, and no contribution to the discussion could be found in the documents preparing the different amendments to the basic welfare support act in the past.

As for the period of time an asylum seeker might stay in the transit zone, see the information on the special airport procedure at Q. 11.A. Deadlines for authorities to act are rather short. According to Sect. 32 § 4 Asylum Act 2005 the maximum period of time for an asylum seeker to stay there is six weeks.

On other borders asylum seekers are not confined to border posts.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

See above at C.

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[127] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the [126] See http://www.caritas-wien.at/flughafen_1605.htm.

[127] Please specify if article 18 §1 of the Directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 which specifies that "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if has not yet to be transposed).

asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

According to Sect. 47 § 1 Asylum Act 2005, an asylum seeker shall be arrested in order to be taken to the initial reception centre under Sect. 43 § 2 Asylum Act 2005 or when it has been ordered by the Federal Asylum Office under Sect. 26 Asylum Act 2005.
1) According to Sect. 43 § 2 of the Act, an asylum seeker must be arrested and taken to the initial reception centre, when he or she does not have a right to residence in the territory and has applied for international protection before a police organ. The same accounts for asylum seekers who have a right to residence but do not present themselves at the initial reception centre within 14 days, when his right to residence has expired in the meantime.
2) An asylum seeker can be arrested by a request of the Federal Asylum Office according to Sect. 26 Asylum Act 2005 if an asylum seeker has left the initial reception centre without justification or has "eluded" from the procedure (see Sect. 24 § 1: when the Office cannot determine the asylum seeker's place of residence or when he or she leaves the country (in certain circumstances)). If the asylum seeker is arrested, the Federal Asylum Office has to inform the persons holding the asylum seeker in custody, when and to which initial reception centre he or she is to be taken. After the necessary procedural steps the asylum seeker must be set free.

3) According to Sect. 76 § 2 Aliens Police Act; Schubhaft) the aliens police authority can issue an detention order to secure the expulsion procedure or to secure deportation, if:

a) an expulsion order (Sect. 10 Asylum Act 2005) has been issued which can be effected by deportation, even when it is not yet final (no. 1).

An expulsion order has to be issued under Sect. 10 Asylum Act 2005 in case of any negative decision, be it for inadmissibility (under the Dublin II Regulation or for the existence of a safe third country) or for ineligibility (when neither an asylum status nor a status of subsidiary protection is granted).

An expulsion order may not be issued if the asylum seeker has a right to residence upon a different legal basis, or if this would constitute a violation of Art. 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

If a deportation would constitute a violation of Art. 3, and if this situation is not durable, the authority has to declare that deportation be suspended for the time being.

b) an expulsion procedure has been opened on him or her under the Asylum Act 2005 (no. 2).

According to Sect. 27 an expulsion procedure is considered opened if

- the authority informs the asylum seeker in the admissibility procedure that it envisages to reject the application for inadmissibility or dismiss it for ineligibility (such procedural steps have to be taken according to Sect. 29 § 3

no. 4 and 5 respectively Asylum Act 2005 before a formal decision is taken[128])

- if the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal discontinued the procedure (which it can do according to Sect. 24 § 2 Asylum Act 2005 if the asylum seeker has absconded from the procedure and a decision cannot be taken without a further interview) in a case in which the first instance had issued an expulsion order.
- An expulsion procedure must also be opened if the investigation done may justify the assumption that the application will be rejected or dismissed and there is a particular interest in an accelerated procedure. This is the case when an asylum seeker has been convicted, indicted by the public prosecutor or caught in the very act of certain serious crimes (Sect. 27 § 2 and 3) Asylum Act 2005). If the asylum authority opens an expulsion procedure, it has to notify the aliens authorities.

c) an expulsion order or a decision on prohibition of residence had been issued before an application for international protection was made, when these decisions can be effected by deportation (no. 3; eg. when an appeal does not have suspensive effect).

According to Sect. 76 § 6, an alien may be kept in detention after having made an application for international protection, if he or she has been in detention for the purpose of his return before. The change of the legal basis for detention has to be annotated in the asylum seeker's records.

d) it can be assumed by reason of the results of an interrogation, a personal search and a check of the police records that the alien's application for international protection will be declared inadmissible lacking Austrian responsibility to assess the application. This provision aims at asylum seekers who will be subject to a procedure under the Dublin II-Regulation.

These provisions equally concern asylum seekers and persons whose application has been finally decided.

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

There is no explicit reference to Art. 7 § 3 of the Directive and there are no cases of confinement to a place, which are not covered by the legislation on detention. Confinement to a certain place, meaning a decision on a place of residence and the obligation to report to police authorities regularly, is a general alternative to detention as a more lenient measure (see below at C.).

[128] The asylum seeker will then be referred to a legal advisor and will be granted a preparation time of at least 24 hours to prepare for the interview, in which the legal advisor will also be present.

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

According to Sect. 77 Aliens Police Act the aliens authority has to renounce detention, if the purpose of detention may be reached by more lenient measures. It is obliged to resort to more lenient measures vis-à-vis minors, unless there is reason to believe that the purpose of detention cannot be reached. Sect. 77 § 3 takes as examples for more lenient measures the obligation to take residence in a certain place designed by the authority or to report at regular intervals at a certain police station.
In cases of families whose applications have been turned down for inadmissibility under the Dublin II Regulation, often men are taken in detention, while women and children are subjected to more lenient measures (usually the above mentioned alternatives to stay in a certain care facility and report regularly to the police station).[129]

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

1) If an asylum seeker is arrested by a police organ in order to be taken to the initial reception centre, no detention order is issued.

2) If an asylum seeker's residence is unknown, the competent authority to request his or her arrest is the Federal Asylum Office.

3) The competent authority to order detention for the purpose of return is the aliens police authority. In some bigger cities this is the Federal Police Directorate (Bundespolizeidirektion), where no such directorates exist, it is the district administrative authorities (Bezirksverwaltungsbehörden).

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

1) The asylum seeker can be held in custody for a maximum time limit of 48 hours (Sect. 47 § 2 Asylum Act 2005).

2) The asylum seeker can be held in custody for a maximum of 72 hours (Sect. 26 Asylum Act 2005)

3) According to Sect. 80 § 1 Aliens Police Act, the authorities have to make sure that the length of detention is as short as possible. Asylum seekers detained under Sect. 76 § 2 can be detained until the fourth week after a final decision has been taken, has passed. If an asylum seeker cannot be deported for certain reasons listed in Sect. 80 § 4 no. 1 to 3 the overall maximum duration of detention is six months. If an appeal filed by an asylum seeker against a negative decision, in which his or her application has been declared inadmissible, has been granted suspensive effect by the Independent Federal Asylum Tribunal, the asylum seeker may be detained until a final decision is taken. After that, detention may be held up if the Tribunal has issued a negative decision.

If the asylum seeker shall be kept in detention for more than six months, the Independent Administrative Senate shall verify on the first day after that period, and then every four weeks, if the reasons for detention are still existing and whether it is proportional to hold up detention (Sect. 80 § 6).
Altogether, the maximum duration of detention must not exceed ten months within a period of two years.

The same rules account for asylum seekers detained because they are in a procedure under the Dublin II-Regulation. It has to be reminded that if consultations under the Dublin II-Regulation are being initiated, the deadline of 20 days for the authority to decide on the admissibility of an application is not applicable. Therefore, asylum seekers who are being detained because there is reason to believe that the alien's application for international protection will be declared inadmissible lacking Austrian responsibility to assess the application will often be detained for a relatively long time, even before a decision has been taken in the first instance.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

If asylum seekers are arrested in order to be taken to an initial reception centre or an asylum authority that has summoned him or her, they usually stay for a short period of time at the police station of the district where they were arrested. If they cannot be taken to their place of destination, they can be transferred to a police detention centre to wait for further transport there. Asylum seekers detained pending deportation are being detained in prison-like police detention centres (Polizeianhaltezentren). These are designed for the ordinary detention scheme for administrative infractions, among which infractions of aliens police legislation, and are usually located in major police stations. Asylum seekers are detained there together with other aliens detained pending deportation, and also other persons, detained for administrative infractions.[130] However according to Sect. 4 § 3 of the Detention Regulation (Anhalteordnung), these two groups of people are to be detained in separate departments, if possible. Due to efforts of NGOs, today there are several departments in police detention centres for aliens pending deportation where the doors of cells are open during the day as long as there are no disciplinary problems (Offener Vollzug).

[130] In Austria, administrative authorities (district administrative authorities, police authorities, mayors) can impose prison sentences of up to two weeks, and six weeks if necessary for particularly aggravating reasons (Sect. 12 Administrative Penal Act).

If the police authorities are not able to detain an asylum seeker in a police detention centre, they have to ask the head of the local jailhouse (which is usually attached to a criminal court) to take the asylum seeker in detention (Sect. 78 § 1 Aliens Police Act).

At the border, the only place which could be considered a "closed centre" is the special transit zone at the airport. It is not considered to be a place of detention, because asylum seekers are free to leave when they decide to leave the country and are thus considered to stay in the transit zone voluntarily. The Human Rights Advisory Board is of the opinion that the obligation to stay in the special part of the transit zone which is separated as a zone "to secure the refusal of entry to the territory" (Zurückweisungszone), where social counsellors do not have access, must be considered a deprivation of personal liberty under the Federal Constitutional Law of 29 November 1988 on the Protection of Personal Liberty. However, there are voices in literature which do not share this view.[131]

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

UNHCR generally and NGOs if they wish to see detainees known to them have access to asylum seekers who are in detention. According to Sect. 21 § 3 of the Detention Regulation (Anhalteordnung), legal advisors and representatives of "institutions which have been installed by International Agreements for the Protection of Human Rights" and other persons have access if it is demonstrated that their visits are of importance for an asylum seeker's personal affairs. In addition, some NGOs have contracts with the Ministry of the Interior to provide social care for aliens in detention pending deportation.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

1) and 2) If an arrest under the Asylum Act 2005 can be considered an act of "immediate administrative instruction and compulsion", a complaint can be filed before the Independent Administrative Tribunals, according to Art. 129a of the Constitution. The request of the asylum authority to detain an asylum seeker who has absconded from a care facility or whose residence is unknown (Sect. 26 Asylum Act 2005; Festnahmeauftrag), is not taken by formal decision, therefore no remedy is granted.

An asylum seeker can file a complaint against an order imposing detention pending deportation before the Independent Administrative Tribunal which is competent for the territory of the district administrative authority where the asylum seeker has been arrested. (Sect. 82 et seq. Aliens Police Act). The complaint can be submitted to the authority which has arrested him or her or to the authority which has ordered the arrest, the respective authority having to submit the complaint to the Independent Administrative Tribunal within two days. If the detention has ended earlier, the authority has to notify the Tribunal of a complaint without undue delay. The Independent Administrative Tribunal has to decide on the continuation of detention within one week (Sect. 83 § 2 Aliens Police Act). The deadline is prolonged if the Tribunal rejects the complaint to the complainant for the purpose of its amendment in case relevant information is missing (Sect. 83 § 3 Aliens Police Act).

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

The Directive is in principle applicable to cases of detention. During detention no benefits of welfare support are granted according to the Federal and Laender Acts[132], but they are suspended. Only the Basic Welfare Support Act for Upper Austria does not foresee this exception. When detention ends, the asylum seeker is again entitled to benefits under these Acts. In Lower Austria, he or she has to appear before the competent authority (ie the Government) in order to be granted reception conditions again.

Since during detention, the Federation is responsible for the well-being of detainees, reception conditions are being based on a federal legal basis. The applicable norm is the Detention Regulation (a legislative regulation issued by the Ministry of the Interior; Anhalteordnung). According to Sect. 1 § 2 the text of this regulation must be held available in the place of detention in the official languages of the UN, in the languages of the countries surrounding Austria[133] and in Croatian, Romanian, Serbian and Turkish languages. The detainee may ask for a language version upon his choice. In the rooms where people are detained, a list of their rights and duties under the regulation must be available in a shortened version.
According to Sect. 10 § 1, necessary health care shall be effected by a public health officer (Amtsarzt), or it has to be assured that a medical treatment by a physician is guaranteed without undue delay if necessary. According to Sect. 7 § 3 all detainees have to undergo a medical screening before the public health officer without undue delay, but within 24 hours at the latest. If the state of health of an asylum seeker requires, the asylum seeker can also be kept in detention in a suitable hospital according to Sect. 78 § 7 Aliens Police Act.

[132] Sect. 2 § 3 Federal Basic Welfare Support Act, Sect. 2 § 2 Burgenland, Sect. 3 § 4 Carinthia, Sect. 10 Lower Austria, Sect. 3 § 2 Styria, Sect. 10 Salzburg, Sect. 2 § 8 Tyrol, Sect. 1 § 4 Vienna, Sect. 7a § 1 Vorarlberg.
[133] Italian, Slowenian, Hungarian, Slowak and Chech languages.

According to Sect. 21 § 3 the legal advisor of an asylum seeker has access to the place of detention. However, this requires that the advisor has already been commissioned by the asylum seeker for his or her representation. NGOs are allowed to provide only social counselling under their contracts with the Ministry.[134] In Tyrol, Upper Austria and Vienna, the contract for social counselling in police detention centres has been concluded with the NGO Verein Menschenrechte Österreich, an organisation which has come in for a lot of criticism on the part of other NGOs working in the field and was accused of partiality because it also provides legal counselling on voluntary return in detention centres.[135] It should be added that according to Austrian procedural rules the authority which is carrying out a procedure (eg. upon a complaint against detention before the Independent Administrative Tribunal) has the duty to inform about procedural rights and duties and "lead" parties through the procedure (Manuduktionspflicht).

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

The conditions of detention are laid down in the Detention Regulation which contains (in some cases very detailed) provisions on the detainees' rights to places of detention adequate for the protection of their dignity and health, hygiene of places of detention, clothing if necessary, adequate food etc. Benefits under the respective Welfare Support Acts are explicitly suspended for the duration of detention. Therefore asylum seekers do not receive pocket money. Asylum seekers in detention are accommodated together with other detainees[136] in ordinary prison-like detention centres. There is no effective access to legal counselling and to health care that goes beyond screenings effected by the public health officer. According to a member of the Human Rights Advisory Board, detention of asylum seekers is sometimes unnecessarily prolonged because the two different databases used – the aliens information system and the asylum seekers information system – are not compatible, therefore information is not adequately shared between the authorities.

[135] See for example http://www.asyl.at/fakten_2/betr_2006_01.htm, http://no-racism.net/old/staatsrassismus/schubhaftbetreuung_ausschaltung_010303.htm, recently Der Standard, 30 May 2006.
[136] They are accommodated together with persons arrested by police organs, persons convicted of administrative infractions or detained upon a formal decision for other reasons under aliens or security legislation.

As far as adequate health care is concerned, a report of the Human Rights Advisory Board of 2007[137] states that in practice there is a problem of communication between doctors and patients which is on the one hand due to the lack of translators, but also due to the fact that doctors in such cases often do not see the need to communicate with patients but only provide information to the authorities, there being no sanctions for inadequate information of patients. Information provided between private/hospital doctors and public health officials (responsible inside detention centres) is equally considered inadequate. These factors may be considered a structural problem and bear a risk that situations escalate. In one case a similar situation may have contributed to an unexpected death, which was the motive for the report and induced the Human Rights Advisory Board to issue a formal recommendation to the Minister of the Interior.

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

According to Sect. 7 § 3 Detention Regulation all detainees will have do undergo a medical screening within 24 hours at the latest. If they are considered unfit for detention in the detention centre, detention has to be continued in a hospital (Sect. 78 § 7 Aliens Police Act).

As for regulations concerning minors see below at L.

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

According to Sect. 79 § 3 Aliens Police Act and Sect. 4 § 4 Detention Regulation minors shall be detained together with their parent/s unless the welfare of the minor requires otherwise. According to Sect. 77 Aliens Police Act more lenient measures have to be applied to minors, unless there is reason to believe that the aims of detention cannot be reached. Minors under 16 years old may only be detained if accommodation and care adequate to his or her age and adolescence can be guaranteed (Sect. 79 § 2 Aliens Police Act). The Ministry of the Interior has issued an administrative instruction[138] according to which detention must be the last resort vis-à-vis minors and minors under 14 years must not be detained. If necessary, more lenient measures can be imposed.[139] Moreover, it stipulates that in cases where the authority cannot exactly determine the age of an alien who claims to be a minor, the authorities have to start from the assumption that he or she is a minor. Minors in detention must not be detained together with adults (apart from their parents or family members) according to Sect. 4 § 3 Detention Regulation.

In practice, these requirements do not seem to be met. The independent Human Rights Advisory Board installed at the Ministry of the Interior has issued a report in 2000, criticising that conditions of detention were not adequate to the needs of minors. In the meantime, the Ministry of the Interior has taken up several proposals, issuing among others the above mentioned instruction. However, it seems that the practical situation, especially for unaccompanied minors in detention, has not much improved. Minors are often taken in detention, because their declaration as to their age is not found credible. Sometimes, minors are taken in detention as minors, but then fall within the ordinary detention regime in practice. This situation is also due to the fact that police detention centres are not adequately equipped with staff, and since the police reform in 2005 they have been assigned more tasks without being accorded more personnel.[140] Sometimes, the age of the minor is determined by expert opinions estimating the age of the asylum seeker, the reliability of which is questioned by NGOs. However, sometimes persons are also deemed to be adults but in detention treated as minors.[141]

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

Minors who are in detention do not have access to education.[142]

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

The Ministry of the Interior informed, that in April 2006 a total number of 215 asylum seekers were registered in detention pending deportation under Sect. 76 § 2 Aliens Police Act. This number contains asylum seekers as well as persons whose applications have been finally rejected. It further informed that in the reference date of 30 April 2006, 13.233 procedures were being carried out in the first instance, 28.624 in the second instance.

NGOs give a number of 900 detainees at the moment, which is a proportion of 1:31, compared to asylum seekers under reception conditions. Compared to the number of asylum procedures actually pending before the first and second instance[143] – 40.521 – this would be a ratio of 2,2% of asylum seekers in detention.

The latest statistic of the first half-year 2006 shows the following numbers of detention orders (!) issued:

According to the Ministry of the Interior, 171 minors were in detention pending deportation in 2005, among which 14 persons aged between 14 and 16 years, 157 between 16 and 18 years. In the period between 1st January 2006 and 31st March 2006 there were 52 minors in detention pending deportation, among whom 2 persons aged between 14 and 16 years, 50 between 16 and 18 years.[144]

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

[144] Answer of the Minister of the Interior to a parliamentary inquiry, available at http://www.parlinkom.gv.at/pls/portal/docs/page/PG/DE/XXII/AB/AB_04012/FNANAMEORIG_063953.HTML (answer to questions 62 and 63).

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)[145]

See Q.10.
All federal care facilities are public.

In most Laender there are few small public accommodation centres. Only in Styria and Tyrol accommodation is managed to a large extent by the Government. More frequently care facilities are private (mainly hotels, private pensions, flats), and are managed either by private innkeepers of by NGOs. Such premises are often made available for welfare support because they are situated in remote areas and cannot be used for the purpose of tourism.[146] These premises fall under the category of "organised facilities" in Austria – to be distinguished from private places of asylum seekers who receive reception conditions in money.
Organised facilities are financially supported by the state. They receive a maximum amount of 17,- Euro per day per asylum seeker for providing accommodation and food, as laid down in Art. 19 no. 1 Basic Welfare Support Agreement – the actual amounts paid are laid down in the contracts with the care providers. For the high standard usually granted in facilities run by NGOs, this amount is not adequate and NGOs will have to finance parts of these accommodation centres themselves.
Additional equipment like playgrounds and leisure activities is often financed on donations.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?[147]

There are four federal care facilities, among which two initial reception centres (Thalham and Traiskirchen). In the Laender there are approximately 600 care facilities.[148]

Statistics do not differentiate between public and private (organised) facilities. The following chart only shows the number of places in organised facilities in comparison with individual private accommodation.

Lower Austria	56 accommodation centres	2100 asylum seekers
Lower Austria	Private apartments	1600 asylum seekers
Burgenland	15 accommodation centres	533 asylum seekers
Vienna	31 accommodation centres	2663 asylum seekers
Vienna	Private apartments	5900 asylum seekers

Tyrol	22 accommodation centres	1100 asylum seekers
Tyrol	Private apartments	460 asylum seekers
Vorarlberg	40 accommodation centres	750 asylum seekers

Source: ICF II- Report, p 17

Note: This is no complete list, but serves as an example for how much the situation differs between the Laender. Special premises for unaccompanied minor refugees are not included.

Other available numbers specify that in Vorarlberg there are 5 accommodation centres (for more than 40 people) and 220 private facilities (care facilities run by privates and individual accommodation).[149] In Salzburg there are 2 accommodation centres and 17 private facilities.[150] In Tyrol there are 15 public accommodation centres and 6 private guesthouses.[151]

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

After a positive decision on admissibility, asylum seekers are to be spread among the Laender according to a quota which shall be set in relation to the population of the Laender (currently according to the census of 2001). Other criteria like individual needs of the beneficiary, ethnic particularities, country of origin and family unification are also to be taken into account. This helps to avoid a concentration of asylum seekers in certain areas.[152]

Costs are shared according to the Basic Welfare Support Agreement between the Federation and the Laender at a ratio of 60:40.

The figures which could be gathered on the distribution of asylum seekers between the Laender are the following:

Land	Actual rate	Quota %	Target rate	Compliance with quota %	Deviation from quota
Burgenland	730	3,4554	977	74,70	-247

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a role for the actors or any other role?[153]

There is no body representing all actors, particularly not NGOs. Asylkoordination plays an important role, because it comprises some of the most important organisations and is a platform of exchange of information and ideas of these organisations and a basis for joint projects. In the Laender, NGOs or private care providers may be involved on an informal basis, depending on the government officials in charge.[154] There is an office responsible for distributing asylum seekers to the Laender (see above at Q.10.), and a Coordination Council, see below Q.39.

Q.39. Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

For the system of federal care, the Ministry of the Interior is responsible (department for basic welfare support for refugees). All the governments of the Laender have one refugee coordinator or refugee commissioner. These organs are responsible for the administration as well as the monitoring of the reception system in the Laender. In some Laender where reception conditions are organised by the governments directly, they have an immediate control function, in other Laender, where tasks have been outsourced to other institutions like NGOs or to the Fonds Soziales Wien in Vienna, the monitoring function is in fact often also to a large extent taken over by the organisations, according to their contracts with the governments. In most of the Laender, the refugee coordinators are installed in the departments of social affairs. Only in Carinthia and Vorarlberg they belong to the department for internal affairs.

In addition, a Coordination Council for the Federation and the Laender (Bund-Länder-Koordinationsrat; Art. 5 Basic Welfare Support Agreement) has been created, which is composed of the Federal Ministry of the Interior and the Refugee Coordinators in the Laender and whose task it is to resolve problems arising from sudden challenges, the interpretation of the Agreement, the allocation of costs and audit, or other extraordinary incidents.

Q.39. B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?[155]

In practice this depends on the Land. There is eg. no catalogue of standards in Vorarlberg, where asylum seekers live mainly in private accommodation and standards are generally high.[156] There is a catalogue of standards in Salzburg, which has been issued by the Government and published on the internet. Other Laender applied (different) standard requirements when they tendered accommodation facilities after entry into force of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement. They applied rationing schemes attributing points for certain conditions (eg. for qualified staff, running water in the rooms, warm meals, the distance to a public school, the existence of television etc).[157]

The Ministry of the Interior reminded that under Art. 6 § 1 of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement accommodation has to be effected in appropriate accommodation facilities, taking into account the respect of human dignity and family unity, and provided the following list of minimum standards for federal care facilities:

- Persons belonging to different families should be accommodated separately. This requirement may be departed from temporarily in times of a high number of asylum seekers. In any case, nationality, ethnic group and different religious denominations must be taken into account.
- The Laender have different norms of minimum standards for accommodation facilities. In any case standard equipment must include a bed, mattress, a pillow, a blanket, sheets, a towel, a cupboard, chair and table in proper condition. The landlord is responsible for the cleaning of sheets every 14 days. Sanitary facilities must be made accessible at any time. The cleaning and heating of rooms has to be done as appropriate. In the federal care facilities, cleaning is mostly done by asylum seekers, cleaning implements are being provided.
- There are provisions concerning food, social care, clothing supply etc.
- The company „European Home Care" which was charged with care, meals and social care within the federal care facilities has an internal system of quality management and quality control. There are detailed and comprehensive organisational schedules and flow charts for administration, accommodation, care and meals. Of course monitoring is done by the head of the care facility and initial reception centre.

- The forms of care provision have to be adapted to particular groups of persons with special needs (eg. pregnant women, minors, mentally disabled persons, physically disabled persons, traumatised persons and victims of violence).
- Private accommodation facilities are being controlled regularly and controls are supposed to be further expanded.

Q.39. C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?[158]

The Refugee Coordinators of the Laender are responsible for organising the whole care system, unless they have contracts with NGOs which provide care. They take individual decisions on granting and withdrawal of benefits and have the right to issue instructions vis à vis the management of public accommodation centres or private guesthouses or NGOs providing other benefits on the basis of a contract.

Q.39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?[159]

There is no information as to whether such reports exist.

The Coordination Council shall issue regular reports concerning the transposition of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement, the first report was supposed to be made on 1st May 2005. The frequency of the issuing of such reports is to be set by the Coordination Council. These reports are apparently not public, since none could be found gathered and was not made available upon request by the Ministry of the Interior.

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

The number given by the Ministry of the Interior for 19 May 2006 is 28.364 persons.

Q.40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?[160]

[158] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[159] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

A total budget cannot be given, because the Laender calculate independently and often benefits granted (like psychological care, schooling for asylum seekers etc) are not cited under the title of care for asylum seekers. The most reliable figure is probably the amount given in the explanatory notes of the Government Bill for the Basic Welfare Support Agreement: the estimated costs of reception conditions amounted to Euro 125.675.660,00, based on the assumption that 16 000 asylum seekers are in the care system (based on figures of 2002). – In view of the above mentioned number of asylum seekers enjoying reception conditions of course this figure is no longer up to date.

Q.40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?[161]

The Government Bills for a Basic Welfare Support Act for Burgenland and Upper Austria calculated € 7.300,- per person and year.

Q.40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

The costs covered by the federal and local governments are laid down in the Basic Welfare Support Agreement – these are the amounts that are taken as basis when the costs of reception are shared between the Federation and the Laender after an analysis done by the Coordination Council (Koordinationsrat) on numbers of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions at a certain date. The costs incurred during the first year after an application has been made are shared between the Federation and the Laender at a ration of 60:40. If a final decision on the application has not been taken after one year, the Federation has to cover the costs incurred after that time (the reasons for this rule being that the Federation is responsible for the carrying out of the asylum procedure, and is therefore responsible if an application has not been decided within that time). The costs falling at the expense of the Laender are shared between them in proportion to their population.

However, the amounts laid down in the Basic Welfare Support Agreement are also the maximum amounts paid to NGOs in case they are the ones organising reception conditions (eg. Caritas in Vorarlberg, Salzburg, Upper Austria; Diakonie doing legal counselling in Vienna and Lower Austria). Bearing in mind the amount paid (eg. 16 Euro per day for legal counselling, 17 Euro per day for accommodation of asylum seekers per person) it is to be assumed that these NGOs cannot operate without co-financing reception conditions.

Q.40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the national provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?[162]

According to the information given by the Ministry of the Interior, the personal and financial resources necessary to provide reception conditions to asylum seekers have been allocated. The costs of all measures are shared between the Federation and the Laender according to the Basic Welfare Support Agreement. The maximum amounts paid to NGOs which provide accommodation, care or counselling are also calculated upon these provisions, but finally accorded with them by means of contracts under private law. The competitive situation on the market thus created for NGOs granting reception conditions urges NGOs to conclude contracts on the basis of terms, under which they could not keep the high standard currently achieved. Counselling is eg. provided for by the Agreement at a ration of one counsellor per 170 asylum seekers (Art. 9 no. 9 Basic Welfare Support Agreement). The amount paid to organisations providing organised accommodation and food may amount to a maximum of 17,- Euro per person per day (Art. 9 no. 1). Apparently European Homecare tendered 12,90 Euro per day per person when it won the contract to provide accommodation, food, care and counselling in the federal care facilities.[163] It should be added that higher amount are being paid to organisations if they are providing special forms of accommodation creating higher expenses, eg. for unaccompanied minors. Care measures granted by NGOs are co-financed by them and joint projects; see also what has been said regarding psychotherapy for persons with special needs, special conditions for minors and other specially vulnerable groups (above at Q.30.B).

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions? [164]

A total number cannot be given because different forms of reception conditions not only shared by the Federation and the Laender, but are often provided by NGOs on the basis of contracts with the federal entities or on their own initiative.
For the Federation, about 114 persons are working in four federal care facilities and two initial reception centres. This number does not include the personnel of European Homecare.

Q.41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?[165]

There is no compulsory training foreseen in legislation.

The Federation obliged people in charge of social care to attend at least one seminar in the first half of 2006. It offers a series of seminars on criminal law, intercultural communication strategies, methods of de-escalation and seminars providing knowledge on specific groups of refugees (eg. Chechens who are a relatively large group in Austria).[166] The Ministry of the Interior informs that European Homecare which is responsible for providing reception conditions in the initial reception centres, has had experience in social care for many years and extensive quality management.

Apparently persons working with minors must have a special pedagogical education.[167] NGOs which run care facilities or provide social care in public facilities have multi-professional trained staff of both genders. Some operators of care facilities offer training for their staff, but generally there is no training, especially for innkeepers that run private facilities and their personnel. Regional training in the Laender is not provided.[168]

Q.41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?[169]

There are no general rules of deontology, unless they are applied by NGOs on their staff. Public service employees have to keep information gathered confidential under the Constitution and the Data Protection Act 2000. Operators of care facilities working on the basis of a contract with the Federation must oblige their personnel to observe confidentiality according to Sect. 4 § 2 of the Federal Basic Welfare Support Agreement. Similar provisions exist in all of the Laender.[170]

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

Apart from the possible differences in meaning in the expression "zuweisen", where the English version speaks of "confinement" in Art. 7 § 3 of the Directive, no significant problems with the translation of the directive into German can be stated.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

The Federal Care Provision Act was issued in 1991 (FLG 405/1991) and is still the basis of the Federal Welfare Support Act. The name and the content (notably the legal entitlement to benefits is new) have been changed at the occasion of the transposition of the Welfare Support Agreement concluded with the Laender.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

The legal rules did on the one hand become more clear and precise, on the other hand the system of burden sharing between the Federation and the Laender did make the situation more complicated. The system as it stands might be considered useful and adequate for the moment to guarantee reception conditions in practice, but there are still loopholes and major inequalities in the treatment of asylum seekers).

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

There have been significant changes in national law, which were basically made before the time frame set by the Directive. Major changes were introduced already in 2004 into the Federal Care Provision Act (FLG I 32/2004). Under the Basic Welfare Support Agreement there is now a clear distribution of responsibilities between the federal entities and a list of benefits they are obliged to guarantee. All the Laender have now, if not enacted, at least foreseen legislation to guarantee these benefits.

Some provisions are included in the Asylum Act 2005 or the Aliens Police Act, which have been completely renewed in 2005 (Aliens Law Package; Fremdenrechtspaket, see FLG I 100/2005). The new legislation made the whole system of aliens law more restrictive, taking into account not only the present, but above all also other EG-directives in the field.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

There has been an important debate about granting reception conditions to asylum seekers in general, which has started already before the transposition of the Directive was due. The significant rise in asylum seekers starting in the end of the 1990ies, that reached its high in 2002 (see the chart below), was not accompanied by an adequate rise in accommodation organised by the Federation and the Laender, leaving a large number of asylum seekers in homelessness and dependant on care and support from NGOs. NGOs complained every winter about high numbers of homeless asylum seekers who could not get a place in federal or Laender care.[171] Since according to the repartition of competences under the Austrian Constitution the Laender are basically responsible to take care of people in need of support, the Federation urged them to make more efforts to take asylum seekers into their care and issued an administrative directive in October 2002 prescribing that basic benefits be refused to asylum seekers coming from certain countries (eg. Nigeria, Georgia, Armenia)[172]. Often asylum seekers were dismissed from care facilities because they were accused of having lodged asylum applications for reasons which would not entitle them to the asylum status (asylfremde Motive). In January 2003 the High Court issued a decision stating that asylum seekers had the right to be taken into federal care if they fulfilled the criteria laid down by law.[173] In October 2003 the Minister of the Interior issued a regulation stating that care facilities could only be created with prior consent of the mayors of the municipalities in question. Due to the [172] UNHCR Press Release of 29 January 2003, see http://www.unhcr.at/index.php/cat/17/aid/547.

[173] At the time asylum seekers were not granted a right to reception conditions under the Federal Care Act, and decisions were not taken under the Administrative Procedures Act. The High Court ruled that the equality principle laid down in the Austrian Constitution was applicable coming to the said result that asylum seekers could not be excluded for other reasons than those laid down by law (see OGH 24 February 2003, 1Ob272/02k).

strong opposition of the local authorities, the creation of new care facilities for asylum seekers was severely blocked.[174]

The conclusion of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement was considered a success in the parliamentary discussion and met the approval of the three big parties in Parliament[175] in the ballot of 24 March 2003. The Greens had voted in favour of the Agreement in the Parliamentary Committee on Internal Affairs, but finally opposed the Government Bill in the ballot and criticised that the sums of money determined for the respective welfare support benefits could not suffice to meet an asylum seeker's basic needs.[176] Negotiations between the Federation and the Laender had concentrated not only on the repartition of the financial burden of reception conditions, but also on the amount of asylum seekers to be taken into the care of the Laender.

The Minister of the Interior emphasised that the number of accommodation places had significantly increased and that all asylum seekers were finally taken into federal care. He referred to the Directive underlining that Austria was one year ahead of the deadline for the implementation of the Directive and that finally a consistent care system throughout the county was created, which would allow closing the gap in accommodation mourned by NGOs.[177] However, the Minister did not take into account that the Federal Care Act was not designed to be the basis of welfare support for the future, but much would depend on the implementation of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement in the Laender. Since the Basic Welfare Support Agreement had been concluded on the basis of 16.000 asylum seekers to be taken into care, the places available in the Laender were insufficient in view of the numbers of asylum seekers which had been much higher than the calculated 16.000 already in 2001. Some Laender regularly stopped accepting newly arrived asylum seekers and Carinthia considered cancelling the Agreement, but finally refrained from doing so.[178] In October 2004 – after the Basic Welfare Support Agreement had entered into force – the situation was still precarious, particularly because the opposition in the municipality of Traiskirchen – which hosts a large initial reception centre and federal care facility – against the high numbers of asylum seekers accommodated there was rising. When numbers of asylum seekers within the care system started to go down again, the situation relaxed a little. Today – due to a rise in places of accommodation, but in particular due to falling numbers of applications for international protection – the places available in ordinary care facilities seem sufficient for the moment. However, there are no big emergency capacities available for cases of unexpected accommodation shortages. The problems in the factual implementation of reception conditions, particularly in the fields of information, social care and medical care for persons with special needs have been demonstrated in the above questions.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

There were no provisions more favourable in legislation concerning reception conditions. However, while asylum seekers were according to the Federal Care Provision Act legally entitled to benefits under the care system, there is no such entitlement now in Laender which have failed to provide for it in their legislation.
In addition, employment legislation has changed in a way that it now requires an alien to have a right to establishment to obtain a more favourable work permit. These changes have excluded asylum seekers form obtaining such work permits. Although even under the earlier legislation, more favourable work permits were hardly ever granted to asylum seekers, the fact that they were considered "available" on the labour market opened the possibility for them to be granted access to unemployment benefits and vocational training. Apparently there are still a lot of cases before the authorities today, where interest groups of employees are trying to make sure that such benefits be granted to their clients.[179] These options have now been factually excluded.

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?[180]

Weaknesses stated by NGOs lie within the fact that there are no nationwide standards for reception conditions and that the system lacks transparency. There are especially different standards in the field of training of staff of accommodation facilities, financial allowances to asylum seekers, social and legal counselling of asylum seekers and offers for vulnerable groups.[181]

[179] Information given by a member of the Upper Austrian Chamber of Labour.
[180] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[181] Information given by NGOs.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States[182]

The Ministry of the Interior emphasises that at least three Laender (Tyrol, Vienna and Vorarlberg) have created special accommodation facilities for single women (with or without children) or accommodate these persons in shared facilities for women or centres for women with children (which have been created not only for asylum seekers). The other Laender try for a separate accommodation of women, too. A special accommodation facility for women exists also in the initial reception centre Ost in Traiskirchen
As far as medical care is concerned, there is a ward in the initial reception centre as well, where four general practitioners are working. Moreover there are four specialists trained in psychiatry. Projects of NGOs provide an accommodation facility for women and one for unaccompanied minors and offer psychotherapeutic and social care there.

In general, it can be said that the projects run by NGOs (often co-financed also by the Federal or Laender Government and the European Refugee Fund) provide an indispensable care at a very high standard. This accounts for social counselling in accommodation facilities and to aliens in detention as well as to psychiatric treatment for victims of torture and other traumatised persons. Several of these projects have also been mentioned as models of good practice in the Final Report of the European Open Forum on Reception and Health Care of Asylum Seekers in Vienna, in January this year.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answers.

It seems that Länder did not consider to transpose the Directive, but focussed on the transposition of the Basic Welfare Support Agreement, and have tried to adapt it to their ideas of policy vis-à-vis asylum seekers eg. in the areas of withdrawal of benefits. The Laender which have always had contracts with NGOs and obviously envisaged to do so further on have not put much emphasis on the integration of basic requirements in legislation, but have decided to set standards in their contracts with care-providers.

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

Une première loi intitulée « loi du 12 janvier 2007 sur l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile et de certaines autres catégories d'étrangers » (ci-dessous loi « accueil ») a été publiée au Moniteur belge le 7 mai 2007.

Un arrêté royal du 9 avril 2007 détermine la date d'entrée en vigueur de la loi « accueil ». Les dispositions qui ne sont pas liées à l'entrée en vigueur de la nouvelle procédure d'asile sont entrées en vigueur à dater de la publication au Moniteur belge, à savoir le 7 mai 2007 (article 1er). Par contre les dispositions liées à la nouvelle procédure d'asile entreront en vigueur le 1er juin, date d'entrée en vigueur de la nouvelle procédure d'asile (article 2).

Une deuxième loi intitulée « loi du 21 avril 2007 modifiant le Code judiciaire en ce qui concerne les contestations relatives à l'octroi, à la révision et au refus de l'aide matérielle » (ci-dessous loi « modifiant le Code judiciaire » a également été publiée au Moniteur belge le 7 mai 2007.

Cette loi est entrée en vigueur le 7 mai 2007 (article 4).

Il s'agit de lois adoptées par les autorités fédérales. Elles concernent uniquement la transposition de la directive « accueil ».

Elles font partie d'un ensemble de projets de lois destinés à :
- réformer la procédure d'asile,
- prévoir un mécanisme de protection subsidiaire,
- transposer la directive regroupement familial ;
- et la directive « accueil ».

Cette réforme globale justifie selon l'exposé des motifs de la loi « accueil » le retard de transposition. « La directive devait être transposée en droit belge pour le 6 février 2005 au plus tard (article 26 de la directive). Dans un souci de clarté, on a choisi de lier le présent projet de loi à celui relatif à la réforme de la procédure d'asile, ce qui explique le dépassement du délai de transposition » (exposé des motifs, p. 1).

La directive confirme pour partie le système appliqué avant son entrée en vigueur, à savoir l'accueil des candidats réfugiés en centres ouverts. Le projet ne concerne que ce type d'accueil et non la détention de certains candidats réfugiés en centres fermés.

Certaines dispositions de la directive sont transposées par des autres projets, mais la plupart des articles transposant la directive accueil figurent dans la loi « accueil ».

La loi « accueil » ne concerne que les mesures de transposition qui entrent dans les compétences du Ministre fédéral de l'Intégration sociale. Certaines mesures ressortent à la compétence du Ministre fédéral de l'Intérieur, de l'emploi ou des communautés et régions (scolarisation et éducation des mineurs (Communautés), formation professionnelle (Régions).

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

- Put as an annex to your report a paper copy of each norm in the original language with a reference number to help the reader to find it easily;

- Send us as an electronic version of each norm or a weblink to the text (this will be used for the website we are building);
- Provide the texts of any translation of the above norms into English if they are available.

La transposition – très - partielle a été assurée dès 2005 par un arrêté royal du 3 février 2005 modifiant l'arrêté royal du 8 octobre 1981 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers, entré en vigueur le 8 février 2005. L'article 1er de cet arrêté royal qui ne compte que trois articles supprime le délai de huit jours ouvrables qui figurait dans l'article 73 de l'arrêté royal du 8 octobre 1981 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers. Cette disposition concerne la remise aux candidats réfugiés de l'annexe 26 qui est le document attestant de l'introduction de la demande de reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié.

Le Conseil d'Etat, dans son avis, a souligné que le projet de loi « accueil » n'assurait pas la transposition totale de la directive. « 1.3. Il découle des observations qui précédent que le projet de loi déposé devant les chambres législatives n'assurera pas la transposition complète en droit belge de la directive 2003/9/CE. Si, bien entendu, rien ne s'oppose à ce qu'une directive soit transposée en droit interne par plusieurs instruments juridiques, il convient toutefois de veiller à ne pas présenter une transposition partielle comme étant complète ».

Le dispositif d'accueil d'application (avant l'entrée en vigueur de la loi « accueil ») est fondé sur diverses bases légales :

> - la loi du 8 juillet 1976 organique des centres publics d'action sociale ;
> - la loi-programme du 19 juillet 2001 (base légale de l'Agence FEDASIL), telle que modifiée par les lois-programmes du 22 décembre 2003 et du 27 décembre 2004) ;
> - la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers.

Il n'est pas fort éloigné du prescrit de la directive, ce qui a sans doute rendu la transposition moins urgente que dans d'autres Etats membres. La loi « accueil » vise non seulement la transposition mais aussi une coordination des textes. L'avis de la section de législation du Conseil d'Etat souligne que le projet a pour objectif, outre la transposition de la directive accueil, d'assurer la coordination des textes et de préciser « au regard de la directive 2003/9/CE, les dispositions de droit interne déjà actuellement en vigueur, notamment en ce qui concerne, d'une part, les diverses composantes de l'aide matérielle déjà actuellement octroyée aux demandeurs d'asile dans des structures d'accueil gérées par ou sous le contrôle de l'Agence créée par l'article 60 de la loi-programme du 19 juillet 2001 et, d'autre part, les droits et obligations liés à cette aide matérielle et ce, tant dans le chef du demandeur d'asile lui-même, que de l'Agence, des partenaires de l'accueil et des membres du personnel des structures d'accueil ».

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

Le législateur fédéral est compétent en ce qui concerne :

- l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile, c'est à dire la détermination du mode d'accueil, en l'occurrence la création de centres ouverts où est dispensée l'aide matérielle, la réglementation de l'aide sociale financière pour les candidats réfugiés qui y ont droit ;
- la délivrance des documents de séjour ;
- l'aide médicale ;
- l'aide juridique ;
- l'aide sociale dans les centres ;
- le droit au travail de certains candidats réfugiés ;
- la tutelle sur les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés.

Les communautés (entités fédérées) sont compétentes en ce qui concerne l'aide à la jeunesse et la scolarisation des mineurs d'âge (compétences en matière d'aide à la jeunesse en vertu de l'article 5, § 1er, II, 6° de la loi spéciale de réformes institutionnelles du 8 août 1980).

Les régions sont compétentes en ce qui concerne la formation professionnelle des majeurs (articles 4 et 6, § 1er, IX de la loi spéciale de réformes institutionnelles du 8 août 1980).

En matière d'accueil, les compétences sont dévolues à une agence spécialisée, l'Agence fédérale pour l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile.

Le Ministre compétent est le Ministre qui a l'Intégration sociale dans ses attributions, et dont relève l'Agence fédérale pour l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile.

Le livre IV de la loi « accueil » définit le statut, les missions et les compétences de l'agence.

Il s'agit d' « un organisme public doté de la personnalité juridique ». Sa structure, son organisation et son fonctionnement devront être déterminés par arrêté royal.

L'article 56 indique que « l'Agence a notamment pour mission d'assurer l'organisation, la gestion et le contrôle de la qualité de l'aide matérielle octroyée aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil » et qu'elle « peut octroyer des subventions en relation avec ses missions ».

Elle est notamment chargée de :

- l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil au sein des structures d'accueil communautaires qu'elle gère ;
- le contrôle de l'exécution des conventions relatives à l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil avec les partenaires ;
- la désignation, la modification et la suppression du lieu obligatoire d'inscription;
- l'organisation du paiement d'une allocation journalière et de la prestation de services communautaires ;
- la transition en cas de transfert d'une structure d'accueil vers un C.P.A.S. ;
- de la coordination du retour volontaire des demandeurs d'asile et des autres étrangers ;
- de l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux mineurs non accompagnés dans le cadre de la phase d'observation et d'orientation ;
- de l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux mineurs séjournant avec leurs parents illégalement sur le territoire et dont l'état de besoin a été constaté par un centre public d'action sociale, lorsque les parents ne sont pas en mesure d'assumer leur devoir d'entretien ;
- l'agence est l'autorité responsable pour le Fonds européen des réfugiés.

Il est prévu, comme le fait aujourd'hui FEDASIL, que l'Agence peut conclure des conventions visant à confier à des partenaires la mission d'octroyer aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle. Il s'agit notamment de la Croix-Rouge de Belgique, d'autres autorités, les pouvoirs publics et les associations (article 62).

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

La directive est transposée par des lois adoptées au niveau fédéral. L'adoption d'une loi permet aux étrangers de se prévaloir du respect de celle-ci devant les tribunaux. Néanmoins, la loi « accueil » contient beaucoup de renvois à des arrêtés royaux ultérieurs qui détermineront la portée exacte des droits garantis (voir question 6).

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

Non pas nécessairement, puisqu'un système d'accueil est confirmé et des droits et obligations sont consacrés.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

Certains articles de la loi « accueil » réfèrent à un ou des arrêté[s] royal[aux] qui devra[ont] être adopté[s] après l'entrée en vigueur de la loi.

Cet arrêté royal [ou ces arrêtés royaux] devrai[en]t normalement déterminer :

- le délai dans lequel un centre public d'action sociale peut être désigné comme lieu obligatoire d'inscription en aide financière si une décision sur la demande d'asile n'a pas encore été prise par le Commissariat général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides ou par le Conseil du Contentieux des étrangers (article 11) ;

- l'aide et les soins médicaux qui, bien que repris à l'article 35 de la loi relative à l'assurance obligatoire soins de santé et indemnités coordonnée le 14 juillet 1994, ne sont pas assurés au bénéficiaire de l'accueil en ce qu'ils apparaissent comme manifestement non nécessaires, et, d'autre part, l'aide et les soins médicaux relevant de la vie quotidienne et qui bien que non repris dans la nomenclature précitée sont assurés au bénéficiaire de l'accueil (article 24);

- le code de déontologie appliqué aux membres du personnel (article 50) ;

- le programme d'aide au retour volontaire proposé par les structures d'accueil (article 54) ;

- la structure, l'organisation et le fonctionnement de l'Agence fédérale pour l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile (article 55) ;

- les normes de qualité applicables aux structures d'accueil (article 17) ;

- le régime et des règles de fonctionnement au sein des structures (règlement d'ordre intérieur établi par le Ministre) (article 19) ;

- la limitation de l'accès aux structures d'accueil aux conseillers juridiques, aux représentants du H.C.R. et des ONG à des fins de sécurité (article 21) ;

- les modalités d'évaluation de la structure d'accueil désignée, au regard des besoins spécifiques du demandeur d'asile (article 22) ;

- les modalités de conclusion par Fedasil de conventions avec des établissements de soins ou des établissements spécialisés (soins de santé ou établissement de soins psychiatriques) (articles 26 et 30) ;

- les qualifications requises dans le chef des travailleurs sociaux (article 31) ;

- les montants relatifs à l'allocation journalière (article 34) ;

- les règles de fonctionnement des centres d'observation et d'orientation pour les mineurs non accompagnés (article 40) ;

- les modalités de passage de l'aide matérielle vers l'aide financière (article 43) ;

- le régime des mesures d'ordre: nature, modalités d'application et procédure et autorités habilitées à les prendre (article 44) ;

- les règles de procédure applicables aux sanctions (article 45) ;

- l'entrée en vigueur de la loi (article 74).

A l'heure actuelle, seuls cinq arrêtés royaux ont été publiés au Moniteur belge. Il s'agit :

- arrêté royal du 1er avril 2007 relatif à l'argent de poche visé à l'article 62§2 bis de la loi-programme du 19 juillet 2001(Moniteur belge, 18 avril 2007) ;

- arrêté royal du 9 avril 2007 déterminant l'aide et les soins médicaux manifestement non nécessaires qui ne sont pas assurés au bénéficiaire de l'accueil et l'aide et les soins médicaux relevant de la vie quotidienne qui sont assurés au bénéficiaire de l'accueil (Moniteur belge, 7 mai 2007) ;

- arrêté royal du 9 avril 2007 déterminant le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux centres d'observation et d'orientation pour les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés (Moniteur belge, 7 mai 2007);

- arrêté royal du 9 avril 2007 déterminant la date d'entrée en vigueur des dispositions de la loi « accueil » (Moniteur belge, 7 mai 2007) ;

- arrêté royal du 25 avril 2007 déterminant les modalités de l'évaluation de la situation individuelle du bénéficiaire de l'accueil (Moniteur belge, 10 mai 2007).

D'autres arrêtés royaux sont en préparation.

De plus, certaines dispositions qui n'entrent pas dans les attributions du Ministre fédéral de l'Intégration sociale n'ont pas encore fait l'objet d'une transposition (voyez Q.3).

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

La loi « accueil » et la loi « modifiant le Code judiciaire » viennent d'être publiées au Moniteur belge ce 7 mai 2007.

Les travaux préparatoires de ces lois peuvent être consultés.

De plus, l'agence fédérale pour l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile a réalisé en 2004 une étude juridique sur l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile au regard de la directive européenne 2003/9/Conseil d'Etat (http://www.fedasil.be/home/attachment/i/2811).

Une autre étude avait été réalisée par l'European Migration Network Belgium en 2005, intitulée « Reception Systems : their Capacities and the Social Situation of Asylum Applicants within the Reception System in the EU Member States ». Cette étude concerne toutefois le système actuel et pas les projets de réforme actuellement en cours de préparation.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

Rien n'a encore été publié sur les nouvelles lois transposant la directive.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

Les nouvelles lois transposant la directive viennent d'être publiées au Moniteur belge. Il n'y a donc pas encore de jurisprudence relative à celle-ci.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

L'accueil des candidats réfugiés tel que présenté par la loi « accueil » est principalement assuré dans des structures d'accueil : soit centres ouverts soit logements privatifs. Il ne doit pas masquer que de nombreux candidats réfugiés sont aussi retenus en centre fermé pendant la procédure d'asile (voyez ci-après).

La réforme de la procédure d'asile qui fond les deux phases de la recevabilité et du traitement au fond en une seule phase a des conséquences sur l'organisation de l'accueil. Tant qu'il y avait une distinction entre la procédure en recevabilité et la procédure au fond, les candidats réfugiés étaient pour l'essentiel accueillis en centres ouverts pendant la procédure de recevabilité et recevaient l'aide d'un centre public d'action sociale ou pouvaient travailler pendant la phase de l'examen au fond. La réforme vise à ce que l'accueil se fasse en centre – ouvert dans la plupart des cas mais aussi fermés dans davantage de cas qu'à l'heure actuelle - pendant toute la procédure.

L'accueil est géré par l'Agence fédérale pour l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile, plus communément appelée FEDASIL (http://www.fedasil.be/). Elle coordonne la répartition des candidats réfugiés entre différentes structures d'accueil.

Q.11. Q. 11 A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

La procédure d'asile a été réformée par deux lois du 15 septembre 2006 (loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers, M.B. 6 octobre 2006 et loi du 15 septembre 2006 réformant le Conseil d'Etat et créant un Conseil du contentieux des étrangers, M.B. 6 octobre 2006). La nouvelle procédure d'asile est entrée en vigueur le 1er juin 2007.

Avant le 1er juin 2007, la procédure d'asile comptait trois phases.

1. La détermination de l'Etat responsable (Dublin)

L'Office des étrangers, sur la base des critères communs, se prononce, dans les trois mois de l'introduction de la demande, sur la compétence des autorités belges. Si l'Etat belge est compétent, la procédure se poursuit en Belgique. Dans le cas contraire, la Belgique peut requérir de l'Etat compétent qu'il prenne en charge le candidat réfugié. Un recours peut être introduit contre la décision de l'Office des étrangers auprès du Conseil d'Etat.

2. La recevabilité

Cette phase détermine l'accès à la procédure. Elle vise à statuer sur l'entrée sur le territoire belge ou sur la régularité du séjour sur le territoire belge si l'intéressé s'y trouve déjà. Il s'agit pour l'essentiel, outre certains motifs techniques de refus d'accès, d'examiner si la demande de reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié n'est pas manifestement non fondée.

L'autorité compétente est l'Office des étrangers. Un recours contre une décision négative de l'O.E. est ouvert auprès du Commissaire général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides, il s'agit du "recours urgent" qui comporte un effet suspensif. La décision du C.G.R.A. peut être contestée auprès du Conseil d'Etat, compétent pour la suspendre et pour l'annuler. L'introduction de ces recours ne s'accompagne toutefois d'aucun effet suspensif.

3. L'éligibilité ou l'examen au fond

L'enjeu est de répondre à la question de savoir si l'étranger est un réfugié en application des critères prévus par la Convention de Genève de 1951, au terme d'un examen approfondi de son dossier.

Cet examen approfondi est effectué en premier ressort par le C.G.R.A. Un recours suspensif est ouvert contre la décision du C.G.R.A. auprès de la Commission permanente de recours des réfugiés. La décision de la C.P.R.R. peut faire l'objet d'un recours en cassation administrative non suspensif auprès du Conseil d'Etat.

Depuis le 1er juin 2007, la procédure, simplifiée, se compose de deux phases, la recevabilité et le fond n'étant plus distingués.

Le Commissaire général pour les réfugiés et pour les apatrides (CGRA) décide de reconnaître ou non le statut de réfugié ou le statut de protection subsidiaire. Une décision négative du CGRA est susceptible d'un recours de pleine juridiction auprès d'une juridiction, le Conseil du Contentieux des Etrangers (CCE), lequel peut confirmer, réformer ou annuler la décision du CGRA, auquel cas l'affaire est renvoyée à celui-ci.

Un pourvoi en cassation auprès du Conseil d'Etat peut être introduit contre une décision du CCE, qui n'a de chance d'aboutir qu'en cas de violation des formes substantielles ou prescrites à peine de nullité.

L'Office des étrangers (OE) ne rend donc plus de décision dans le cadre des demandes d'asile. Le rôle de l'OE est limité au soutien administratif ; le demandeur d'asile se présente auprès de l'OE qui :

- relève les empreintes de l'étranger ;
- détermine si un autre pays est responsable du traitement de la demande d'asile ;
- détermine la langue de la procédure ;

- prend la déclaration de l'étranger concernant son identité, sa provenance et l'itinéraire qu'il a emprunté, et concernant les possibilités de retour vers le pays qu'il a fui ;
- fournit à l'étranger un questionnaire dans lequel il est invité à expliciter les motifs pour lesquels il introduit une demande d'asile.

La loi « accueil » pose deux principes :

1. La désignation d'un lieu obligatoire d'inscription pour quatre catégories d'étrangers. Il s'agit soit d'un centre d'accueil où est dispensée une aide en nature, soit d'un centre public d'action sociale, qui leur délivre une aide financière.

Ces quatre catégories sont (article 10):

> 1° les étrangers qui sont entrés dans le Royaume sans satisfaire aux conditions fixées à l'article 2 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers et ont introduit une demande d'asile, c'est-à-dire la possession d'un passeport ou d'un titre de voyage le cas échéant revêtu d'un visa si nécessaire ;
> 3° les étrangers qui appartiennent aux catégories de personnes désignées par un arrêté royal délibéré en Conseil des Ministres dans le cadre de mesures spéciales visant la protection temporaire de personnes ;
> 4° les étrangers qui sont autorisés à séjourner dans le Royaume sur la base de l'article 57/30, § 1 (bénéficiaire de protection temporaire[183]), ou de l'article 57/34 (famille de l'étranger admis au séjour au titre de la protection temporaire) de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers.

Les demandeurs d'asile qui sont entrés régulièrement dans le Royaume ou qui ont introduit leur demande alors qu'ils étaient en séjour régulier ne sont pas soumis à cette désignation d'un lieu obligatoire d'inscription et bénéficient d'une aide d'un centre public d'action sociale de leur choix.

183 « Sous réserve de l'application du § 2 ou de l'article 57/32, le ministre ou son délégué autorise le bénéficiaire de la protection temporaire visé à l'article 57/29 au séjour pour une durée d'un an. Cette autorisation est renouvelée, par périodes de six mois, tant qu'il n'est pas mis fin à la protection temporaire dans un des cas prévus à l'article 57/36, § 1er ».

La loi prévoit aussi que « dans des circonstances particulières, l'agence peut déroger à la désignation d'un lieu obligatoire d'inscription ». Dans la pratique, cela pourrait viser le cas où des membres de la famille sont déjà présents sur le territoire.

2. L'accueil des candidats réfugiés se fait pour principe dans un centre d'accueil, sauf des quelques hypothèses particulières déterminées par la loi et détaillées ci-dessous (article 11).

Concernant l'aide matérielle dans un centre, l'article 6, § 1, dispose que « Le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle s'applique à tout demandeur d'asile dès l'introduction de sa demande d'asile et produit ses effets pendant toute la procédure d'asile en ce compris pendant le recours introduit devant le Conseil du Contentieux des Etrangers sur la base de l'article 39/2, § 1er, de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers. Le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle s'applique également pendant le recours en cassation administrative introduit devant le Conseil d'Etat sur la base de l'article 20, § 2, alinéa 3, de cette même loi ». Il est précisé que « le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle est maintenu durant les délais pour introduire les recours visés à l'alinéa précédent ».

> 1° tant que le Commissaire général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides ou un de ses adjoints n'ont pas pris une décision définitive sur leur demande d'asile ;
> 2° tant que le Conseil du Contentieux des Etrangers n'a pas pris une décision sur le recours contre la décision du Commissaire général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides ou d'un de ses adjoints ou, en l'absence de recours, jusqu'à l'expiration du délai pour l'introduire ».

Le candidat réfugié, à l'exclusion du bénéficiaire de la protection temporaire (les catégories visées sont les deux premières décrites ci-dessus et non les troisième et quatrième qui visent la protection temporaire), est accueilli dans une structure d'accueil pendant toute la durée de la procédure (procédure devant le Commissariat général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides et devant le Conseil du contentieux des étrangers et pendant le délai pour introduire le recours devant cette instance).

Il est cependant prévu que l'accueil dans un centre ne doit pas excéder une certaine période que les premiers projets avaient fixée à un an. La dernière version de l'article 11 substitue à cette période d'un an le principe suivant : « Un nouveau lieu obligatoire d'inscription peut être désigné si la décision visée à l'alinéa précédent, 1° et 2°, n'est pas prise dans un délai fixé par arrêté royal délibéré en Conseil des Ministres, suite à l'évaluation de la procédure d'examen des demandes d'asile ».

L'expiration de cette période maximale ne permettra par ailleurs pas aux candidats réfugiés qui ont reçu notification d'une décision négative du Conseil du Contentieux des étrangers avant l'expiration de ce délai de se voir désigner un centre public d'action sociale. « Par dérogation aux alinéas précédents, la désignation visée à l'alinéa 1er est toutefois maintenue pour les demandeurs d'asile visés à l'article 10, 1° et 2° qui ont reçu notification avant l'expiration du délai visé à l'alinéa précédent d'un arrêt du Conseil du Contentieux des Etrangers contre lequel ils ont introduit un recours en cassation administrative devant le Conseil d'Etat ».

Concernant l'aide sociale financière, l'article 8 prévoit que « L'aide sociale est octroyée par les centres publics d'action sociale lorsque la désignation d'une structure d'accueil prend fin en application de l'article 11, § 1er, ou lorsque le bénéficiaire de l'accueil s'est vu reconnaître un statut de protection temporaire en application de l'article 10, 3° ou 4° ».

En réalité, trois catégories d'étrangers vont se voir désigner un centre public d'action sociale :

1. Les étrangers qui sont entrés régulièrement sur le territoire et ont introduit ensuite une demande de reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié ou les étrangers qui séjournaient régulièrement sur le territoire et ont introduit une telle demande alors que leur séjour était toujours valable.

2. La deuxième hypothèse concerne le premier cas visé par l'article 8 : les autres candidats réfugiés pour qui le délai qui devrait être déterminé par arrêté royal délibéré en conseil des Ministres au terme d'une évaluation de la procédure d'asile est dépassé. Le candidat réfugié dont le dossier est en cours de traitement au Commissariat général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides ou devant le Conseil du contentieux des étrangers devrait alors pouvoir quitter le centre et se voir désigner un centre public d'action sociale.

   L'on rappelle que le transfert vers un centre public d'action sociale n'est pas possible si avant le délai à déterminer, une décision négative a déjà été prise par le Conseil du contentieux des étrangers et ce même si un recours en cassation administrative a été introduit devant le Conseil d'Etat.

3. Les bénéficiaires de la protection temporaire.

Q. 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

La distinction se fait peu selon les stades de procédure mais se fera plutôt sur la base du type de protection demandée et de la longueur de la résidence en centre.

Au sein de l'aide matérielle, une distinction est faite entre le logement communautaire en centre d'accueil et le logement individuel en logements privés. Cette distinction existe déjà.

La loi « accueil » (article 11§3) a pour volonté de désigner, dès le départ et tout au long de l'accueil, une structure d'accueil qui réponde le plus possible aux besoins des demandeurs d'asile accueillis, mais toujours dans la limite des places disponibles. Dans certains cas exceptionnels, Fedasil pourra également déroger à la désignation d'une structure d'accueil au demandeur au profit d'une aide sociale financière.

Certains critères tels la connaissance d'une des langues, la situation médicale, psychologique, sociale ou familiale, ... entreront en ligne de compte pour la désignation du code 207.

De même, une évaluation continue des besoins des personnes devra être mise en place dans chaque structure, et le système de transfert d'une structure à l'autre assouplit, pour permettre de répondre aux dits besoins.

Enfin, la loi prévoit qu'à l'issue d'une période de 4 mois, le demandeur d'asile pourra demander son transfert dans une structure individuelle (article 12§1). Celui ci pourra lui être accordé (décision qui sera souverainement prise par Fedasil, en fonction de la disponibilité du réseau d'accueil et à l'exception des personnes en recours au Conseil d'Etat).

Certains étrangers seront toujours en centres d'accueil (communautaires ou individuels), d'autres parfois, d'autres jamais.

Jamais :

Les candidats réfugiés qui sont entrés régulièrement sur le territoire ou qui ont introduit leur demande d'asile alors qu'ils étaient toujours en séjour régulier et les bénéficiaires de la protection temporaire ne seront jamais accueillis en centres d'accueil mais recevront l'aide financière d'un centre public d'action sociale.

Parfois :

Les autres candidats réfugiés seront accueillis en centre d'accueil pendant toute la procédure : Dublin, Commissariat général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides, conseil du contentieux des étrangers, Conseil d'Etat.

Ils pourront quitter le centre et recevoir l'aide financière d'un centre public d'action sociale au terme d'un délai qui sera déterminé par arrêté royal délibéré en conseil des ministres après une évaluation de la procédure d'asile.

Toujours :

Les candidats réfugiés qui auront reçu une décision négative du conseil du contentieux des étrangers avant l'expiration du délai qui sera déterminé en conseil des ministres.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q. 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

Dans les centres d'accueil, les candidats réfugiés reçoivent une aide en nature, alors que les centres publics d'action sociale donnent une aide financière.

L'article 3 de la loi « accueil » indique que « l'accueil doit permettre à l'étranger de mener une vie conforme à la dignité humaine ». Il est précisé que l'accueil s'entend soit de l'aide matérielle telle que définie par la loi, soit de l'aide financière telle que déterminée par la loi sur l'aide sociale (loi du 8 juillet 1976 organique des centres publics d'action sociale).

Elle définit l'aide matérielle en son article 1er : il s'agit de « l'aide octroyée par l'Agence ou le partenaire, au sein d'une structure d'accueil, et consistant notamment en l'hébergement, les repas, l'habillement, l'accompagnement médical, social et psychologique et l'octroi d'une allocation journalière. Elle comprend également l'accès à l'aide juridique, l'accès à des services tels que l'interprétariat et des formations ainsi que l'accès à un programme de retour volontaire ».

Aide en nature

La loi dispose que « Le bénéficiaire de l'accueil est hébergé dans une structure d'accueil communautaire ou individuelle » (article 16). Elle précise qu'un arrêté royal définira « les normes auxquelles les structures d'accueil doivent répondre tant en termes qualitatifs qu'en termes d'infrastructure ainsi que les modalités de contrôle par l'Agence du respect de ces normes ». (article 17) La loi précise que l' « l'aide matérielle [doit être] organisée dans le respect du principe de neutralité envers les convictions philosophiques et religieuses des bénéficiaires de l'accueil au sein de la structure d'accueil communautaire » (article 20, § 2).

La nouvelle loi ne modifie pour l'essentiel pas le fonctionnement des structures d'accueil. Il est prévu qu'un arrêté royal « détermine le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux structures d'accueil. Un règlement d'ordre intérieur établi par le Ministre en détermine les modalités d'exercice. Il est veillé à la bonne et complète compréhension de celui-ci par le bénéficiaire de l'accueil ».

L'accueil dans les structures d'accueil se fait actuellement dans plusieurs structures[184] :

- les centres d'accueil fédéraux[185], directement gérés par l'Agence ;

  Il s'agit d'anciens bâtiments, comme des casernes ou des écoles, qui ont été adaptées à la vie en communauté, ou des logements préfabriqués. Les centres sont situés sur l'ensemble du territoire belge, en milieu urbain comme à la campagne. Leur capacité d'accueil varie entre 75 et 850 places.

- les centres d'accueil gérés par la Croix-Rouge de Belgique et les Mutualités socialistes ;

  L'Administration fédérale a conclu un accord avec la Croix-Rouge de Belgique qui gère des centres d'accueil ouverts qui sont exclusivement destinés aux demandeurs d'asile durant la phase d'examen de la recevabilité de leur demande. La Croix-Rouge possède une vingtaine de centres d'accueil en Wallonie, en Flandre et à Bruxelles.

  A côté de ces centres, les Mutualités socialistes organisent également une structure d'accueil à Erezée (le centre Belle Vue), principalement destinée à des familles.

- les logements communautaires ou privés, gérés par des O.N.G. comme le C.I.R.E. et l'O.C.I.V. ;

  Ils proposent un accueil à petite échelle dans des logements particuliers.

- les logements communautaires ou privés, appelés Initiatives Locales d'accueil organisées par les C.P.A.S.

Des communes (centres publics d'action sociale) accueillent des demandeurs d'asile en accord avec Fedasil, dans des initiatives locales d'accueil (ILA).

Une ILA est la plupart du temps un logement privé meublé doté des équipements indispensables afin que les demandeurs d'asile puissent subvenir à leurs besoins quotidiens. Le CPAS assure l'accompagnement social et médical des résidents.

Tout comme dans les centres d'accueil, cette forme d'accueil est destinée aux demandeurs d'asile durant la phase de la recevabilité).

- Cuisine

Le rapport FEDASIL sur l'accueil se réfère au cahier des charges, qui n'est cependant pas encore applicable mais sert de source. Celui-ci contient plusieurs dispositions relatives à la cuisine et à l'alimentation des demandeurs d'asile.

Dans certaines structures, les demandeurs d'asile cuisinent eux-mêmes et disposent d'un équipement minimal. Un système de titres-repas nominatifs est organisé.

Dans d'autres structures, les repas sont servis dans une grande cuisine ou un réfectoire dans le respect des normes en vigueur, à savoir un arrêté royal du 4 décembre 1995 soumettant à une autorisation les lieux où des denrées alimentaires sont fabriquées ou mises dans le commerce ou sont traitées en vue de l'exportation.

Le cahier spécial des charges prévoit également que les repas doivent tenir compte de la situation spécifique des demandeurs d'asile (par exemple des convictions religieuses).

- Habillement[186]

Chaque structure d'accueil dispose d'un système assurant l'habillement des demandeurs d'asile. Les centres organisent tant la collecte et le tri que la distribution des vêtements. S'agissant des I.L.A., des contrats avec des magasins de seconde main sont parfois conclus grâce auxquels les demandeurs d'asile peuvent y choisir des vêtements deux fois par an, gratuitement ou pour un prix très bas. D'autres I.L.A. donnent une somme d'argent avec laquelle le demandeur d'asile peut acheter des vêtements.

- Allocation journalière

La loi dispose en son article 34 que « le bénéficiaire de l'accueil résidant dans une structure d'accueil a droit à une allocation journalière » dont le montant sera déterminé par arrêté royal. Ce montant est fixé par semaine et par personne.

[186] Voir rapport FEDASIL.

De plus, la loi prévoit que « l'Agence ou le partenaire organise également la prestation de services communautaires par les bénéficiaires de l'accueil dans les structures communautaires », tout en rappelant qu'ils peuvent également exercer du volontariat[187].

La loi définit le « service communautaire », comme étant « toute prestation effectuée par le bénéficiaire de l'accueil dans la structure communautaire, au profit de la communauté des bénéficiaires de l'accueil résidant dans celle-ci ou effectuée dans le cadre d'une activité, organisée par la structure précitée ou pour laquelle celle-ci est partenaire, qui concourt à son intégration dans son environnement local et pour laquelle peut lui être versée une majoration de son allocation journalière ».

L'octroi de l'allocation journalière était déjà prévu par l'article 62 § 2*bis* de la loi-programme du 19 juillet 2001.

Un arrêté royal relatif à l'argent de poché visé à l'article 63, §2 bis de la loi-programme du 19 juillet 2001 a été pris le 1er avril 2007.

Cet arrêté royal indique que le montant hebdomadaire de l'argent de poche est fixé à :
« -3,8 euros pour chaque mineur de moins de 12 ans ou de 12 ans et plus, non scolarisé;
- 5,0 euros pour chaque mineur non accompagné accueilli durant la phase d'observation et d'orientation;
- 6,5 euros pour chaque mineur scolarisé de 12 ans ou plus;
- 6,5 euros pour chaque adulte. »

Les structures Cire et VwV combinent un système d'aide matérielle, par la mise à disposition d'un logement et par un accompagnement social, juridique et administratif permanent, et un système d'allocation financière, qui permet aux personnes de vivre de façon totalement autonome, en ce qui concerne la vie quotidienne (repas, habillement etc).

Ce système d'accueil est fondé sur des normes communes à l'ensemble des partenaires Ciré/VwV.

Aide financière

L'octroi de l'aide sociale participe des missions des centres publics d'aide sociale. Elle est réglementée par la loi 8 juillet 1976 organique des centres publics d'aide sociale[188], dont l'article 1er dispose que "Toute personne a droit à l'aide sociale. Celle-ci a pour but de permettre à chacun de mener une vie conforme à la dignité humaine. Il est créé des centres publics d'aide sociale qui […] ont pour mission d'assurer cette aide". Le centre public d'aide sociale est chargé d'assurer aux personnes et aux familles l'aide due par la collectivité[189].

[187] loi du 3 juillet 2005 relative aux droits des volontaires.

Le droit à mener une vie conforme à la dignité humaine a été élevé au rang de droit constitutionnel à l'occasion de la réforme du 17 février 1994. L'article 23 de la Constitution dispose que "Chacun a le droit de mener une vie conforme à la dignité humaine".

Les modes de mise en œuvre de l'aide sociale sont plus diversifiés que l'octroi d'une somme d'argent puisque l'article 1er de la loi du 8 juillet 1976 prévoit que l'aide sociale " peut être matérielle, sociale, médicale, médico-sociale ou psychologique ".

L'aide individuelle n'est en principe pas exclusivement financière, même si ce volet participe de l'aide matérielle au côté des avances sur prestations sociales[190], de l'aide au logement et de l'intervention dans le paiement du gaz et de l'électricité, de l'aide en nature par la fourniture de vivres, de vêtements. Elle peut également être immatérielle, consistant alors en l'affiliation aux organismes de sécurité sociale, en une aide psychologique, juridique, une guidance, par exemple budgétaire. Les centres publics d'aide sociale peuvent également aider par la "mise au travail"[191] et procéder à des avances sur pensions alimentaires[192].

Au sujet des montants, le principe défendu par la majorité de la jurisprudence consiste à aligner le montant de l'aide sociale sur le revenu d'intégration sociale [193]. Il y a par

"On ne peut affirmer en principe que l'aide sociale doit de toute façon être égale au montant du minimex, qui représenterait un minimum légal en-deçà duquel une personne ne peut vivre, il n'empêche qu'une aide financière peut être accordée par référence au montant du minimex à une personne qui ne peut se prévaloir de la loi du 7 août 1974, s'il apparaît qu'en l'espèce, l'aide ainsi fixée est indispensable pour permettre à la personne visée de mener une existence conforme à la dignité humaine. S'il y a lieu d'appliquer un barème précis, ce ne peut être qu'en référence au minimex, toute autre barémisation étant incompatible avec les principes de dignité" humaine et d'individualisation de l'aide; à défaut de barèmes, le montant de l'aide devrait être justifié par rapport aux ressources et aux besoins particuliers de l'intéressé. Aucune disposition légale et aucune considération d'équité ou d'opportunité ne justifient que l'aide financière aux candidats réfugiés soit systématiquement inférieure à celle due aux belges, au motif de la situation particulière et précaire de ces personnes".

Contra C.T. Mons, 6ème ch., 28 juin 1994, Chron. D.S., 1995, p. 79-80: L'octroi d'une aide sociale d'un montant équivalant au minimex est une position jugée fort généreuse. Il est permis d'exempter des personnes qui n'ont pas droit au minimex des conditions d'octroi imposées par cette loi. Il n'est pas équitable d'accorder à des citoyens ou résidants n'appartenant pas aux mêmes catégories des avantages équivalents.

conséquent lieu d'accorder aux étrangers une aide équivalente à celle à laquelle pourrait prétendre un ressortissant belge dans les mêmes conditions.

Le montant de l'aide sociale étant calqué sur le montant du revenu d'intégration sociale, l'on distingue entre la personne qui vit seule, seule avec des enfants ou qui cohabite.

A l'égard des candidats réfugiés résidant dans des immeubles où sont partagées des utilités communes, une partie de la jurisprudence a tenté il y a quelques années de créer un taux intermédiaire entre le taux isolé et le taux cohabitant, dit taux "communautaire". Une telle situation implique en effet que l'intéressé n'assume pas seul toutes les charges inhérentes à son mode de vie, mais n'entraîne toutefois pas nécessairement la création d'une unité de consommation [194].

Une seconde approche, également minoritaire, juge injuste d'accorder le minimex à des personnes qui ne satisfont pas aux conditions pour l'obtenir, fixe le montant de l'aide sociale au regard du critère de la dignité humaine [195]. Il est alors procédé à un examen factuel de l'état de besoin et à la fixation d'un montant ad hoc.

La Cour du travail de Bruxelles a sanctionné la position d'un C.P.A.S. consistant à remplacer l'aide financière d'un montant équivalent au minimex par une série d'aides en nature et prises en charge directe de certains frais. Le C.P.A.S. justifiait sa décision par le fait que les requérants s'étaient vus notifier une décision négative dans le cadre des demandes de reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié qu'ils avaient introduites et invoquait également certains griefs à l'encontre de la personnalité du requérant. La Cour a remarqué qu'aucun ordre de quitter le territoire n'avait été notifié, que les griefs évoqués n'étaient aucunement établis et n'avaient donné lieu à aucune poursuite et qu'en tout état de cause, ils n'étaient pas pertinents pour rejeter une demande d'asile sociale. La Cour souligne que le seul motif susceptible de justifier une telle décision serait l'incapacité de l'intéressé de gérer son budget ce qui n'était pas établi dans ce cas. La décision du C.P.A.S. a été jugée humiliante et discriminatoire, outre qu'elle procède d'un gaspillage des deniers publics, l'aide en nature allouée étant plus onéreuse que le montant de l'aide sociale [196].

Une partie de la jurisprudence [197] considère qu'en plus de l'aide sociale équivalente au minimex, les étrangers doivent bénéficier, lorsqu'ils ont des enfants à charge, d'une aide complémentaire dont le montant est calqué sur les allocations familiales garanties.

Jugé que l'octroi d'une aide consistant à la prise en charge du loyer, plus 150 francs par jour est satisfactoire.

Cette position est controversée. Certaines décisions fixent le montant alloué pour l'entretien et l'éducation des enfants mineurs en référence au montant des allocations familiales [198], d'autres le déterminent ex aequo et bono, entérinant la pratique administrative des C.P.A.S [199].

Q. 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

En ce qui concerne l'aide financière, le montant est équivalent dans la plupart des cas au revenu d'intégration versé aux nationaux et aux étrangers qui y ont accès. Une aide complémentaire peut de plus être obtenue par exemple pour constituer la garantie locative ou pour payer le premier loyer, pour se meubler. Elle n'est pas systématique or les candidats réfugiés sont par définition et pour la plupart d'entre eux des personnes qui sont isolées ou, en tout cas, qui ne bénéficient de la solidarité familiale. Le caractère insuffisant des ressources pose parfois difficulté s'agissant des familles lorsque l'aide sociale de base n'est pas majorée par une somme équivalente aux allocations familiales garanties mais seulement par une somme forfaitaire.

En ce qui concerne l'accueil en centre/structures d'accueil, l'allocation journalière ne permet pas aisément au résident de quitter le centre et de circuler, notamment pour rencontrer des services externes, tels un avocat, un service social ou de santé mentale. Les dispositions notamment relatives à l'aide juridique ne précisent rien à ce sujet. Dans la pratique actuelle, certains centres payent les tickets de transport, d'autres non, d'autres parfois oui mais pas systématiquement. Les demandeurs d'asile peuvent cependant effectuer des services communautaires pour lesquels ils peuvent recevoir une majoration de leur allocation journalière (ne pouvant dépasser 125 Euros par mois).

En cas de défaut de places dans les centres d'accueil, la loi (article 18) autorise un hébergement temporaire, pour une période maximale de dix jours, dans une structure d'accueil d'urgence où l'accompagnement social est limité. Un minimum est toutefois garanti c'est à dire l'octroi de « la nourriture, le logement, l'accès aux facilités sanitaires et l'accompagnement médical tel que décrit aux articles 23 à 29 », et également un « accompagnement social limité, qui comprend l'information et le soutien nécessaire aux démarches requises, notamment urgentes, dans le cadre de la procédure d'asile » (exposé des motifs de l'article 18, p. 37).

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

Oui.

L'article 48/2 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers indique que « peut être reconnu comme réfugié ou comme personne pouvant bénéficier de la protection subsidiaire, l'étranger qui satisfait aux conditions prévues par l'article 48/3 ou l'article 48/4 ».

L'article 48/3 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 vise le statut de réfugié suivant la Convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951.

L'article 48/4 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 qui vise la protection subsidiaire dispose que « le statut de protection subsidiaire est accordé à l'étranger qui ne peut être considéré comme un réfugié et qui ne peut pas bénéficier de l'article 9 ter [régularisation pour motifs médicaux], et à l'égard duquel il y a de sérieux motifs de croire que, s'il était renvoyé dans son pays d'origine ou, dans le cas d'un apatride, dans le pays dans lequel il avait sa résidence habituelle, il encourrait un risque réel de subir les atteintes graves visées au paragraphe 2, et qui ne peut pas ou, compte tenu de ce risque, n'est pas disposé à se prévaloir de la protection de ce pays et ce, pour autant qu'il ne soit pas concerné par les clauses d'exclusion visées à l'article 55/4 ».

La protection subsidiaire est donc « subsidiaire » par rapport à la reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié et toute demande de protection internationale est d'abord examinée comme étant une demande de reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié. Cet ordre d'examen est encore précisé par l'article 49/3 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 selon lequel « Une demande de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié ou d'octroi du statut de protection subsidiaire se fait sous la forme d'une demande d'asile. Cette demande d'asile est d'office examinée en priorité dans le cadre de la Convention de Genève, tel que déterminé à l'article 48/3, et ensuite dans le cadre de l'article 48/4 ».

Par ailleurs, l'article 2,1° de la loi « accueil » estime qu'il faut entendre par demandeur d'asile « l'étranger qui a introduit une demande d'asile, ayant pour objectif soit la reconnaissance du statut de réfugié, soit l'octroi du statut de protection subsidiaire ».

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

Dans la mesure où les demandes de protection subsidiaire sont traitées subsidiairement à la demande d'asile et dans le cadre d'une procédure unique, les centres accueilleront aussi les demandeurs de protection subsidiaire.

Y seront aussi hébergées les personnes gravement malades qui ont introduit une demande de séjour sur cette base, les personnes qui se trouvent dans l'impossibilité de quitter le territoire pour des raisons indépendantes de leur volonté – si cette impossibilité est confirmée par le Commissariat général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides ou le Conseil du contentieux des étrangers, les personnes qui ont signé un engagement de retour volontaire et les personnes dont la famille proche est encore hébergée dans le centre (voyez infra Q. 15).

L'aide financière est par contre directement accordée aux bénéficiaires de la protection temporaire.

L'Agence est également chargée de l'aide matérielle aux mineurs séjournant illégalement sur le territoire et dont l'état de besoin a été constaté par un C.P.A.S. lorsque les parents ne sont pas en mesure d'assumer leur devoir d'entretien.

Q. 13.C Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

Non.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Oui, l'article 6, § 1, indique clairement que « le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle s'applique à tout demandeur d'asile dès l'introduction de sa demande d'asile et produit ses effets pendant toute la procédure d'asile en ce compris pendant le recours introduit devant le Conseil du Contentieux des Etrangers […] et pendant le recours en cassation administrative introduit devant le Conseil d'Etat ». L'aide est maintenue pendant les délais nécessaires à l'introduction de ces recours. Ces délais de recours sont relativement brefs suite à la réforme. Le recours devant le Conseil du Contentieux des Etrangers doit être introduit dans les quinze jours alors que le délai pour introduire un recours en cassation contre un arrêt du Conseil du Contentieux des Etrangers devant le Conseil d'Etat est de trente jours.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

L'aide se termine à la fin de la procédure d'asile,

- soit en cas de décision négative du Commissariat général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides si le demandeur d'asile n'a pas introduit de recours auprès du Conseil du contentieux dans le délai requis ;

- soit en cas de décision négative du Conseil du contentieux si le demandeur d'asile n'a pas introduit de recours auprès du Conseil d'Etat dans le délai requis ;

- soit en cas d'arrêt négatif du Conseil d'Etat.

L'article 7 de la loi « accueil » dispose que le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle est prolongé quand l'étranger résidant dans une structure d'accueil se trouve dans une des situations suivantes :

1° l'étranger dont la procédure d'asile et la procédure devant le Conseil d'Etat se sont clôturées négativement, et qui, pour des raisons médicales certifiées et étayées par une demande d'autorisation de séjour introduite sur base de l'article 9 ter de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 précité, ne peut donner suite à l'ordre de quitter le territoire qui lui a été notifié ;

L'article 9 ter[200] est une disposition proposée par la réforme qui permet à un étranger gravement malade de demander à bénéficier d'un séjour pour des raisons humanitaires.

2° l'étranger dont la procédure d'asile et la procédure devant le Conseil d'Etat se sont clôturées négativement, et qui, pour des raisons de force majeure, autres que des raisons médicales, confirmées par les autorités compétentes en matière d'asile et d'immigration, ne peut donner suite à l'ordre de quitter le territoire qui lui a été notifié ;

> Tel serait par exemple le cas d'un étranger qui ne reçoit pas de laissez-passer de ses autorités d'origine, qui a été reconnu apatride, qui vient d'un pays où il y aurait une soudaine flambée de violence (même si ce dernier devrait pouvoir bénéficier de la protection subsidiaire).

3° l'étranger dont la procédure d'asile et la procédure devant le Conseil d'Etat se sont clôturées négativement, et qui a un membre de sa famille ou une personne exerçant sur lui l'autorité parentale ou la tutelle en vertu de la loi applicable conformément à l'article 35 de la loi du 16 juillet 2004 portant le Code de droit international privé, qui entre dans le champ d'application de la présente loi ;

200 Art. 9 ter. § 1er. L'étranger qui réside en Belgique et qui dispose d'un document d'identité et souffre d'une maladie dans un état tel qu'elle entraîne un risque réel pour sa vie ou son intégrité physique ou un risque réel de traitement inhumain ou dégradant lorsqu'il n'existe aucun traitement adéquat dans son pays d'origine ou dans le pays où il séjourne, peut demander l'autorisation de séjourner dans le Royaume au Ministre ou à son délégué.

L'étranger doit transmettre tous les renseignements utiles concernant sa maladie.

L'appréciation du risque précité et des possibilités de traitement dans le pays d'origine ou dans le pays où il séjourne est effectuée par un fonctionnaire médecin qui rend un avis à ce sujet.

Il peut, si nécessaire, examiner l'étranger et demander l'avis complémentaire d'experts ».

Le membre de la famille est défini par l'article 1er de la loi comme étant :

- le conjoint ou le partenaire non marié engagé dans une relation stable ;
- les enfants mineurs non mariés, nés dans ou hors mariage ou adoptés.

4° l'étranger dont la procédure d'asile et la procédure devant le Conseil d'Etat se sont clôturées négativement et qui a signé un engagement de retour volontaire et ce, jusqu'à son départ, sauf si ce départ est reporté à cause de son seul comportement.

Ces extensions du droit à l'accueil sont justifiées par la jurisprudence de la Cour d'Arbitrage et de la Cour de cassation, suivies par les cours et tribunaux du travail.

C'est justifiable lorsque l'impossibilité de retour est limitée dans le temps (cf pratique où parfois, faire sortir les personnes des structures d'accueil pour une aide financière à charge du cpas ne rencontre pas nécessairement ses besoins).

Par contre, il faudra être attentif dans la pratique à ce que des possibilités de transfert vers des structures individuelles, voire en aide financière, puissent être accordées en fonction de la situation (par exemple, lorsque l'impossibilité de retour peut être durable et que la personne n'a pas obtenu de droit de séjour sur une autre base, telle la protection subsidiaire, ou si la situation médicale, sociale ou autre de la personne justifie qu'on lui désigne une autre structure d'accueil).

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Non pas dans la loi « accueil ».

Pas contre, la loi réformant la procédure d'asile confirme la possibilité actuelle selon laquelle une nouvelle demande peut ne pas être prise en considération si elle ne repose pas sur des éléments nouveaux. Le nouvel article 51/8 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 prévoit que « Le Ministre ou son délégué peut décider de ne pas prendre la demande d'asile en considération lorsque l'étranger a déjà introduit auparavant la même demande d'asile auprès d'une des autorités désignées par le Roi en exécution de l'article 50, alinéa 1er, et qu'il ne fournit pas de nouveaux éléments qu'il existe, en ce qui le concerne, de sérieuses indications d'une crainte fondée de persécution au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel que définie à l'article 48/3 ou de sérieuses indications d'un risque réel d'atteintes graves tels que définis à l'article 48/4."

Dans ce cas, aucune aide ne sera apportée même si l'étranger conteste cette décision en introduisant un recours devant le Conseil d'Etat.

Q.17[201]. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Dans la pratique avant le 1er juin 2007, un document d'information relatif à la procédure d'asile rédigé par le Ministère de l'Intérieur (Office des étrangers) était distribué aux demandeurs d'asile lors de l'introduction de la demande d'asile. Cette brochure est disponible en une dizaine de langues (français, néerlandais, allemand, anglais, russe, albanais, serbo-croate). Elle contenait des informations relatives à la Convention de Genève, à la Convention de Dublin, aux instances d'asile, à l'inscription et à l'audition à l'Office des étrangers, à la décision de l'Office des étrangers, ainsi qu'aux associations spécialisées dans l'assistance des étrangers.

Les structures d'accueil partenaires de Fedasil (CIRE /VWV) avaient pris l'initiative de distribuer à tout nouveau résidant, une brochure sur la vie dans la structure d'accueil, et dans leur environnement urbain, social (infos pratico pratiques très diverses, tant sur la poste, que sur l'administration communale, que sur la gestion des déchets, la consommation de gaz, eau électricité etc..)

Des explications en français et en néerlandais sont également disponibles sur le site de l'Office des étrangers.

Le C.I.R.E. (coordination et initiative pour réfugiés et étrangers) publie une brochure informant les candidats réfugiés sur la procédure d'asile. Elle est téléchargeable gratuitement dans dix langues : albanais, anglais, arabe, français, néerlandais, persan , russe, serbo-croate et turc.

L'exposé des motifs indique que la « future brochure » « contient notamment les informations relatives au droit d'accès à l'accompagnement médical – en ce compris au régime de l'aide médicale urgente -, aux conditions matérielles d'accueil, à savoir le logement, la nourriture et l'habillement, ainsi qu'au droit à une allocation journalière, au droit à la liberté de mouvement sur le territoire belge, à l'obligation scolaire à laquelle sont soumis les mineurs, aux conditions d'accès au marché du travail et à la formation professionnelle, au droit au respect de la vie privée et familiale, à l'aide juridique, au droit de communiquer avec leurs conseillers juridiques et les représentants d'organisations non gouvernementales, à l'aide psychologique ainsi qu'à la protection des victimes de la traite des êtres humains et au programme de retour volontaire […] des informations sur les organisations ou les groupes de personnes qui assurent une assistance juridique spécifique et sur les organisations susceptibles d'aider les demandeurs d'asile ou de les informer en ce qui concerne les conditions d'accueil dont ils peuvent bénéficier, y compris les soins médicaux, […] du régime applicable aux personnes qui ne disposent plus d'un titre de séjour valable mais qui ont droit à l'aide matérielle dans une structure d'accueil, et de ses conséquences possibles, à savoir l'éloignement du territoire belge ».

Il précise que « La brochure d'information précisera également que le demandeur d'asile ne bénéficiera des droits liés à l'accueil qu'au sein du lieu obligatoire d'inscription désigné, à l'exception de son droit à l'accompagnement médical. Ceci est particulièrement important pour les personnes qui, de leur propre initiative, décident de ne pas résider au sein de ce lieu et, partant, restent en dehors du système d'accueil tout en sauvegardant leur droit à l'accompagnement médical ».

L'Agence FEDASIL a maintenant rédigé une brochure sur base de l'article 14 de la loi « accueil » qui est distribuée depuis l'entrée en vigueur de la nouvelle procédure d'asile, à savoir le 1er juin 2007. Cette brochure est distribuée lors de la désignation du « code 207 ».

Cette brochure décrit notamment les droits et obligations du bénéficiaires de l'accueil, les coordonnées des instances compétentes, des organisations pouvant prodiguer une assistance médicale, sociale et juridique). Elle contient plusieurs fiches d'information :

- fiche d'introduction ;
- fiche 1 : la désignation d'un lieu obligatoire d'inscription ;
- fiche 2 : l'hébergement ;
- fiche 3 : la protection des victimes de la traite des êtres humains ;
- fiche 4 : l'accompagnement médical et psychologique ;
- fiche 5 : l'accompagnement social et juridique ;
- fiche 6 : les allocations journalières et les services communautaires ;
- fiche 7 : formations et scolarité ;
- fiche 8 : le retour volontaire ;
- fiche 9 : fin du droit à l'aide matérielle ;
- fiche 10 : contacts.

Cette brochure est complétée par la communication du règlement d'ordre intérieur dès l'arrivée dans la structure d'accueil.

La brochure a été élaborée par l'Agence FEDASIL, en concertation avec les centres FEDASIL, les partenaires de l'accueil et le H.C.R.

Elle est remise au demandeur d'asile depuis le 1er juin 2007 et est disponible en 10 langues.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Par écrit.

Q. 17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

Oui, « dans la mesure du possible », suivant l'article 14 de la loi « accueil ».

Actuellement, la brochure est rédigée en dix langues : français, néerlandais, anglais, russe, albanais, serbo-croate, turc, arabe, kurde (kurmandji), persan.

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Oui, la loi « accueil » prévoit que dès la désignation du lieu obligatoire d'inscription (effectué dès l'introduction de la demande d'asile), « l'Agence délivre au demandeur d'asile une brochure d'information rédigée, dans la mesure du possible, dans une langue qu'il comprend et décrivant notamment ses droits et obligations tels que décrits dans la présente loi ou dans la loi du 8 juillet 1976 organique des centres publics d'action sociale» (article 14).

Dès son arrivée dans la structure d'accueil, l'étranger se voit également communiquer le règlement d'ordre intérieur. L'exposé des motifs indique « que la brochure est toujours remise au demandeur d'asile dans un délai raisonnable n'excédant pas quinze jours puisque l'octroi du code 207 est, en pratique, concomitant à l'introduction de la demande ».

Il est également spécifié que « L'Agence ou le partenaire veille à ce que le bénéficiaire de l'accueil ait accès à des services d'interprétariat et de traduction sociale dans le cadre de l'exercice de ses droits et obligations décrits dans la présente loi ». A cette fin, ils peuvent conclure des conventions avec des services ou organisations spécialisés dans l'interprétariat et la traduction sociale.

Q.18[202]. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

L'article 14 de la loi "accueil" prévoit que les coordonnées des instances compétentes et des associations pouvant prodiguer une assistance médicale, sociale et juridique soient reprises dans la brochure d'information (voyez question 17).

La brochure distribuée depuis le 1er juin 2007 contient une fiche relative aux contacts d'organisations pouvant apporter de l'aide dans plusieurs domaines (essentiellement juridique).

Concernant l'accompagnement médical, il n'y a pas de coordonnée car c'est un médecin lié à la structure d'accueil qui la fournit. Celui-ci peut le cas échéant transférer le bénéficiaire de l'accueil vers un hôpital ou un service spécialisé.

Concernant l'accompagnement psychologique, la brochure explique que le médecin ou le travailleur social peut orienter le demandeur d'asile vers une institution spécialisée, sans fournir de liste.

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

L'article 14 de la loi "accueil" prévoit une brochure écrite.

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

Oui, « dans la mesure du possible », suivant l'article 14 de la loi « accueil ».

[202] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or to be completed on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Actuellement, la brochure est rédigée en dix langues : français, néerlandais, anglais, russe, albanais, serbo-croate, turc, arabe, kurde (kurmandji), persan.

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

Il existe au moins une cinquantaine d'associations travaillant sur le terrain avec les candidats réfugiés (voir la liste des associations francophones sur le site du C.I.R.E. (http://www.cire.irisnet.be/assoc-membres.html et des associations néerlandophones sur le site http://www.vluchtelingenwerk.be/).

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q. 19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

Les documents délivrés aux candidats réfugiés ont changé en raison de la réforme de la procédure d'asile qui est entrée en vigueur le 1er juin 2007.

Suivant l'arrêté royal du 8 octobre 1981 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers (qui a été modifié par un arrêté royal du 27 avril 2007, M.B. 21 mai 2007), lors de l'introduction de sa demande, le candidat réfugié se voit remettre, selon qu'il introduit sa demande à la frontière ou à l'intérieur du pays, un document conforme au modèle de l'Annexe 25 ou de l'Annexe 26 (articles 72 et 73 de l'arrêté royal du 8 octobre 1981). Ce document prend l'identité complète du candidat réfugié et sa photo.

Au stade Dublin, si la Belgique adresse une demande de reprise à un pays tiers, il en est fait mention sur l'annexe du candidat réfugié qui doit se représenter quelques semaines plus tard. Si l'Etat tiers accepte cette demande, le candidat réfugié se voit notifier une Annexe 25quater ou 26quater et un laissez-passer sous la forme d'une Annexe 10ter.

Le demandeur d'asile qui a introduit une demande d'asile à l'intérieur du Royaume doit se présenter dans les huit jours de sa demande auprès de son administration communale et se voit délivrer une attestation d'immatriculation, modèle A, valable trois mois à dater de sa délivrance. Il s'agit d'un document carton qui reprend l'identité du demandeur d'asile et sa photo. Ce document de séjour est prorogé jusqu'à ce qu'il ait été statué sur la demande (article 74§3 et 75§1er de l'arrêté royal du 8 octobre 1981).

Q. 19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

Les demandeurs d'asile qui ne sont pas autorisés à entrer sur le territoire belge et qui introduisent une demande d'asile à la frontière reçoivent une annexe 25 (article 72 de l'arrêté royal du 8 octobre 1981).

Q. 19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

Lors de l'introduction de sa demande d'asile, le candidat reçoit une annexe 25/26.

Le demandeur d'asile qui a introduit une demande d'asile à l'intérieur du Royaume doit se présenter dans les huit jours de sa demande auprès de son administration communale et se voit délivrer une attestation d'immatriculation, modèle A, valable trois mois à dater de sa délivrance. Il s'agit d'un document carton qui reprend l'identité du demandeur d'asile et sa photo. Ce document de séjour est prorogé jusqu'à ce qu'il ait été statué sur la demande (article 74§3 et 75§1er de l'arrêté royal du 8 octobre 1981).

Q. 19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[203]?

Le document est immédiatement délivré.

Q. 19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

Le candidat réfugié ne peut en principe pas quitter le Belgique sauf autorisation expresse délivrée par les instances compétentes en matière d'asile et par le Gouvernement provincial. Il doit justifier sa demande par des motifs sérieux, d'ordre professionnel, familial, culturel, etc.

[203] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Il risque d'une part de ne pas répondre à une convocation dans le cadre de la procédure ni de recevoir une décision négative sur cette base. D'autre part, ne disposant généralement pas d'un certificat d'inscription au registre des étrangers, il ne bénéficie pas du droit au retour.

Q. 19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

Il existe un registre d'attente qui est le pendant pour les candidats réfugiés du registre des personnes physiques reprenant les nationaux et les étrangers.

Depuis 1995, deux registres sont tenus dans chaque commune : le registre de la population et le registre d'attente. Ce dernier reprend les candidats réfugiés qui ont établi leur résidence principale (lieu de vie réel) sur le territoire de la commune concernée et qui ne sont pas inscrits à un autre titre dans les registres de la population.

Il vise par conséquent :
- les étrangers qui se déclarent réfugiés et
- qui ne disposent pas d'un droit au séjour en Belgique à un autre titre (par exemple en qualité d'étudiant ou de bénéficiaire du regroupement familial).

La tenue de ce registre repose sur l'O.E. qui enregistre la première inscription du candidat réfugié dès son arrivée en Belgique. Les modifications ultérieures sont effectuées par les communes concernées sur base des déclarations de l'intéressé qui se présente à la commune pour s'inscrire et de renseignements collectés lors d'enquêtes de police et par les instances intervenant dans le cadre de la procédure d'asile. La radiation intervient lorsque l'intéressé décède, quitte le territoire, est reconnu réfugié, dispose d'un titre de séjour à un autre titre ou "disparaît dans la nature".

Ce registre reprend de nombreuses informations relatives au candidat réfugié touchant essentiellement à son identité, aux différentes étapes de la procédure par lesquelles il est passé et aux décisions prises. Il contient notamment des données les plus complètes possible s'agissant de l'identité. Il mentionne la date à laquelle l'étranger a introduit sa demande de reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié, les décisions prises dans le cadre de cette procédure et la date à laquelle elles l'ont été. Il permet ainsi aux instances habilitées à le consulter de connaître l'état de la procédure. Il indique aussi le lieu obligatoire d'inscription.

L'accès au registre d'attente est réservé à certaines autorités, dont les C.P.A.S. qui peuvent ainsi se tenir informés de l'état d'avancement des procédures en cours.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers[204]:

Q. 20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Le candidat réfugié qui a introduit sa demande à l'intérieur des frontières reste en principe libre pendant la procédure. Cette liberté est entravée notamment par le défaut de moyen financier puisqu'il bénéficie d'une assistance matérielle en nature dans un centre d'accueil.

Q. 20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

Le candidat réfugié qui a introduit sa demande à l'intérieur des frontières reste en principe libre pendant la procédure. Cette liberté est toutefois sérieusement limitée dans la mesure où il doit en principe vivre dans un centre ouvert, en tout cas pendant une période dont la longueur sera fixée par arrêté royal. Le candidat réfugié peut cependant quitter la structure d'accueil pendant quelques jours.

Si le candidat réfugié fait choix de ne pas résider dans le centre d'accueil, il devra subvenir à ses besoins. Exception: les soins médicaux qui sont couverts, que le demandeur réside ou non dans le système d'accueil Echappent à cette mesure d'obligation de résider dans un centre les étrangers qui, au moment où ils ont formé leur demande, étaient admis ou autorisés à l'établissement ou au séjour pour une période de plus de trois mois (exemple des étudiants ou de ceux qui bénéficient d'un droit au séjour sur base du regroupement familial).

[204] Nota bene: the case of detention is covered by other questions and should be ignored under this question.

Les candidats réfugiés qui reçoivent l'aide d'un C.P.A.S. peuvent en principe s'installer sur le territoire de la commune de leur choix, même si un C.P.A.S. de référence a été désigné et que seul ce C.P.A.S. est tenu de leur accorder une aide. Des incitants sont prévus pour tenter de faire coïncider le lieu de vie du candidat réfugié avec le C.P.A.S. désigné.

Le principe est le paiement de l'aide sociale par les C.P.A.S., moyennant remboursement à 100 % par l'Etat jusqu'au jour de l'inscription éventuelle aux registres de la population. Toutefois, le remboursement est réduit de moitié si le candidat réfugié ne réside par sur le territoire de la commune d'inscription obligatoire et si le C.P.A.S. de cette commune n'apporte pas la preuve qu'il a proposé un logement public ou privé décent et adapté aux moyens du candidat réfugié sur le territoire de sa commune. Cette mesure vise à inciter à la correspondance entre le lieu d'inscription obligatoire et la résidence habituelle et à répartir réellement la charge des C.P.A.S. Le C.P.A.S. doit prouver, au moyen d'un rapport social, l'offre d'un logement adapté et le refus de celui-ci par l'étranger. Les petites communes sont autorisées à s'associer pour pourvoir à cette offre de logement.

Le remboursement est totalement supprimé "lorsque l'absence de mesures suffisantes prises par le C.P.A.S. en vue de favoriser l'accueil de ces étrangers sur le territoire de sa commune, a pour conséquence d'inciter ceux-ci à s'installer sur le territoire d'une autre commune". Un arrêté royal énumère les hypothèses dans lesquelles il est considéré qu' "il y a absence de mesures suffisantes". Tel est le cas lorsque plus de 95 % des étrangers résidant sur le territoire d'une autre commune et si le C.P.A.S. n'a pas organisé une structure en une initiative d'accueil locale d'accueil. Cette sanction ne s'applique pas aux communes qui ne peuvent plus se voir désigner comme lieu obligatoire d'inscription parce que le quota de candidats réfugiés susceptibles d'y être accueillis est dépassé. La présomption d'absence de mesures suffisantes est réfragable.

Q. 20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

Lors de la désignation du centre d'accueil, il est indiqué à l'agence qu'elle doit tenir compte du nombre de places disponibles mais également de l' « adaptation » du lieu sur la base de critères tels :

- la composition familiale ;
- l'état de santé ;
- la connaissance des langues nationales ;
- la langue de la procédure (elle est déterminée en début de procédure : il s'agit soit du français ou du néerlandais si le candidat réfugié s'exprime dans cette langue et n'a pas besoin d'un interprète, soit d'une langue déterminée par l'Office des étrangers en fonction des besoins du service si l'étranger demande l'assistance d'un interprète) ;
- la vulnérabilité de la personne concernée : l'article 36 de la loi « accueil » définit les personnes vulnérables comme étant les mineurs, les mineurs non accompagnés, les femmes enceintes, les victimes de la traite des êtres humains, les personnes victimes de violences ou de torture ou les personnes âgées. Il est d'ailleurs précisé que l'agence peut conclure des conventions avec des institutions ou associations spécialisées.

La loi « accueil » prévoit que l'état de santé (notamment) du candidat réfugié peut motiver une suppression ou une modification du lieu obligatoire d'inscription (article 28).

Cette prise en compte s'effectue déjà à l'heure actuelle. Lors de la désignation du centre d'accueil ou en cours de procédure en cas de demande de changement de centre d'accueil, la cellule dispatching de FEDASIL et de la Croix rouge peuvent, dans la mesure des places disponibles envisager de désigner une petite structure d'accueil individuelle plutôt qu'une structure communautaire grand centre. Le nombre de places en petites structures est toutefois limité par rapport aux places dans les centres d'accueil de plus grande taille.

En pratique, les familles sont désignées prioritairement dans les structures individuelles.

Le rapport FEDASIL (voyez supra), indique qu' « il est tenu compte de la situation familiale du demandeur d'asile lors de la désignation du lieu obligatoire d'inscription ». L'exposé des motifs de l'article 54 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 tel que modifié par la loi-programme du 22 décembre 2003, prévoit en effet qu' « afin de pouvoir fournir un accueil de qualité aux demandeurs d'asile, le lieu obligatoire d'inscription doit être attribué en fonction des besoins de subsistance et du profil des demandeurs d'asile ». Le rapport indique que « La pratique actuelle essaie de garantir l'unité familiale, lors de la désignation du lieu obligatoire d'inscription, pour les membres de la famille liés par un lien de parenté jusqu'au deuxième degré inclus en ligne directe et collatérale ».

Le rapport précise que « Dans les centres communautaires, des logements spécifiques sont prévus pour les familles afin de garantir le droit au respect de la vie familiale. Ils sont regroupés au sein d'une unité de logement. Tous les centres communautaires disposent de chambres ou d'appartements spécialement conçus pour accueillir des familles. Le cahier spécial des charges prévoit des critères indicatifs pour ce type de logement (ex. surface minimum, nombre maximum de personnes par chambre, etc.…) ».

Q. 20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)[205]

Voir supra sur la description du système d'accueil (question 12).

Les travaux préparatoires indiquent que « Le risque de saturation de la capacité d'accueil est également envisagé par cette possibilité de ne pas désigner de lieu obligatoire d'inscription. Selon l'exposé des motifs de l'article 57 ter [de la loi organique des C.P.A.S.], « dans des circonstances exceptionnellement graves, le ministre ou son délégué peut négliger l'obligation de désigner un centre d'accueil (…). Des circonstances particulières sont aussi des circonstances où les capacités d'accueil seraient insuffisantes et où une alternative qualitativement équivalente comprenant l'aide matérielle devra être offerte ». L'absence de places disponibles autorisant de ne pas désigner de lieu obligatoire d'inscription, est rencontrée quand le réseau d'accueil est saturé, en ce compris les places disponibles en structure d'accueil d'urgence, telle que visée par l'article 18 de l'avant-projet. Dans l'hypothèse où, suite à l'existence de circonstances particulières, un lieu obligatoire d'inscription n'est pas désigné par l'Agence, la compétence pour l'octroi de l'aide se détermine conformément à la règle générale visée à l'article 1, § 1 de la loi du 2 avril 1965 relative à la prise en charge des secours accordés par les centres publics d'action sociale » (p. 30).

Q. 20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

[205] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

La loi prévoit que le candidat réfugié qui vit dans une structure d'accueil communautaire peut demander après quatre mois d'être transféré dans une structure plus individuelle (voyez les lieux d'accueil énumérés ci-dessus : ILA, CIRE, etc…, question 12). Il ne pourra être satisfait à cette demande que dans la mesure des places disponibles. Il ne pourra en tout état de cause pas être satisfait à cette demande si ce délai de quatre mois est atteint après la notification d'une décision négative du conseil du contentieux des étrangers, sauf si le recours en cassation administrative introduit a fait l'objet d'une ordonnance de recevabilité par le Conseil d'Etat.

Cette hypothèse ne vise pas le cas où le DA veut quitter temporairement la structure d'accueil... :

- dans les centres communautaires, ils peuvent demander des autorisation de quitter le centre, sans risquer d'être considéré comme renonçant à leur place d'accueil, et que celle ci soit affectée à un autre demandeur.
- dans les structures individuelles, ils ont évidemment le droit de s'absenter de chez eux beaucoup plus librement.

Q.21. Q. 21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

La loi accueil prévoit que différentes sanctions peuvent être prononcées à l'encontre du bénéficiaire de l'accueil (article 45).

Ces sanctions sont :

- avertissement formel avec mention dans le dossier ;
- exclusion temporaire de la participation aux activités organisées par la structure d'accueil ;
- exclusion temporaire de la possibilité d'exécuter des prestations rémunérées de services communautaires ;
- restriction de l'accès à certains services :
- obligation d'effectuer des tâches d'intérêt général ;
- transfert vers une autre structure d'accueil.

La loi prévoit cependant qu'en aucun cas la sanction ne peut avoir pour effet la suppression complète de l'aide matérielle ni la diminution d l'accès à l'accompagnement médical.

Q. 21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice[206]?

Non, pas au niveau de l'accueil; même si l'introduction tardive de la demande d'asile a une incidence au niveau de la procédure d'asile et peut être une cause de refus d'octroi de la protection.

Le projet prévoit une séparation entre l'accueil et la procédure d'asile. L'article 4 indique que « Les décisions de l'Agence ou du partenaire sur l'octroi de l'aide matérielle ne peuvent avoir égard au non-respect par le demandeur d'asile de ses obligations procédurales dans le cadre de sa procédure d'asile, pas plus qu'elles ne peuvent avoir une influence sur le traitement de celle-ci ».

Q. 21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

En ce qui concerne les sanctions prises à l'égard des résidents en centres d'accueil, voyez la question 25 qui lui est spécialement dédiée.

Il est prévu que les sanctions doivent être infligées par le directeur ou le responsable de la structure d'accueil, par une décision motivée prise de manière objective et impartiale.

[206] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Il est garanti qu' « en aucun cas, la mise en œuvre d'une sanction ne peut avoir pour effet la suppression complète de l'aide matérielle octroyée en vertu de la présente loi, ni la diminution de l'accès à l'accompagnement médical ».

En ce qui concerne l'aide octroyée par les C.P.A.S, elle peut être suspendue ou supprimée si la personne ne remplit pas ou plus les conditions d'accès, tel l'état de besoin, ou si la personne a dissimulé des ressources. Ces sanctions et les procédures prévues sont celles organisées par la loi organique relative aux C.P.A.S. et ne sont pas propres aux candidats réfugiés. Elles peuvent aller de la suppression partielle ou totale de l'aide sociale à l'obligation de la rembourser, sans jamais toutefois mettre en danger le droit au respect de la dignité humaine, notamment celui de bénéficier d'un minimum pour vivre.

Q. 21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the documentation pack you received at our meeting in Brussels in April)?

Q. 21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome[207]?

La loi "accueil » est entrée, pour partie, en vigueur ce 7 mai 2007. Aucune décision de jurisprudence relative à cette loi n'a dès lors encore été rendue.

Q.22. Q. 22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

[207] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Un recours en révision contre toute décision infligeant une ou plusieurs des trois sanctions les plus graves prévues. Il est introduit auprès du directeur général de l'Agence, auprès de la personne désignée par le partenaire et agréée par l'Agence, ou auprès du Conseil de l'aide sociale lorsqu'il s'agit d'une structure visée à l'article 63 de la présente loi (I.L.A.).

La décision est alors confirmée, annulée ou revue dans les 30 jours à compter de l'introduction du recours en révision.

En cas de confirmation de la sanction, de révision ou d'absence de décision sur le recours en révision, le bénéficiaire de l'accueil peut introduire un recours devant le Tribunal du Travail du lieu de la structure d'accueil dans un délai de trois mois à compter de la notification de la décision du directeur général, de la personne désignée par le partenaire, ou du Conseil de l'aide sociale, ou à compter de l'expiration du délai prescrit.

Par ailleurs, l'article 580, 8°, f du Code Judiciaire (modifié par la loi du 21 avril 2007 modifiant le Code judiciaire en ce qui concerne les contestations relatives à l'octroi, à la révision et au refus de l'aide matérielle) prévoit que le Tribunal du travail connait des contestations relatives à la violation des droits garantis au bénéficiaire de l'accueil.

Q. 22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

L'aide juridique de première (l'aide juridique accordée sous la forme de renseignements pratiques, d'information juridique, d'un premier avis juridique ou d'un renvoi vers une instance ou une organisation spécialisées) et deuxième ligne (l'aide juridique accordée à une personne physique sous la forme d'un avis juridique circonstancié ou l'assistance juridique dans le cadre ou non d'une procédure ou l'assistance dans le cadre d'un procès) est visée aux articles 508/1 à 508/23 du Code judiciaire.

Selon l'article 1er, §1, 10° de l'arrêté royal du 18 décembre 2003, le demandeur d'asile a droit à l'aide juridique.

La loi « accueil » prévoit que l'Agence doit veiller à ce que le bénéficiaire de l'accueil ait un accès effectif à l'aide juridique (article 33).

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones[208]?

Non.

Q. 22.D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Isit linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

Le bénéficiaire de l'accueil s'adresse au directeur ou au responsable de la structure d'accueil en cas de plaintes portant sur :

- les conditions de vie au sein de la structure d'accueil
- l'application du règlement d'ordre intérieur visé à l'article 19 de la présente loi.

Si la plainte n'est pas été traitée dans un délai de 7 jours à compter de la communication de la plainte, le bénéficiaire de l'accueil peut adresser sa plainte par écrit au directeur général de l'Agence, ou à la personne désignée à cet effet par le partenaire et agréée par l'Agence. Le directeur général de l'Agence, ou la personne désignée par le partenaire, répond à cette plainte dans les 30 jours.

Le Roi détermine les règles de procédure applicables au traitement des plaintes.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

La loi « accueil » définit la famille de la manière suivante (article 2, 5°):

- le conjoint du demandeur d'asile, ou son ou sa partenaire non marié(e) engagé(e) dans une relation stable ;

[208] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

- les enfants mineurs du couple du demandeur d'asile visé ci-dessus ou du demandeur d'asile, à condition qu'ils soient non mariés et à charge, sans discrimination selon qu'ils sont nés du mariage, hors mariage ou qu'ils ont été adoptés.

Pour que la famille soit prise en considération, il faut qu'elle ait été fondée dans le pays d'origine et que ses membres soient présents sur le territoire en raison de la demande.

La loi reprend donc le prescrit de la directive, en usant de la possibilité de reconnaître les couples non mariés.

L'article 20 définit les garanties générales qui doivent bénéficier aux demandeurs d'asile, parmi lesquelles le respect de la vie privée et familiale. « Lors de son séjour au sein d'une structure d'accueil communautaire, le bénéficiaire de l'accueil a droit au respect de sa vie privée et familiale, au respect de ses convictions, à participer à l'organisation de la vie communautaire au sein de la structure d'accueil, à communiquer avec sa famille, son conseil, les représentants du Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés et les associations ayant pour objet l'accueil des étrangers et la défense de leurs droits ».

Lors de la désignation du lieu obligatoire d'inscription, il est prévu que soit prise en compte la composition familiale du bénéficiaire de l'accueil (article 11). En outre, l'aide matérielle qui bénéficie au demandeur d'asile s'applique également aux membres de sa famille.

La protection de la famille est également prévue au cas où la procédure de l'un des membres de la famille est terminée mais pas celle de tous ses membres. Ainsi, l'article 7 dispose que l'aide matérielle se poursuit après une décision négative à l'égard de l'étranger dont la procédure d'asile et la procédure devant le Conseil d'Etat se sont clôturées négativement, et qui a un membre de sa famille ou une personne exerçant sur lui l'autorité parentale ou la tutelle en vertu de la loi applicable, qui entre dans le champ d'application de la présente loi.

En général les familles sont regroupées. Elles bénéficient de logements adaptés. Le rapport FEDASIL indique (p. 57) que « La pratique actuelle essaie de garantir l'unité familiale, lors de la désignation du lieu obligatoire d'inscription, pour les membres de la famille liés par un lien de parenté jusqu'au deuxième degré inclus en ligne directe et collatérale ». Ce rapport explique que « Dans les centres communautaires, des logements spécifiques sont prévus pour les familles afin de garantir le droit au respect de la vie familiale. Ils sont regroupés au sein d'une unité de logement. Tous les centres communautaires disposent de chambres ou d'appartements spécialement conçus pour accueillir des familles. Le cahier spécial des charges prévoit des critères indicatifs pour ce type de logement (ex. surface minimum, nombre maximum de personnes par chambre, etc.…) ». Certaines familles rapportent et dénoncent le fait d'être logées parfois pendant des années dans une seule pièce où vivent les parents et les enfants, parfois adolescents, ne laissant aucune intimité ni aux uns ni aux autres.

Le rapport FEDASIL précise qu' « il est également tenu compte de l'unité familiale pour ce qui est des transferts, puisque dans la pratique, ceux-ci ont notamment lieu à la demande du demandeur d'asile pour des raisons familiales. Le regroupement de la famille est envisagé si la personne concernée a un membre de sa famille jusqu'au 2ème degré dans une autre structure d'accueil ».

Q.24. Q. 24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

Les centres d'accueil ouverts sont gérés par Fedasil (les centres d'accueil fédéraux), la Croix-Rouge de Belgique, et les Mutualités socialistes (à Erezée). Les logements particuliers (ou 'privatifs') sont, d'une part, les Initiatives locales d'accueil (ILA) organisées par les CPAS, et, d'autre part, les places d'accueil gérées par les ONG partenaires (Ciré et Vluchtelingenwerk Vlaanderen).

Ces derniers temps, les structures individuelles ont été autant sollicitées que les structures communautaires, car le réseau d'accueil est à saturation. Quoique, comme l'on assiste ces derniers temps à une baisse du taux d'occupation, et vraisemblablement en prévision de la loi « accueil », et du principe de l'accueil en deux phases qui va y être consacré (4 mois en structures communautaires, suite à quoi, possibilité de transfert vers une structure individualisée), les structures individuelles type Ciré et Vluchtelingenwerk sont de moins en moins sollicitées pour des désignations à l'origine.

Q. 24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers?[209]
Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

[209] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Au total, quelque 15.500 places d'accueil sont réparties sur l'ensemble de la Belgique (situation 2005) pour les candidats réfugiés qui sont accueillis dans les structures d'accueil et non ceux qui sont aidés par un C.P.A.S.

Selon FEDASIL (voir site), un quart des demandeurs d'asile sont hébergés dans des centres d'accueil fédéraux, un autre quart dans les centres de la Croix-Rouge, et la moitié dans des Initiatives locales d'accueil et ONG partenaires.

- Certaines places d'accueil ne peuvent être utilisées (par ex.: une chambre prévue pour une famille de 6 personnes et qui abrite une famille de 4 personnes entraîne 2 places inoccupables. D'autres chambres peuvent être momentanément indisponibles si elles sont remises à neuf).

- Ces places inoccupables ne sont pas reprises dans le calcul des places disponibles. Pour cette raison, le nombre de places disponibles n'est pas égal à la capacité totale d'accueil moins le nombre de personnes accueillies.

Q. 24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?[210]

Actuellement, le nombre de places disponibles au regard du nombre de demandeurs d'asile est suffisant.

Q. 24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

En cas de défaut de places dans les centres d'accueil, la loi « accueil » (article 18) autorise un hébergement temporaire, pour une période maximale de dix jours, dans une structure d'accueil d'urgence où l'accompagnement social est limité. Un minimum est toutefois garanti c'est à dire l'octroi de « la nourriture, le logement, l'accès aux facilités sanitaires et l'accompagnement médical tel que décrit aux articles 23 à 29 ».

Actuellement, un centre est dédié à l'aide d'urgence [211]: :Woluwe-Saint-Pierre.

Selon FEDASIL qui a réalisé une étude sur cette aide, il existe huit catégories de public-cible de cet accueil :
1°) les personnes qui à la suite de la désignation de leur lieu obligatoire d'inscription ne peuvent atteindre le lieu en question. Il s'agit notamment des demandeurs d'asile arrivant en fin d'après-midi au dispatching, désignés dans une I.L.A. et devant attendre la nuit ou le week-end pour pouvoir s'y rendre ou encore des demandeurs d'asile arrivant le soir et se voyant désigner une structure d'accueil fort éloignée ;
2°) les personnes qui ne se sont pas encore vues désigner un centre étant donné leur arrivée tardive et la fermeture de l'O.E. ;
3°) les demandeurs d'asile qui pour des raisons disciplinaires font l'objet d'un transfert, dans l'attente d'une nouvelle désignation liée à l'accord d'une structure d'accueil pour les accueillir ;
4°) des mineurs non-accompagnés pour lesquels une solution d'hébergement permanente n'a pas encore été trouvée ;
5°) les personnes inscrites dans un programme de retour volontaire dont la date de départ est fixée ;
6°) les demandeurs d'asile ayant introduit une deuxième demande d'asile et pour lesquels l'O.E. recherche le dossier avant d'enregistrer la nouvelle demande (cela prend minimum une semaine) ;
7°) les demandeurs d'asile pour lesquels un lieu d'accueil adéquat n'a pu être désigné en raison de l'état de l'offre et de la demande (ex. famille nombreuse…) ;
8°) les personnes ayant des besoins spécifiques comme les cas psychiatriques.

Selon ce rapport, la durée de l'accueil d'urgence est sensée être très courte. Cependant, la pratique démontre que le séjour perdure.

Toutes ces hypothèses ne sont pas reprises dans la loi « accueil ». Par exemple, les cas psychiatriques devront pouvoir prétendre à des conditions particulières d'hébergement, qui tiennent compte de leur état. L'accueil d'urgence n'étant pas du tout adapté à leurs besoins. L'objectif de la loi « accueil » est de ne pas faire de l'accueil d'urgence, l'accueil « fourre tout », d'en limiter les hypothèses, car l'accompagnement social y est limité au minimum.

La loi prévoit aussi en son article 11 la possibilité de ne pas désigner un lieu obligatoire d'inscription. Les travaux préparatoires indiquent que « Le risque de saturation de la capacité d'accueil est également envisagé par cette possibilité de ne pas désigner de lieu obligatoire d'inscription. Selon l'exposé des motifs de l'article 57 ter [de la loi organique des C.P.A.S.], « dans des circonstances exceptionnellement graves, le ministre ou son délégué peut négliger l'obligation de désigner un centre d'accueil (...). Des circonstances particulières sont aussi des circonstances où les capacités d'accueil seraient insuffisantes et où une alternative qualitativement équivalente comprenant l'aide matérielle devra être offerte ». L'absence de places disponibles autorisant de ne pas désigner de lieu obligatoire d'inscription, est rencontrée quand le réseau d'accueil est saturé, en ce compris les places disponibles en structure d'accueil d'urgence, telle que visée par l'article 18 de l'avant-projet. Dans l'hypothèse où, suite à l'existence de circonstances particulières, un lieu obligatoire d'inscription n'est pas désigné par l'Agence, la compétence pour l'octroi de l'aide se détermine conformément à la règle générale visée à l'article 1, § 1 de la loi du 2 avril 1965 relative à la prise en charge des secours accordés par les centres publics d'action sociale » (p. 30).

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q. 25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

La répartition entre les catégories de centres ne se fait pas selon le niveau de procédure mais selon la durée de celle-ci (possibilité de transfert vers l'aide d'un C.P.A.S. après une certaine durée de procédure, possibilité de transfert vers une structure individuelle après 4 mois) ou selon des facteurs tells que la composition familiale, l'état de santé, etc. (hébergement en grands centres ou dans des plus petites structures : I.L.A., C.I.R.E., etc.) (voir ci-dessus question 11).

Q. 25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

Voir également question 11.

Au-delà d'un délai qui devra être fixé par arrêté royal après une évaluation de la nouvelle procédure d'asile, les candidats réfugiés devraient pouvoir quitter le réseau d'accueil pour se voir désigner un C.P.A.S. qui leur donnera une aide financière.

Q. 25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

Ces règles devront être déterminées par arrêté royal.

L'article 17 de la loi « accueil » prévoit qu'un arrêté royal « défini[ra] les normes auxquelles les structures d'accueil doivent répondre tant en termes qualitatifs qu'en termes d'infrastructure ainsi que les modalités de contrôle par l'Agence du respect de ces normes ».

L'article 19 indique également qu' « un arrêté royal détermine[ra] le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux structures d'accueil. Un règlement d'ordre intérieur établi par le Ministre en détermine les modalités d'exercice. Il est veillé à la bonne et complète compréhension de celui-ci par le bénéficiaire de l'accueil ».

Un régime de traitement des plaintes est également mis en place. L'article 45 prévoit que « Le bénéficiaire de l'accueil s'adresse au directeur ou au responsable de la structure d'accueil en cas de plaintes portant sur :
- les conditions de vie au sein de la structure d'accueil
- l'application du règlement d'ordre intérieur visé à l'article 19 de la présente loi ».

Un délai de réaction aux plaintes est prévu. « Si la plainte n'est pas été traitée dans un délai de 7 jours à compter de la communication de la plainte, le bénéficiaire de l'accueil peut adresser sa plainte par écrit au directeur général de l'Agence, ou à la personne désignée à cet effet par le partenaire et agréée par l'Agence. Le directeur général de l'Agence, ou la personne désignée par le partenaire, répond à cette plainte dans les 30 jours ».

La procédure applicable aux plaintes devra être fixée par arrêté royal.

Un rapport sur les plaintes sera établi chaque année par Fedasil.

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision*?* Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones? [212]

La loi « accueil » prévoit un cadre autorisant de possibles sanctions.

L'article 43 de la loi dispose qu' « Afin de garantir et, si nécessaire, de rétablir l'ordre, la sécurité et la tranquillité dans la structure d'accueil, des mesures d'ordre interne peuvent être prises. Le Roi fixe les mesures d'ordre pouvant être prises à l'encontre d'un résident, les règles de procédure applicables ainsi que l'autorité habilitée à les prendre ».

L'article 44 prévoit que « le bénéficiaire de l'accueil peut faire l'objet d'une sanction en cas de manquement grave au régime et règles de fonctionnement applicables aux structures d'accueil visés à l'article 19. Lors du choix de la sanction, il est tenu compte de la nature et de l'importance du manquement ainsi que des circonstances concrètes dans lesquelles il a été commis ».

Cette disposition énumère les sanctions qui peuvent être prononcées :

« 1° l'avertissement formel avec mention dans le dossier social visé à l'article 32 ;

2° l'exclusion temporaire de la participation aux activités organisées par la structure d'accueil ;

3° l'exclusion temporaire de la possibilité d'exécuter des prestations rémunérées de services communautaires, telles que visées par l'article 34 ;

4° la restriction de l'accès à certains services ;

5° l'obligation d'effectuer des tâches d'intérêt général, dont la non-exécution ou l'exécution défaillante peut être considérée comme un nouveau manquement ;

6° le transfert, sans délai, du bénéficiaire de l'accueil, vers une autre structure d'accueil ».

La loi prévoit toutefois que les sanctions doivent être infligées par le directeur ou le responsable de la structure d'accueil, par une décision motivée prise de manière objective et impartiale. Elles peuvent être diminuées ou levées durant leur exécution par l'autorité qui les a infligées. C'est un arrêté royal qui devra déterminer « les règles de procédure applicables au traitement des sanctions ».

Recours (article 46)

Un recours en révision contre toute décision infligeant une ou plusieurs des trois sanctions les plus graves prévues (restriction de l'accès à certains services, obligation d'effectuer des tâches d'intérêt général et transfert). Il est introduit auprès du directeur général de l'Agence, auprès de la personne désignée par le partenaire et agréée par l'Agence, ou auprès du Conseil de l'aide sociale lorsqu'il s'agit d'une structure visée à l'article 63 de la présente loi (I.L.A.).

Ce recours est introduit par simple courrier en français, néerlandais ou anglais dans un délai de cinq jours ouvrables à compter de la notification de la décision.

En cas de confirmation de la sanction, de révision ou d'absence de décision sur le recours en révision, le bénéficiaire de l'accueil peut introduire un recours devant le Tribunal du Travail du lieu de la structure d'accueil dans un délai de trois mois à compter de la notification de la décision du directeur général, de la personne désignée par le partenaire, ou du Conseil de l'aide sociale, ou à compter de l'expiration du délai prescrit.

Q. 25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

L'article 20 de la loi « accueil » garantit le droit du résident de participer à l'organisation de la vie communautaire au sein de la structure d'accueil. Cette participation n'est pas davantage précisée. Le rapport FEDASIL indique que certains centres communautaires disposent d'un comité des sages au sein duquel les demandeurs d'asile peuvent s'exprimer.

Q. 25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

La loi « accueil » prévoit que « l'Agence ou le partenaire organise […] la prestation de services communautaires par les bénéficiaires de l'accueil dans les structures communautaires », tout en rappelant qu'ils peuvent également exercer du volontariat.

Le « service communautaire » est « toute prestation effectuée par le bénéficiaire de l'accueil dans la structure communautaire, au profit de la communauté des bénéficiaires de l'accueil résidant dans celle-ci ou effectuée dans le cadre d'une activité, organisée par la structure précitée ou pour laquelle celle-ci est partenaire, qui concourt à son intégration dans son environnement local et pour laquelle peut lui être versée une majoration de son allocation journalière ».

L'octroi de l'allocation journalière était déjà prévue par l'article 62 § 2*bis* de la loi-programme du 19 juillet 2001.

Q.26. Q. 26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

Q. 26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

Q. 26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

L'article 20 de la loi « accueil » pose pour principe que « lors de son séjour au sein d'une structure d'accueil communautaire, le bénéficiaire de l'accueil a droit […] à communiquer avec sa famille, son conseil, les représentants du Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés et les associations ayant pour objet l'accueil des étrangers et la défense de leurs droits ».

L'article 21 dispose que « les conseillers juridiques des bénéficiaires de l'accueil, les représentants du Haut Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés et les ONG qui agissent en son nom ont accès aux structures communautaires d'accueil, en vue d'aider les bénéficiaires de l'accueil ». « Il est prévu, dans la structure d'accueil communautaire, un local permettant d'assurer aux entretiens qui s'y déroulent un caractère confidentiel ».

En ce qui concerne l'assistance des avocats, l'article 33 prévoit que « L'Agence ou le partenaire veille à ce que le bénéficiaire de l'accueil ait un accès effectif à l'aide juridique de première et de deuxième ligne, telle que visée aux articles 508/1 à 508/23 du Code judiciaire ». Les candidats réfugiés et les demandeurs de régularisation de séjour appartiennent en effet aux catégories d'étrangers ayant droit à l'aide juridique, c'est à dire à l'assistance gratuite d'un avocat. D'une part, ils peuvent comme toute personne, sans condition de nationalité ou de séjour, bénéficier de l'aide juridique de première ligne, « sous la forme de renseignements pratiques, d'information juridique, d'un premier avis juridique ou d'un renvoi vers une instance ou une organisation spécialisée ». D'autre part, ils bénéficient également de la gratuité totale de l'aide juridique de deuxième ligne (avis juridique circonstancié ou assistance juridique dans une procédure).

La loi prévoit que « l'Agence ou le partenaire peut conclure des conventions avec des associations ayant pour objet la défense des droits des étrangers ou avec les bureaux d'aide juridique ».

Toutefois, un arrêté royal devra déterminer dans quelles mesures il y aura des limites à cet accès « uniquement aux fins de sécurité des structures communautaires d'accueil et des locaux ainsi que des bénéficiaires de l'accueil ».

Dans les faits, comme il n'existe pas de système de reconnaissance des ONG par l'Etat, excepté le HCR, via le CBAR, aucune association n'aura le droit d'accès aux centres d'accueil, sauf accord express avec le directeur du centre. Et comme, en terme de mobilité, les demandeurs d'asile sont limités, et que la loi ne leur garanti par exemple pas un billet de train chaque fois qu'ils veulent se rendre dans un service social, juridique ou médical autre que celui du centre, leurs droit en termes de communication sont à nuancer.

Dans certains centres, excentrés de la ville ou des services sociaux (par exemple dans la province de Luxembourg où il n'y a pas beaucoup de permanences sociales spécialisées, ni d'avocats -aide juridique spécialisés en droit des étrangers) cela posera certainement un problème.

Q.27. Q. 27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

Q. 27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Q. 27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?[213]

La loi « accueil » garantit que « le bénéficiaire de l'accueil a droit à l'accompagnement médical nécessaire pour mener une vie conforme à la dignité humaine » (article 23). C'est l'Agence qui est compétente pour assurer cet accompagnement médical sauf en cas d'accueil dans une initiative locale d'accueil (C.P.A.S.). Un accompagnement psychologique est également prévu et garanti.

L'accompagnement médical est défini de la manière suivante. Il s'agit de « l'aide et [d]es soins médicaux, que ceux-ci soient repris dans la nomenclature telle que prévue à l'article 35 de la loi relative à l'assurance obligatoire soins de santé et indemnités coordonnée le 14 juillet 1994 ou qu'ils relèvent de la vie quotidienne ».

Il est toutefois prévu qu'un arrêté royal déterminera « d'une part, l'aide et les soins médicaux qui, bien que repris dans la nomenclature précitée, ne sont pas assurés au bénéficiaire de l'accueil en ce qu'ils apparaissent comme manifestement non nécessaires, et d'autre part, l'aide et les soins médicaux relevant de la vie quotidienne et qui bien que non repris dans la nomenclature précitée sont assurés au bénéficiaire de l'accueil ».

Cet arrêté royal a été pris en date du 9 avril 2007 et publié au Moniteur belge le 7 mai 2007.

Les structures d'accueil, sous la responsabilité de l'agence, garantissent un « accès effectif à un accompagnement médical », « sous la responsabilité d'un médecin qui conserve son indépendance professionnelle envers le directeur ou le responsable de ladite structure ». Un dossier médical unique est tenu à jour et conservé au sein de la structure d'accueil communautaire désignée comme lieu obligatoire d'inscription, et le cas échéant transféré.

Cet accompagnement est garanti à tous les candidats réfugiés, même ceux qui ont décidé de vivre en dehors du centre, par exemple dans leur famille.

L'état de santé du candidat réfugié peut être un motif conduisant à la suppression de la désignation d'un lieu obligatoire d'inscription, en conséquence de quoi le candidat réfugié percevra l'aide du C.P.A.S. de son lieu de résidence (article 28).

Les décisions de ce médecin peuvent être contestées auprès de l'Agence.

L'exposé des motifs précise que « qu'il appartient à ce médecin d'examiner l'opportunité d'orienter le bénéficiaire de l'accueil vers des spécialistes ou d'autres professionnels de la santé […], en vue d'un accompagnement de seconde ligne ».

Il y est également précisé que « Le droit au libre choix du médecin implique que le patient puisse s'adresser à plusieurs praticiens professionnels pour choisir celui qui le traitera finalement ». L'exposé des motifs souligne toutefois que ce libre choix peut être restreint lorsque cette restriction est prévue par la loi. L'exposé des motifs donne les exemples de la médecine de contrôle, du traitement médical des détenus ou de l'admission forcée de malades mentaux. Il s'en déduit que « les bénéficiaires de l'accueil conservent le droit de consulter un autre médecin que celui qui est employé au sein de la structure d'accueil où ils résident ou qui est lié par convention avec l'Agence ou avec un partenaire. Dans ce cas, la structure d'accueil n'interviendra pas dans les frais médicaux qui seront entièrement à charge du bénéficiaire de l'accueil ».

La loi « accueil » prévoit que « Le bénéficiaire de l'accueil peut être soumis à un examen médical obligatoire pour des motifs de santé publique » (article 29), repris en annexe de l'arrêté royal de 1981 (cela n'inclut pas le test HIV).

Q.28. Q. 28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

L'accès au marché du travail des candidats réfugiés va être modifié par les projets en cours mais rien n'est encore fixé à ce sujet. Aujourd'hui, l'accès au marché du travail dépend du stade de la procédure. En recevabilité, les candidats réfugiés ne peuvent pas travailler mais ils le peuvent au fond.

Suite à la suppression de cette distinction avec la nouvelle procédure d'asile entrée en vigueur le 1er juin 2007, un nouveau système devra être établi. Il dépendra peut-être de la longueur de la procédure et pourrait être calqué sur la sortie possible du centre d'accueil après un certain délai de procédure.

Un groupe de travail a été mis en place et un nouvel arrêté royal devrait être pris suite aux réflexions de ce groupe de travail.

Dans l'attente de ces nouvelles dispositions, le système actuellement en vigueur peut être présenté.

Cette matière est régie par la loi du 30 avril 1999 relative à l'occupation des travailleurs étrangers et par l'arrêté royal du 9 juin 1999 exécutant cette loi. Ces textes ont également été modifiés à plusieurs reprises, notamment par un arrêté royal du 6 février 2003 qui a créé le permis de travail C. Il s'agit d'un permis de travail d'une durée limitée et valable pour toutes les professions salariées. Il n'implique dès lors pas de démarches préalables de l'employeur. Le travailleur obtient le permis de travail et peut être occupé immédiatement. Il est accordé aux candidats réfugiés recevables ("aux ressortissants étrangers autorisés à séjourner en qualité de candidat réfugié recevable par [l'O.E.], ou, en cas de recours, par le [C.G.R.A.], jusqu'à ce qu'une décision soit prise quant au bien-fondé de leur demande de reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié par le Commissaire général aux réfugiés et aux apatrides ou, en cas de recours, par la Commission permanente de recours des réfugiés"). Le candidat réfugié recevable peut exercer en toute légalité une activité salariée. Le permis de travail C perd sa validité au terme de la procédure d'asile et notamment en cas de décision négative de la C.P.R.R. Cela pose de sérieuses difficultés aux étrangers qui conservent leur permis de séjour (attestation d'immatriculation - carte orange) après une telle décision, pendant le temps du traitement de la demande de régularisation (9.3.) qu'ils ont introduite.

Les autres candidats réfugiés (non encore recevables) n'ont en principe pas le droit de travailler. Dans certains cas, ils peuvent obtenir un permis de travail B, c'est à dire un permis de travail d'une durée déterminée, de maximum douze mois, et limité à l'occupation auprès d'un seul employeur. L'obtention de ce permis implique des démarches de la part d'un employeur qui doit solliciter une autorisation d'occuper un travailleur de nationalité étrangère.

Si elle lui est accordée, le travailleur étranger se verra délivrer un permis de travail B. Les conditions à réunir rendent difficile l'obtention de telles autorisations s'agissant de l'emploi d'un candidat réfugié. Il s'agit pour l'essentiel des conditions suivantes:

- L'étranger doit être en séjour régulier sur le territoire. C'est le cas lorsqu'il est encore en procédure d'asile;
- Un contrat d'emploi conforme au modèle de contrat de travail pour travailleur étranger doit être signé;
- L'étranger doit être originaire d'un pays qui a signé une convention de main-d'œuvre avec le pays d'origine (Maroc, Algérie, Tunisie, Turquie, Yougoslavie). Le non respect de cette condition aura pour conséquence une décision négative de l'administration au premier stade de la procédure. Toutefois, en degré d'appel, le Ministre de l'emploi de la région compétente peut déroger à cette condition. Cette dérogation n'est en pratique pas trop difficile à obtenir.
- L'employeur doit établir que le travailleur qu'il embauche l'est parce qu'aucun travailleur sur le marché du travail n'est disponible pour cette fonction. Cette condition est évidemment difficile à satisfaire sauf dans le cas d'un travail bien particulier et lorsque le travailleur est particulièrement qualifié ou a une qualification très spécifique.

Le refus de délivrance d'un permis de travail ou d'une autorisation d'occupation peut faire l'objet d'un recours dans un délai d'un mois devant le Ministre de l'emploi de la région compétente. La décision du Ministre est ensuite susceptible d'un recours devant le Conseil d'Etat.

Les réfugiés reconnus peuvent par contre travailler sans permis de travail (article 2, 5° de l'arrêté royal du 9 juin 1999 portant exécution de la loi du 30 avril 1999 relative à l'occupation des travailleurs étrangers).

Une circulaire du 1er juin 2007 relative à l'octroi du permis de travail C pour les demandeurs d'asile à partir du 1er juin 2007 a été publiée au Moniteur belge le 18 juin 2007.

Cette circulaire indique : « pour diverses raisons, il n'est pas possible, dans l'immédiat, d'adapter cette disposition (relative à l'octroi d'un permis de travail aux demandeurs d'asile) à la nouvelle procédure d'asile. » La circulaire précise qu'il n'est désormais plus possible de délivrer un permis de travail C à un demandeur d'asile qui n'a pas été déclaré recevable avant le 1er juin 2007 sur base de l'ancienne procédure d'asile.

Dans l'attente d'une réforme relative au travail des demandeurs d'asile, la question de compatibilité de la législation actuelle avec l'article 11§1 de la directive 2003/9/CE se pose.

Puisqu'aucune distinction entre la recevabilité et le fond n'existe dans la nouvelle procédure d'asile qui est entrée en vigueur le 1er juin, les demandeurs d'asile qui ont introduit une demande après le 1er juin et dont la demande est en cours d'examen ne peuvent pas travailler.

Partant, le demandeur d'asile dont la demande est pendante depuis plus d'un an ne pourra donc pas travailler. Ce cas de figure pourra cependant s'avérer fort théorique dans la mesure où la nouvelle procédure d'asile devrait permettre des décisions définitives rapides quant à l'octroi ou non du statut de réfugié.

Q. 28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

Le demandeur d'asile déclaré recevable sur base de l' « ancienne procédure » d'asile peut obtenir un permis de travail modèle C auprès de l'ORBEM, en région bruxelloise, du VDAB en région flamande et du FOREM en région wallonne. Ce permis de travail est délivré en quelques semaines.

Le demandeur d'asile qui a introduit une demande d'asile après le 1er juin 2007, sur base de la nouvelle procédure d'asile, ne peut pas obtenir de permis de travail.

Q. 28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

Les règles applicables pour les demandeurs d'asile sur base de l' « ancienne procédure » sont les règles générales relatives au travail. Aucune restriction spécifique n'est imposée aux demandeurs d'asile concernant le nombre d'heures ou de jours de travail et le type de travail ou de profession.

Q. 28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Voyez question 28 A.

Aucune règle de priorité n'est accordée aux citoyens de l'Union et à ceux des Etats parties à l'accord sur l'Espace économique européen et aux ressortissants de pays tiers en séjour régulier.

Q. 28. E Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

La loi « accueil » prévoit que " Sans préjudice du respect des règles régissant l'accès à la formation professionnelle, des cours et des formations organisés par la structure d'accueil ou par des tiers sont proposés au bénéficiaire de l'accueil ».

Q. 28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

Pas encore défini puisqu'aucune réforme relative au travail n'est encore intervenue.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

L'accueil dans les centres n'est pas conditionné par l'absence de ressources. Il est automatique dès l'introduction de la demande d'asile. Par contre, l'assistance des centres publics d'action sociale (pas lorsqu'ils mettent en place une initiative locale d'accueil) est conditionnée par l'état de besoin. Ainsi, un demandeur d'asile qui travaille et a des revenus suffisants n'aura pas droit à percevoir une aide sociale équivalente au revenu d'intégration. Cela signifie évidemment qu'il soit autorisé à travailler légalement (voir question 28 supra).

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30. Q. 30. A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

Les personnes vulnérables suivantes sont prises en considération : les mineurs, les mineurs non accompagnés, les parents isolés accompagnés de mineurs, les femmes enceintes, les personnes ayant un handicap, les victimes de la traite des êtres humains, les personnes victimes de violence ou de tortures ou encore les personnes âgées (article 36 alinéa 1 de la loi « accueil »).

Le législateur belge ajoute à ces catégories les victimes de la traite des êtres humains.

Un accueil spécifique existe en Belgique pour les victimes de la traite des êtres humains, qu'elles soient ou non demandeurs d'asile.

Des directives du 13 janvier 1997 prévoient une assistance des victimes de la traite des êtres humains, au sein de trois centres spécialisés (« Payoke » pour la Région flamande, « Pag-asa » pour la Région de Bruxelles-Capitale et « Sürya » pour la Région Wallonne) qui ne sont pas seulement habilités à introduire une demande de permis de séjour, mais assurent également un accompagnement psychosocial et offrent une aide juridique aux victimes qui souhaitent défendre leurs intérêts dans le cadre de la procédure judiciaire.

L'accompagnement des victimes de la traite des êtres humains est un accompagnement spécialisé. Connaissant le phénomène de la traite, les membres du personnel des centres spécialisés y travaillant peuvent mieux l'identifier et répondre plus rapidement aux besoins des personnes accueillies. L'accompagnateur étant sensibilisé à ce phénomène, ceci permet à la victime d'en parler plus facilement. La sécurité de la victime est également garantie puisque l'adresse où réside la personne est confidentielle.

Pour répondre aux besoins spécifiques des personnes vulnérables, l'Agence ou le partenaire conclut des conventions avec des institutions ou associations spécialisées (article 36 aliéna 1de la loi « accueil »).

Q. 30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

L’Agence ou le partenaire doit veiller à ce que le suivi administratif et social soit assuré et que le bénéficie de l’aide matérielle soit garanti pour les personnes vulnérables (article 36 alinéa 2 de la loi « accueil »).

Lors de la désignation du lieu obligatoire d’inscription, l’Agence veille à ce que ce lieu soit adapté au bénéficiaire de l’accueil et dans les limites des places disponibles. L’appréciation du caractère adapté est notamment basée sur des critères comme la composition familiale, son état de santé, sa connaissance d’une des langues nationales ou de la langue de procédure (article 11 § 3 de la loi « accueil »).

Ainsi, par exemple, les personnes handicapées arrivant au dispatching de l’Agence sont désignées, dans les limites des places disponibles vers une structure d’accueil adaptée à leur handicap. En Belgique, le centre fédéral de Jodoigne, centre de plein pied, peut offrir un accueil spécifiquement adapté à cette catégorie de personnes.

Le cahier spécial des charges énumère, à titre indicatif, des critères indicatifs pour l’hébergement de ces personnes (accessibilité des espaces communs, une chambre à coucher pour deux personnes handicapées, surface minimale de la chambre,…).

Si une personne commet un manquement grave au régime et règles de fonctionnement des structures d’accueil, la législation belge prévoit un régime de sanction. En cas de sanction, le législateur belge n’a prévu aucune spécificité pour les personnes vulnérables (article 44 de la loi « accueil »).

La loi prévoit aussi que l'évaluation des besoins des personnes vulnérables doit être menée tout au long de l'accueil. Il faut que l'accueil soit toujours adapté aux besoins, qui peuvent évidemment évoluer.

Par exemple, une personne victime de traumatismes ne sera pas nécessairement identifiée comme personne vulnérable à son arrivée au dispatching. Il se peut qu'elle soit désignée dans un centre communautaire, et que quelque temps après elle présente des troubles qui justifient soit un accueil spécifique, soit un hébergement plus individuel (donc un transfert). Afin de pouvoir détecter les troubles ou les situations de vulnérabilité, et pouvoir y répondre adéquatement, il est nécessaire que toutes les structures d'accueil soient équipées et formées convenablement. Il est également nécessaire que le cadre légal ou réglementaire sur la question des transferts de structure à structure soit le plus adapté possible à cela.

La pratique actuelle des transferts permet de répondre au cas par cas à certaines situations socialement mais elle ne repose pas sur un cadre juridique ou réglementaire clair.

Trop de situations dépendent encore de la « bonne volonté » ou non, et des pratiques particulières et différentes de chaque travailleur social ou de chaque structure d'accueil.

Q. 30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

Lors de la désignation du lieu obligatoire d'inscription, l'Agence veille à ce que ce lieu soit adapté au bénéficiaire de l'accueil et dans les limites des places disponibles. L'appréciation du caractère adapté est notamment basée sur des critères comme la composition familiale, son état de santé, sa connaissance d'une des langues nationales ou de la langue de procédure (article 11 § 3 de la loi «accueil»).

L'examen de la situation individuelle du bénéficiaire de l'accueil qui porte notamment sur les signes non détectables a priori d'une éventuelle vulnérabilité telle que présente chez les personnes ayant subi des tortures ou d'autres formes graves de violence psychologique, physique ou sexuelle est prévu par le législateur (article 22 § 2 de la loi «accueil»).

L'objectif de l'évaluation est notamment de vérifier si la structure d'accueil correspond aux besoins spécifiques du bénéficiaire de l'accueil. Si tel n'est pas le cas, le lieu obligatoire d'inscription peut être modifié (article 22§1er de la loi « accueil »).

L'examen de cette situation individuelle doit se faire dans les trente jours qui suivent la désignation du lieu obligatoire d'inscription (article 22 § 1 de la loi «accueil»). Elle se poursuivra par ailleurs tout au long du séjour en structure d'accueil (article 22§3 de la loi «accueil»).

Les modalités de ces dispositions doivent être fixées par arrêté royal (article 22§4 de la loi «accueil»).

L'arrêté royal du 25 avril 2007 détermine les modalités de l'évaluation de la situation individuelle du bénéficiaire de l'accueil.

L'évaluation doit être formulée dans un rapport écrit (article 5) (dont un formulaire-type sera déterminé par le Ministre) qui sera rédigé par le travailleur social de référence (article 4) qui aura réalisé au moins un entretien préalable (article 8). Ce rapport d'évaluation sera déposé dans le dossier social du bénéficiaire de l'accueil qui peut en demander copie (article 6). Le rapport sera validé par la personne responsable du service social au sein de la structure d'accueil (article 9) et peut par la suite être complété tout au long du séjour (article 10). Un bilan de la situation individuelle sera réalisé par le travailleur social de référence au plus tard six mois après la première évaluation (article 10).

L'état de santé d'un bénéficiaire de l'accueil sous le régime de l'aide matérielle peut justifier que le lieu obligatoire d'inscription qui lui a été désigné soit modifié ou supprimé si son état de santé est tel qu'il serait incompatible avec un hébergement en structure d'accueil (article 28 de la loi «accueil»).

Q. 30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Le bénéficiaire de l'accueil a droit à l'accompagnement médical nécessaire pour mener une vie conforme à la dignité humaine (article 23 de la loi «accueil»).

L'accompagnement psychologique nécessaire est assuré au bénéficiaire de l'accueil et l'Agence ou le partenaire peut conclure, selon les modalités définies par le Roi, des conventions avec des organismes et des institutions spécialisées (article 30 de la loi «accueil»).

L'article 36 de la loi «accueil» indique que pour répondre aux besoins des personnes vulnérables, l'Agence ou le partenaire conclut des conventions avec des institutions ou associations spécialisées.

Dans la pratique, les victimes bénéficient d'une aide psychologique, octroyée par le biais de centres de guidance ou de santé mentale extérieurs aux structures d'accueil. Dès l'arrivée du demandeur d'asile dans la structure d'accueil, celui-ci se voit désigner un assistant social/travailleur social (pas d'exigence de diplôme, toute personne qui a une formation de type social -ou une expérience...- peut être engagée comme travailleur social – cf les revendications du secteur par rapport la fonction d'expert social etc...). En concertation avec l'assistant social, le médecin de la structure d'accueil peut décider d'établir un réquisitoire de soins afin que le demandeur d'asile puisse bénéficier d'un accompagnement psychologique plus spécialisé. Il est alors fait appel à des centres de santé mentale, comme par exemple « Racines Aériennes » ou « Exil », qui dispensent des programmes spécifiques d'accompagnement médico-psycho-social destinés à prévenir et soigner les conséquences des traumatismes de la guerre, de la violence organisée et de la torture.

Q.31. About minors:

Q. 31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

Une personne est considérée comme mineure jusqu'à l'âge de 18 ans (article 2, 3° de la loi «accueil»).

Concernant les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés, ils sont également considérés comme mineurs jusqu'à dix-huit ans (article 2, 4° de la loi «accueil»).

Peu importe donc la majorité dans le pays d'origine, l'âge clé en Belgique est d'office 18 ans.

Q. 31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Tout mineur est soumis à l'obligation scolaire qui se termine à la fin de l'année scolaire au cours de laquelle il atteint l'âge de dix-huit ans.

Les mineurs demandeurs d'asile ou non ont accès aux écoles belges sans discrimination. Le droit à l'instruction leur est clairement reconnu. Ils sont exemptés des droits d'inscription que les étrangers doivent généralement payer pour suivre des cours en Belgique.

L'accès au système scolaire est le même que celui des nationaux. Cependant, les Ministères de l'éducation des Communautés flamandes et françaises compétents en la matière ont mis en place depuis plusieurs années un système d'enseignement pour primo-arrivants. Les mineurs ont ainsi accès à une classe d'apprentissage intensif de la langue, de remise à niveau,… Ils peuvent aussi, dans des conditions relativement restrictives, valoriser les études qu'ils ont accomplies dans leur pays d'origine sans devoir passer par une procédure d'équivalence de diplôme qui est lourde et peut accessible à ce type de mineurs, qui ne disposent bien souvent pas d'un dossier scolaire complet, traduit et légalisé.

Des difficultés peuvent surgir au niveau du choix de la langue de l'enseignement quant le mineur est orienté vers des centres d'accueil dans la région linguistique qui ne correspond pas à sa langue.

Les mineurs placés dans un centre fermé n'ont pas accès à l'éducation alors que cet enfermement peut durer plusieurs mois.

Q. 31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Le mineur de nationalité étrangère est soumis à l'obligation scolaire dans un délai de soixante jours à partir de l'inscription des personnes investies de la puissance parentale ou qui assument sa garde en droit ou en fait au registre des étrangers ou au registre de la population (l'article 1er, § 7 de la loi du 29 juin 1983 concernant l'obligation scolaire). Toutefois, dans la pratique, le délai légal de soixante jours court à partir de l'introduction de la demande d'asile et non de l'inscription des personnes visées ci-dessus au registre des étrangers ou au registre de la population qui n'a lieu qu'une fois reconnue la qualité de réfugié.

Le droit à l'instruction est quant à lui garanti à tous les mineurs à l'exception de ceux qui sont en centres fermés.

Dans la pratique, les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés qui sont accueillis dans un des deux centres d'observation et d'orientation ne sont pas immédiatement scolarisés. Ce séjour est normalement de maximum deux fois quinze jours. Dès qu'ils sont orientés vers un accueil à plus long terme, ils sont scolarisés.

Q. 31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

Les élèves « primo-arrivants » (qui viennent d'arriver sur le territoire belge) sont orientés vers des classes-passerelles organisées dans les établissements scolaires financés ou subventionnés par les Communautés (minimum 1 semaine et maximum 1 an). Le passage des élèves au sein de ces classes consiste en un apprentissage intensif de la langue, une remise à niveau pour permettre une intégration optimale dans le niveau d'étude correspondant de l'enseignement en Belgique et la détermination du niveau scolaire.

Q. 31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Le mineur est logé avec ses parents ou la personne exerçant sur lui la tutelle ou l'autorité parentale en vertu du droit belge (article 38 de la loi «accueil»).

Q. 31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Une assistance spécifique est fournie aux mineurs victimes de toute forme d'abus, de négligence, d'exploitation, de torture, de traitements cruels, inhumains et dégradants, ou de conflits armés. Ce soutien comporte des soins psychiatriques et l'accompagnement psychologique au sens large (article 39 de la loi «accueil»).

Q. 31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Un système de tutelle spécifique aux mineurs étrangers non accompagnés est prévu par le chapitre 6 de la loi-programme du 24 décembre 2002 : tutelles des mineurs étrangers non accompagnés.

Toute autorité qui a connaissance de la présence d'une personne qui paraît être un mineur étranger non accompagné en avertit le service des Tutelles (article 6§1er de la loi). Le service des Tutelles est un organisme institué auprès du Service public fédéral Justice qui est chargé de mettre en place une tutelle spécifique pour les mineurs non accompagnés (article 3§1er de la loi).

Le service des Tutelles procède à l'identification du jeune et lui désigne un tuteur s'il réunit toutes les conditions (article 6§2 de la loi) (avoir moins de dix-huit ans, ne pas être accompagné d'une personne qui exerce l'autorité parentale ou la tutelle, être ressortissant d'un pays non membre de l'Espace économique européen et avoir demandé la reconnaissance de la qualité de réfugié ou être en situation de séjour illégal) (article 5 de la loi).

Le tuteur a pour mission de représenter le mineur non accompagné dans tous les actes juridiques, dans les procédures relatives au séjour et dans toutes les procédures administratives ou judiciaires (article 9§1er).

Le tuteur ainsi désigné doit rendre tous les six mois un rapport sur la situation de son pupille auprès du juge de paix du lieu de résidence du mineur. Une copie de ce rapport est transmise au service des Tutelles (article 19 § 1er).

Q. 31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

Premièrement, les mineurs non accompagnés sont accueillis dans un centre d'orientation et d'observation fédéral (COO) (article 40 de la loi «accueil») pour maximum deux fois

15 jours. Il existe un centre francophone à Neder over Hembeek (50 places) et un centre néerlandophone à Steenokerzeel (46 places). Durant ce temps, l'âge du mineur est déterminé. Le cas échéant un tuteur lui est désigné et il fait le choix de la procédure relative au séjour qu'il souhaite introduire. Un profil du jeune est établi par l'équipe sociale pour déterminer les besoins spécifiques du jeune.

Un arrêté royal a été adopté le 9 avril et précise le régime d'accueil au sein des COO (arrêté royal du 9 avril 2007 déterminant le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux centres d'observation et d'orientation pour les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés, publié au Moniteur belge le 7 mai 2007)

Les COO sont des structures d'accueil communautaire dotées d'un régime spécifique en raison des particularités relatives aux mineurs étrangers non accompagnés. Il s'agit bien de centres ouverts. Des mesures sont prises afin d'assurer la sécurité des jeunes dans ces centres. La phase d'observation consiste à dresser un premier profil médical, psychologique et social du mineur ainsi que de dépister une éventuelle situation de vulnérabilité. La phase d'orientation consiste à diriger le mineur vers une prise en charge adéquate à sa sortie du centre. Le séjour dans ce centre est également mis à profit pour l'enregistrement du mineur, son identification et la désignation d'un tuteur.

Deuxièmement, le mineur non accompagné demandeur d'asile est envoyé dans une structure fédérale (267 places), dans une structure collective de la Croix-Rouge (71 places), dans une structure collective d'une Initiative Locale d'Accueil (66 places) ou dans une autre structure (famille proche, famille d'accueil,..). Les structures accueillent entre 10 et 60 jeunes.

Dans les centres d'accueil, les mineurs non accompagnés vivent dans une communauté séparée avec une équipe d'assistants sociaux et d'éducateurs spécifiques.

Les mineurs non accompagnés peuvent aussi être orientés vers des familles d'accueil. C'est souvent le cas pour les plus jeunes. Les mineurs proches de la majorité peuvent eux être orientés vers une « mise en autonomie », c'est-à-dire un logement autonome, souvent encadré par un service spécialisé, mis en place par les structures de l'aide à la jeunesse des Communautés.

Q. 31. I How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

Avec la création du service des Tutelles, le rôle de coordination de la recherche des membres de la famille du mineur non accompagné fait spécifiquement partie des missions de son tuteur (article 11§1er du chapitre 6 de la loi du 24 décembre 2002).

Dans la pratique, le tuteur fait très souvent appel à des organismes internationaux tel le service tracing de la Croix-Rouge. Cet organisme dispose déjà d'une expérience opérationnelle du rétablissement et du maintien des liens familiaux, en étroite collaboration avec le Comité international de la Croix-Rouge et les services de recherche des autres Sociétés nationales de la Croix-Rouge ou du Croissant-Rouge.

L'Office des étrangers peut également faire des démarches pour retrouver les membres de la famille du jeune via ses homologues étrangers.

La législation belge ne prévoit aucune mesure quant à la nécessité du devoir de confidentialité dans le cadre de ces démarches.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

- 32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

Non. L'exposé des motifs de la loi «accueil» indique : « Les autres hypothèses de réduction des modalités d'accueil prévues par la directive ne sont dès lors pas retenues, sans préjudice de l'article 44 relatif aux sanctions » (exposé des motifs du projet de loi, p. 37).

Q. 32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

Non.

Q. 32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

Lorsque les capacités de logement normalement disponibles sont temporairement épuisées, le bénéficiaire peut être hébergé dans une structure d'accueil d'urgence où il bénéficie d'un accompagnement social limité. Le séjour dans une structure d'accueil d'urgence ne peut excéder dix jours et les besoins fondamentaux du bénéficiaire doivent y être rencontrés (notamment nourriture, logement, accès aux facilités sanitaires et accompagnement médical) (article 18 de la loi «accueil»).

Lorsque la capacité d'accueil du réseau est saturée, il existe une possibilité pour l'Agence de ne pas désigner de lieu obligatoire d'inscription (article 11 § 3 al. 4 de la loi «accueil»). L'aide sociale est alors octroyée par un centre public d'aide sociale du territoire de la commune sur lequel se trouve la personne qui a besoin d'assistance.

Q. 32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

Les modalités de l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile confinés à la frontière sont définies par l' l'arrêté royal du 2 août 2002 fixant le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux lieux situés sur le territoire belge, gérés par l'Office des étrangers, où un étranger est détenu, mis à la disposition du Gouvernement ou maintenu, en application des dispositions citées dans l'article 74/8, §1er de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers.

Q. 32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

Non. L'exposé des motifs de la loi «accueil» indique : « Les autres hypothèses de réduction des modalités d'accueil prévues par la directive ne sont dès lors pas retenues, sans préjudice de l'article 44 relatif aux sanctions » (exposé des motifs de la loi «accueil», p. 37).

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q. 33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[214] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

Les différents cas de figure dans lesquels un demandeur d'asile peut être détenu ne sont pas fixés dans la loi « accueil » mais bien dans la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers.

Une loi a été publiée concernant la réforme de cette législation : loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers (M.B., 10 octobre 2006). Les dispositions de la loi reprises dans les présentes réponses entreront en vigueur aux dates fixées par le Roi et au plus tard en novembre 2007.

[214] Please specify it article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 which specifies that "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if has not yet to be transposed).

Les différents cas de détention des demandeurs d'asile peuvent se résumer comme suit.

- Article 51/5 § 1er al.2 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 (modifié par l'article 39 de la loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers).

Autorise la détention du demandeur d'asile pendant l'examen de l'Etat responsable de la demande d'asile si :

- l'étranger possède un titre de séjour ou un visa dont la validité est expirée délivré par un Etat lié par la réglementation européenne relative à la détermination de l'Etat responsable de la demande d'asile;
- l'étranger ne dispose pas de document d'entrée et a séjourné dans un Etat lié par la réglementation européenne relative à la détermination de l'Etat responsable de la demande d'asile;
- l'étranger ne dispose pas de document d'entrée et dont les empreintes digitales montrent qu'il a séjourné dans un Etat lié par la réglementation européenne relative à la détermination de l'Etat responsable de la demande d'asile.

- Article 52 bis de la loi du 15 décembre 1980.

Autorise la détention du demandeur d'asile ou la délivrance d'un ordre de résider en un lieu déterminé à l'égard duquel il existe de sérieuses raisons de le considérer comme un danger pour l'ordre public ou la sécurité nationale.

- Article 54§2 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980.

Autorise la mise à disposition du gouvernement du demandeur d'asile lorsque celle-ci est justifiée par des raisons exceptionnellement graves.

- Article 74/5 § 1er alinéa 1, 2° loi du 15 décembre 1980.

Autorise la détention dans un lieu situé aux frontières du demandeur d'asile qui demande l'asile à la frontière et qui n'a pas de document d'entrée sur le territoire ou dont l'identité ne peut être prouvée.

- Article 74/6 §1er bis de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 (modifié par article 74 de la loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers).

Enumère quinze circonstances dans lesquelles un étranger peut être détenu exceptionnellement durant l'examen de sa demande d'asile afin de garantir son éloignement effectif du territoire :

- l'étranger a été renvoyé depuis moins de 10 ans du Royaume ;
- l'étranger a séjourné plus de trois mois dans un pays tiers ;
- l'étranger a séjourné plus de trois mois dans plusieurs pays tiers ;
- l'étranger est en possession d'un titre de transport valable à destination d'un pays tiers ;
- l'étranger a présenté sa demande tardivement sans justification ;
- l'étranger s'est soustrait volontairement à une procédure entamée à la frontière ;
- l'étranger se soustrait pendant au moins 15 jours à l'obligation de présentation ;
  - l'étranger n'a pas introduit sa demande au moment où les autorités chargées du contrôle aux frontières l'interrogent sur les raisons de sa venue en Belgique ;
- l'étranger a introduit une autre demande d'asile ;
  - l'étranger refuse de communiquer son identité ou sa nationalité ou fournit de fausses informations à ce sujet ;
- l'étranger a détruit ou s'est débarrassé d'un document de voyage ou d'identité ;
  - l'étranger introduit une demande d'asile dans le but de déjouer l'exécution d'une décision d'éloignement ;
- l'étranger entrave la prise d'empreintes digitales ;
  - l'étranger a omis de déclarer qu'il avait déjà introduit une demande d'asile dans un autre pays ;
  - l'étranger refuse de déposer la déclaration relative à son identité, son origine et son itinéraire.

Q. 33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Cette possibilité existe déjà en droit belge avant la transposition de la directive (voyez Q. 33 A et Q.33 C).

Q. 33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

La loi prévoit la possibilité d'enjoindre le candidat réfugié à résider dans un lieu déterminé s'il existe de sérieuses raisons de le considérer comme un danger pour l'ordre public ou la sécurité nationale (article 52 bis de la loi du 15 décembre 1980).

La loi prévoit également la mise à disposition du gouvernement du candidat réfugié lorsque celle-ci est justifiée par des raisons exceptionnellement graves (article 54§2 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980).

Dans la pratique, ces possibilités sont cependant peu utilisées.

Q. 33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

L'Office des étrangers, qui dépend du Ministre de l'Intérieur est compétent pour prendre une telle décision. Il s'agit de la seule autorité compétente.

Q. 33.E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

1. Durée maximale

Principe: la durée maximale de la détention autorisée dans les hypothèses décrites ci-dessus est de cinq mois.

(i) Article 51/5 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980.

Dans le cas où la Belgique examine quel pays est responsable de la demande d'asile, la détention est de un mois maximum mais peut être prorogée d'une période de un mois (modifié par article 39 de la loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers).

Dans le cas d'une demande d'asile pour laquelle la Belgique ne se déclare pas responsable, la détention ne peut être ordonnée qu'en vue de garantir le transfert du candidat réfugié vers le pays responsable de l'examen de sa demande d'asile : durée de un mois (modifié par article 39 de la loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers).

(ii) Articles 52 bis et 54 § 2 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980.

Aucune limitation dans le temps.

(iii) Article 74/5 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980.

La durée de maintien est suspendue d'office pendant le délai pour introduire un recours devant le Conseil du Contentieux des étrangers. La durée de maintien est suspendue durant un mois maximum lorsque le C.G.R.A. examine de nouveaux éléments (article 73, 2°, c de la loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers).

Possibilité d'étendre la durée de la détention à huit mois, lorsque des raisons touchant à l'ordre public ou à la sécurité nationale le justifient

(iv) Article 74/6 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980.

La durée de maintien est suspendue d'office pendant le délai pour introduire un recours devant le Conseil du Contentieux des étrangers. La durée de maintien est suspendue durant un mois maximum lorsque le Commissariat Général aux Réfugiés et Apatrides examine de nouveaux éléments (article 74, 3°, b de la loi du 15 septembre 2006 modifiant la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers).

Possibilité d'étendre la durée de la détention à huit mois, lorsque des raisons touchant à l'ordre public ou à la sécurité nationale le justifient.

2. Délai primaire et la prolongation

Le délai initial de détention est le temps strictement nécessaire à l'exécution de la mesure et ne peut dépasser deux mois.

Une prolongation de cette détention peut toutefois être ordonnée pour une nouvelle durée de deux mois. Une dernière prolongation peut enfin intervenir afin d'atteindre le maximum de cinq mois et ne pourra être ordonnée que par le Ministre lui-même. La notification de la décision de prolongation doit intervenir avant l'expiration du délai primaire de détention.

Cette prolongation de deux mois et ensuite d'un mois est autorisée si trois conditions cumulatives sont remplies (notamment article 74/5 § 3 et article 74/6 § 2):

- les démarches en vue de l'éloignement de l'étranger doivent avoir été entreprises dans les sept jours ouvrables après que la décision de refus de séjour est devenue exécutoire ;

- les démarches en vue de l'éloignement doivent avoir été poursuivies avec diligence;
- une possibilité d'éloigner effectivement l'étranger dans un délai raisonnable doit subsister.

Q. 33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

Il existe cinq centres fermés sur le territoire belge : le centre de transit 127 de Melsbroek (qui accueille les personnes ayant introduit une demande d'asile à la frontière), le centre 127 bis à Steenokkerzeel, le centre pour illégaux de Bruges, le centre pour illégaux de Merksplas et le centre pour illégaux de Vottem. Certains de ces centres fermés accueillent ensemble des demandeurs d'asile et des personnes en attente de leur rapatriement.
Les demandeurs d'asile ne sont pas, sur base de leur statut de demandeurs d'asile, détenus dans des prisons normales.
Au total, ces centres fermés ont une capacité de 600 personnes. La durée moyenne de séjour des 4140 personnes détenues en 2000 était de 16 à 32 jours selon les centres
L'autorité chargée de la direction de ces centres est l'Office des étrangers. Il ne s'agit dès lors pas de la même autorité que celle chargée de l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile, à savoir l'Agence.

Q. 33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

Oui, les membres du UNHCR et de différentes ONG ont accès aux centres de détention dans le cadre de l'exercice de leurs missions (article 44 de l'arrêté royal du 2 août 2002).

Une demande doit être introduite auprès du directeur du centre.

Q. 33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

Le demandeur d'asile visé par les mesures privatives de liberté peut introduire, de mois en mois, un recours contre sa détention auprès de la chambre du conseil du Tribunal correctionnel qui statue en première instance et la chambre des mises en accusation de la Cour d'appel qui statue en degré d'appel (article 71 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980).

Q. 33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

La loi « accueil » ne consacre pas en tant que tel l'application des dispositions contenues dans la directive aux centres fermés.

Le régime applicable aux centres fermés est réglé par l'arrêté royal du 2 août 2002 fixant le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux lieux situés sur le territoire belge, gérés par l'Office des étrangers, où un étranger est détenu, mis à la disposition du Gouvernement ou maintenu, en application des dispositions citées dans l'article 74/8, §1er de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers.

Ce texte de loi prévoit que le demandeur d'asile a droit à une assistance individuelle, médicale, psychologique et sociale (article 6). Il reçoit une brochure d'accueil contenant notamment ses droits et devoirs, les possibilités d'une assistance dans les domaines médical, psycho-social, moral, philosophique, religieux, légal (article 17).

Chaque centre dispose d'un service médical (article 52). Le demandeur d'asile peut faire appel à un avocat intervenant sur la base de l'aide juridique de seconde ligne (article 62) (assistance gratuite).

33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

La législation applicable actuellement aux centres fermés (arrêté royal du 2 août 2002) prévoit la protection d'un ensemble de droits fondamentaux (droit à l'information, articles 16, 17, 68 et 103), droit à l'assistance médicale (articles 13, 52, 56, 59, 61 et 68), droit à l'assistance juridique (articles 62 et 63), droit à un accompagnement individuel, administratif et psychosocial (articles 6 et 68), liberté religieuse (articles 46, 47 et 50), droit à un traitement équitable (articles 6, 7 et 97) et droit individuel de porter plainte (articles 129, 130, 131 et 132).

Dans la pratique cependant, la qualité des conditions d'accueil est très différente pour les personnes détenues en centre fermé (voir rapport du Centre pour l'égalité des chances et la lutte contre la discrimination sur leur site internet : http://www.diversiteit.be/CNTR/FR/migrations/deportation_and_detention/detention/,ain si que le rapport récent réalisé par différentes O.N.G. « Centres fermés pour étrangers : Etat des lieux », http://www.liguedh.be/web/Eve_AgendaLigue.asp#A213).

A titre d'exemples, la plupart des résidents ne sont pas en possession d'une brochure d'accueil ou d'information. Une large majorité des occupants ignorent qu'ils ont le droit de porter plainte. Ils n'ont pas toujours accès à un interprète. L'organisation d'un système de permanence pour les services médicaux pose problème dans quelques centres fermés. De nombreux résidents se plaignent du manque de suivi au niveau de leur santé mentale. Des problèmes sont observés quant à la nature et la qualité de l'assistance juridique. Même si aucun problème ne se pose au niveau de l'encadrement administratif, l'encadrement psychosocial peut quant à lui poser problème. Enfin, le respect de l'unité familiale aux demandeurs d'asile maintenus en centre fermé n'est pas garanti.

De plus, la scolarité pour les mineurs pose problème en centres fermés et ils sont enfermés avec les adultes en contradiction avec l'article 37,c de la Convention internationale des droits de l'enfant.

Concernant le délai de détention, la question se pose, eu égard à l'applicabilité de la directive aux demandeurs d'asile détenus en centres fermés, de savoir si la durée de détention légale de deux mois (prolongeable jusqu'à huit mois) peut être considérée comme étant une période raisonnable, aussi courte que possible.

33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

Les centres de détention accueillent des personnes qui peuvent être considérées comme vulnérables Seule une attention particulière est accordée aux mineurs étrangers non accompagnés (Q.33L).

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Aucune disposition légale n'interdit la détention des mineurs avec leurs parents.

Concernant les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés, l'article 41 de la loi « accueil » porte sur l'inclusion d'un dispositif pour un accueil, dans un centre d'observation et d'orientation (COO) des mena qui se présentent à la frontière et à qui l'accès au territoire est refusé.

Avant, les mena qui se présentaient à la frontière sans disposer des documents requis pour l'entrée sur le territoire étaient placés dans un centre fermé jusqu'à ce que l'Office des étrangers prenne une décision quant à leur éloignement ou entrée sur le territoire, ce qui prenait souvent plusieurs semaines.

Désormais, la prise en charge du mena arrivé à la frontière et qui n'a pas accès au territoire se déroule comme suit.

S'il n'existe aucun doute sur son âge, le mineur étranger non accompagné est directement accueilli dans un centre d'observation et d'orientation (COO).

S'il existe un doute sur son âge, il est d'abord placé dans un centré fermé et le service de Tutelles procédera à la désignation d'un tuteur provisoire. Le service des Tutelles procédera à l'identification du mena et à la détermination de l'âge dans un délai de trois jours ouvrables. Après la détermination de l'âge, le mena est admis dans un centre d'observation et d'orientation (COO), placé sous la compétence du Ministre de l'Intégration sociale. Une décision quant à l'éloignement éventuel du mena devra être prise dans un délai de quinze jours maximum. A défaut d'une décision dans ce délai, l'entrée sur le territoire sera considérée comme effective.

Un arrêté royal du 9 avril 2007 détermine le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux centres d'observation et d'orientation pour les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés (voyez question 31 H).

Le 26 janvier 2006, la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme a rendu une décision positive sur la recevabilité de la requête n°13178/03 présentée par Pulchérie MUBILANZILA MAYEKA et Tabitha KANIKI MITUNGA contre la Belgique. Il s'agit du cas d'une fillette de cinq ans de nationalité congolaise, fille d'une réfugiée reconnue au Canada, ayant été maintenue dans un centre fermé pour demandeurs d'asile entre le 17 août 2002 et le 17 octobre 2002, date à laquelle elle fut refoulée dans son pays. Le 12 octobre 2006, la Cour européenne des droits de l'homme a rendu un arrêt concluant à la violation des articles 3, 8, 5§1 et 5§4 de la Convention européenne des droits de l'homme en la cause.

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

S'agissant des mineurs maintenus dans un centre fermé, aucun enseignement n'est prévu actuellement. L'arrêté royal déterminant les lieux de détention pour étrangers n'aborde nullement cette question (Arrêté royal du 2 août 2002 fixant le régime et les règles de fonctionnement applicables aux lieux situés sur le territoire belge, gérés par l'Office des étrangers, où un étranger est détenu, mis à la disposition du Gouvernement ou maintenu, en application des dispositions citées dans l'article 74/8, §1er de la loi du 15 décembre 1980 sur l'accès au territoire, le séjour, l'établissement et l'éloignement des étrangers).

Au vu de la nouvelle procédure d'asile entrant en vigueur le 1er juin 2007, une procédure d'asile accélérée est prévue pour les personnes maintenues en centres fermés. Ainsi, une décision sur le recours introduit auprès du Conseil du contentieux des étrangers contre une décision du Commissariat Général aux réfugiés et apatrides devrait être rendue dans les 15 jours (article 39/77 de la loi du 15 décembre 1980).

Cependant, aucun délai n'est imposé au Commissariat Général aux réfugiés et apatrides pour rendre une décision relative à la demande d'asile. Par ailleurs, aucune sanction n'est prévue quant au dépassement du délai imposé au Conseil du contentieux des étrangers pour statuer. La procédure d'asile pour les demandeurs d'asile détenus en centre fermé pourrait dès lors durer plus de trois mois. Durant ce délai, les enfants détenus en centres fermés ne seront pas scolarisés.

Q.33.N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

A la date du 15 juin 2006, il y avait 189 demandeurs d'asile maintenus dans des centres fermés dont :

- 44 demandeurs d'asile à la frontière
- 145 demandeurs d'asile à l'intérieur du pays ou en attente de leur envoi vers l'Etat européen responsable de l'examen de leur demande d'asile selon le règlement n°343/2003 du Conseil du 18 février 2003 établissant les critères et mécanismes de détermination de l'Etat membre responsable de l'examen d'une demande d'asile présentée dans l'un des Etats membres par un ressortissant d'un pays tiers.

Douze pour cent des décisions prises par l'Office des étrangers concernant des demandes d'asile sont des décisions d'écrou.

Au cours de l'année 2005, il y avait 1863 demandeurs d'asile maintenus dont :

- 466 demandeurs d'asile à la frontière parmi lesquels 68 demandeurs en attente de leur envoi vers l'Etat européen responsable de l'examen de leur demande d'asile selon le règlement n°343/2003 du Conseil du 18 février 2003 établissant les critères et mécanismes de détermination de l'Etat membre responsable de l'examen d'une demande d'asile présentée dans l'un des Etats membres par un ressortissant d'un pays tiers.
- 1397 demandeurs d'asile à l'intérieur du pays dont 846 demandeurs en attente de leur envoi vers l'Etat européen responsable de l'examen de leur demande d'asile selon le règlement n°343/2003 du Conseil du 18 février 2003 établissant les critères et mécanismes de détermination de l'Etat membre responsable de l'examen d'une demande d'asile présentée dans l'un des Etats membres par un ressortissant d'un pays tiers.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

Il s'agit d'un système centralisé.

En matière d'accueil, les compétences sont dévolues à une agence spécialisée.

Le Ministre compétent est le Ministre qui a l'Intégration sociale dans ses attributions, et dont relève l'Agence fédérale pour l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile (article 2 de la loi «accueil »).

Celle-ci peut conclure des conventions avec des partenaires, c'est à dire une « personne morale de droit public ou de droit privé chargée par l'Agence et aux frais de celle-ci, de dispenser l'aide matérielle au bénéficiaire de l'accueil conformément aux dispositions de la présente loi » (article 2 de la loi « accueil »).

Le livre V de la loi «accueil» accueil définit le statut, les missions et les compétences de l'agence.

Il s'agit d' « un organisme public doté de la personnalité juridique » (article 55 de la loi). Sa structure, son organisation et son fonctionnement devront être déterminés par arrêté royal.

L'article 56 indique que « l'Agence a notamment pour mission d'assurer l'organisation, la gestion et le contrôle de la qualité de l'aide matérielle octroyée aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil » et qu'elle « peut octroyer des subventions en relation avec ses missions ».

Elle est notamment chargée de :

- l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil au sein des structures d'accueil communautaires qu'elle gère ;
- le contrôle de l'exécution des conventions relatives à l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil avec les partenaires ;
- la désignation, la modification et la suppression du lieu obligatoire d'inscription;
- l'organisation du paiement d'une allocation journalière et de la prestation de services communautaires ;

- la transition en cas de transfert d'une structure d'accueil vers un C.P.A.S. ;
- de la coordination du retour volontaire des demandeurs d'asile et des autres étrangers ;
- de l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux mineurs non accompagnés dans le cadre de la phase d'observation et d'orientation ;
- de l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux mineurs séjournant avec leurs parents illégalement sur le territoire et dont l'état de besoin a été constaté par un centre public d'action sociale, lorsque les parents ne sont pas en mesure d'assumer leur devoir d'entretien ;
- l'agence est l'autorité responsable pour le Fonds européen des réfugiés.

Il est prévu, comme le fait aujourd'hui FEDASIL, que l'Agence peut conclure des conventions visant à confier à des partenaires la mission d'octroyer aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle. Il s'agit notamment de la Croix-Rouge de Belgique, d'autres autorités, les pouvoirs publics et les associations (article 62).

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)[215]

L'Agence peut confier à des partenaires la mission d'octroyer aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil le bénéfice de l'aide matérielle (articles 63 et 65 de la loi «accueil»). Ces partenaires sont notamment des ONG telles la Croix Rouge de Belgique, le CIRE, Vluchtelingenwerk Vlaanderen ainsi que des Centres publics d'aide sociale.

Les centres d'accueils sont dès lors publics et privés.

Des conventions sont établies entre les ONG et les Centres publics d'action sociale concernant la prise en charge financière par l'Agence des missions d'accueil.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?[216]

Tout d'abord, il existe 19 centres d'accueil fédéraux publics (Arendonk, Arlon, Bovigny, Broechem, Charleroi, Ekeren, Florennes, Jodoigne, Kappelen, Petit Chateau, Morlanwelz, Neder-Over-Heembeek, Pondrôme, Rixensart, Woluwe-Saint-Pierre, Sint-Truiden, Steenokkerzeel, Sugny, Virton).

Ensuite, nous avons 22 centres de la Croix-Rouge/Rode Kruis (deux entités distinctes).

Enfin, se trouvent les logements particuliers du CIRE, de Vluchtelingenwerk et Initiatives Locales d'Accueil gérées par les Centres publics d'action sociale.

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

Oui. L'Agence désigne un lieu obligatoire d'inscription, que ce soit une structure d'accueil ou un centre public d'action sociale (article 9 à 13 de la loi «accueil»). Les demandeurs sont dès lors répartis sur l'ensemble du territoire belge.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?[217]

Il n'y a pas d'organe centralisé mais il existe au moins une cinquantaine d'associations travaillant sur le terrain avec les candidats réfugiés. La liste des associations francophones est disponible sur le site du C.I.R.E (http://www.cire.irisnet.be/assoc-membres.html). La liste des associations néerlandophones est quant à elle disponible sur le site de Vluchtelingenwerk (http://www.vluchtelingenwerk.be/).

Toutes ces associations portent par le biais d'une action multiple vers le monde politique et l'opinion publique.

Q.39. Q. 39 A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

[217] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

L'article 56 §1er de la loi «accueil» indique : « L'Agence a notamment pour missions d'assurer l'organisation, la gestion et le contrôle de la qualité de l'aide matérielle octroyée aux bénéficiaires de l''accueil. ». Le deuxième paragraphe du même article précise que l'Agence exerce le contrôle de l'exécution des conventions relatives à l'octroi de l'aide matérielle aux bénéficiaires de l'accueil avec les partenaires, notamment la Croix-Rouge de Belgique, les autres autorités, les pouvoirs publics et les associations.

Le Ministre compétent pour les revendications relatives à l'accueil est le Ministre de l'Intégration sociale.

Q.39 B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?[218]

Non.

Mais la loi « accueil » prévoit la mise sur pied de "normes de qualité" des différentes structures d'accueil.

Elles existent déjà par ailleurs chez l'un ou l'autre partenaire, mais sont des initiatives limitées et propres. Il n'a a pas d'harmonisation mais volonté de le faire.

Q.39.C How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?[219]

- Aide matérielle octroyée en application des dispositions de la loi «accueil».

La loi ne prévoit pas les modalités de contrôle par l'Agence du respect des normes en termes qualificatifs ou en termes d'infrastructure. Un arrêté royal peut être pris afin de définir ces modalités (article 17 de la loi «accueil»).

- Aide sociale octroyée par les Centres publics d'aide sociale.

[219] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

D'une part, un contrôle financier est exercé par le Service Public Fédéral Intégration sociale, et d'autre part, un contrôle juridictionnel exercé par les juridictions du travail.

Q. 39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?[220]

L'Agence rédige un rapport annuel.

Ces rapports sont publics et disponibles sur le site internet de l'Agence (www.fedasil.be).

Q.40. Q. 40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

Début 2005, 14.178 demandeurs d'asile étaient accueillis dans l'ensemble du réseau d'accueil. Au cours de l'année 2005, 15.881 nouveaux demandeurs d'asile ont été accueillis dans le réseau. Dès lors, un peu plus de 30.000 personnes ont été accueillies dans le réseau au cours de l'année 2005. Bien sûr, compte tenu des entrées et des sorties, elles n'ont jamais été hébergées en même temps.

Q. 40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?[221]

En 2005, le budget total de l'Agence (FEDASIL) s'est élevé à 238.041.764 Euros se répartissant comme suit : dotation fédérale de 223.176.000 Euros, dotation de la Loterie Nationale de 13.500.000 Euros et une contribution du Fonds européen pour les réfugiés de 1.365.764 Euros.

Il y a lieu de remarquer que ce budget n'est pas uniquement alloué aux demandeurs d'asile mais comprend également l'accueil des personnes en séjour illégal ayant des enfants mineurs en état de besoin et les personnes ne pouvant, pour des raisons médicales ou des raisons indépendantes de leur volonté, retourner dans leur pays d'origine.

Par ailleurs, il faut également prendre en considération l'aide sociale octroyée par les centres publics d'aide sociale.

Q. 40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?[222]

- Aide matérielle :

Cette donnée n'est pas disponible.

- Aide sociale octroyée par un Centre public d'aide sociale :

Personne cohabitante	417,07 Euros/mois
Personne isolée	625,60 Euros/mois
Personne avec ménage à charge	834,14 Euros/mois

Q. 40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

Les frais de prise en charge de l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile sont assurés par le pouvoir fédéral.

Certaines structures d'accueil pour mineurs étrangers non accompagnés sont financées par les Communautés.

Q. 40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?[223]

Oui. La dotation fédérale à l'Agence pour l'année 2007 est de 241.974.300 Euros.

[222] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

L'aide matérielle est donc entièrement prise en charge par l'Agence sur base de l'article 2.44.7 de la loi du 28 décembre 2006 concernant le Budget général des dépenses pour l'année budgétaire 2007 (Monieur belge, 9 mars 2007).

Q.41. Q. 41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions? [224]

Fin décembre 2005, l'Agence employait 995 personnes, dont 888 emplois équivalents temps plein.

137,9 emplois équivalents temps plein desservaient le siège central et 750,8 emplois équivalents temps plein desservaient les centres d'accueils fédéraux.

Le personnel des organismes partenaires travaillant également pour l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile (tels la Croix-Rouge et les Centres publics d'action sociale) n'est pas repris dans ces données.

Q. 41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)? [225]

L'Agence ou le partenaire devra organiser un cycle de formation pluridisciplinaire et continue à destination des membres du personnel des structures d'accueil. Cette formation portera notamment sur des éléments de droit des étrangers, de pédagogie et de psychologie, l'accueil multiculturel, la déontologie, la gestion des conflits, la question du genre ou encore la prise en charge des groupes vulnérables (article 51 de la loi «accueil»).

Le personnel chargé de l'accueil des mineurs étrangers non accompagnés reçoit une formation appropriée (article 42 de la loi «accueil»).

Q. 41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality? [226]

[224] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

[226] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

En vertu de l'article 458 du Code pénal, toute personne dépositaire, par état ou par profession, des secrets qu'on lui confie s'oblige à ne pas les dévoiler, sauf lorsque la loi le lui impose.

Tous les membres du personnel des structures d'accueil sont à tout le moins tenus par une devoir de confidentialité et certains d'entre eux, par leur état ou leur profession, sont tenus au respect du secret professionnel (article 49 de la loi «accueil»).

Les membres du personnel des structures d'accueil sont soumis à un code de déontologie qui devra être arrêté par le Ministre et faisant partie du règlement de travail (article 50 de la loi «accueil»).

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

Aucun problème de traduction de la directive n'est à signaler.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

La plupart des principes généraux mis en place par les lois ne constituent pas une innovation mais figuraient déjà dans des dispositions éparses (différentes lois, différents arrêtés royaux, différentes circulaires).

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

La loi « accueil » a pour mérite d'être clair et de centraliser en une loi nombre de dispositions relatives à l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile.

Cependant, le texte de la loi «accueil» se limite aux matières relevant des attributions du Ministre de l'Intégration sociale. D'autres dispositions de la directive relève également, mais à un autre titre, de la compétence de l'autorité fédérale (Ministre de l'Intérieur (documents à remettre aux demandeurs d'asile, modalités de séjour et de liberté de la circulation des demandeurs d'asile), Ministre de l'Emploi et du Travail (accès des demandeurs d'asile au marché du travail), Ministre de la Justice (représentation des mineurs étrangers non accompagnés), ainsi que de la compétence des communautés (scolarisation et éducation des mineurs) et des régions (formation professionnelle).

Le Conseil d'Etat, dans son avis, a souligné que le projet de loi accueil n'assurait pas la transposition totale de la directive. « 1.3. Il découle des observations qui précèdent que le projet de loi déposé devant les chambres législatives n'assurera pas la transposition complète en droit belge de la directive 2003/9/CE. Si, bien entendu, rien ne s'oppose à ce qu'une directive soit transposée en droit interne par plusieurs instruments juridiques, il convient toutefois de veiller à ne pas présenter une disposition partielle comme étant complète. »

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

Les dispositions d'accueil actuellement en place ne sont pas fort éloignées du prescrit de la directive.

La loi « accueil » a essentiellement visé une coordination des textes.

Les objectifs poursuivis par l'adoption de cette loi sont les suivants:

1) Élaborer un cadre législatif cohérent et clair sur la matière qui permettra de garantir l'égalité de traitement des demandeurs d'asile

Adopter des dispositions légales relatives au début et à la fin de la prise en charge, à la politique des transferts, aux droits et obligations des différentes parties (tant les résidants que les structures d'accueil), élaborer des normes de qualité communes aux différentes structures, définir et harmoniser la mission de l'accueil, le cadre normatif ainsi que le contenu de droits reconnus tels l'accompagnement social, médical, juridique et administratif, etc etc...

Ainsi, la définition des droits et obligations tant dans le chef des demandeurs d'asile que des structures d'accueil et de l'administration, l'harmonisation de certaines pratiques, qui jusque là étaient propres à telle ou telle structure, la codification et donc la définition des contenus du droit à l'accompagnement social, juridique et médical, permettront d'élever au rang de garantie légale (et donc susceptible de protection devant les tribunaux du travail) ce qui n'était avant qu'une pratique, peu transparente, et quasi jamais portée à leur sanction.

2) Offrir un accueil personnalisé aux résidants

L'objectif poursuivi, et commandé par la directive, est d'offrir aux résidants un accueil adapté à leur besoins.

Cela se concrétiserait par :

– l'identification de groupes vulnérables (tels les femmes isolées, les victimes de torture, les personnes malades, les mineurs, ...), dont la directive recommande qu'il leur soit garanti un accueil adapté à leurs besoins particuliers.

– la définition de critères de désignation a priori dans les structures d'accueil (notamment, la connaissance de la langue, présence d'une cellule familiale existante, cas médicaux, personnes vulnérables nécessitant un accueil adapté,...) . Rappelons que le transfert de compétence en matière de désignation du code 207, de l'Office des Etrangers à Fedasil, n'est toujours pas opérationnel. Cela devrait l'être pour la mise en œuvre de la loi, ce qui devrait faciliter la politique de désignation dans un lieu adapté.

– la mise sur pied d'une phase d'acclimatation au sein de chaque structure d'accueil, durant une période de 30 jours, dont l'objectif serait d'évaluer si le lieu désigné correspond bien aux besoins de la personne

– un accompagnement adapté à ces besoins et d'une évaluation continue de leur évolution – une politique de transfert claire, basée sur une procédure et des critères communs à toutes les structures d'accueil, qui faciliterait la modification du lieu de désignation, notamment le passage des structures communautaires aux structures individuelles.

3) Extension du champ d'application de l'accueil à d'autres catégories de personnes

La loi sur l'accueil a la volonté d'étendre le bénéfice des conditions d'accueil à certaines catégories de demandeurs d'asile, qui bien que déboutés de la procédure d'asile, peuvent prétendre à une aide sociale. L'objectif poursuivi est de respecter la jurisprudence de la Cour d'Arbitrage et de la Cour de Cassation en matière de droit à l'aide sociale pour des personnes se trouvant dans l'impossibilité de quitter le territoire pour des raisons indépendantes de leur volonté.

Ainsi, le droit à l'accueil sera garanti aux personnes déboutées de la procédure d'asile, résidant déjà dans une structure d'accueil, qui:

> 1° pour des raisons médicales certifiées ne peut donner suite à l'ordre de quitter le territoire qui lui a été notifié;
> 2° qui pour des raisons indépendantes de sa volonté autres que des raisons médicales, ne peut donner suite à l'ordre de quitter le territoire qui lui a été notifié;
> 3° dont un membre de sa famille au premier degré entre dans le champ d'application de la loi (respect de l'unité familiale)

4° qui a signé un engagement de retour volontaire, et ce jusqu'à son départ effectif.

De même, les familles en séjour illégal avec enfants mineurs, « bénéficiaires de l'accueil » selon les termes de la loi, se voient garantir l'égalité de traitement avec les demandeurs d'asile, ce qui représente une avancée importante par rapport à la pratique actuelle des centres, peu transparente, qui semble offrir un accueil très divergent, et ce tant en terme d'accompagnement médical que social ou d'accès aux infrastructures, activités etc...

Cependant, le débat sur la transposition de la directive a été initié parallèlement à la réforme de la procédure d'asile.

Une des différences fondamentales introduites est que l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile en nature ne dépend plus, avec la réforme, du stade de l'examen de leur demande d'asile mais de la durée de leur demande d'asile.

Ainsi, sous la législation antérieure, le demandeur d'asile bénéficiait d'une aide matérielle lors de l'examen de sa demande au stade de la recevabilité alors que l'aide sociale délivrée par un Centre public d'aide sociale lui était octroyée lors de l'examen au fond de sa demande.

Au vu de la nouvelle législation, le demandeur d'asile bénéficiera d'une aide matérielle pendant un délai qui doit encore être déterminé par arrêté royal (article 11 de la loi «accueil»).

Le projet de loi s'était initialement fixé pour objectif principal de fixer une durée limitée à l'accueil, sans lien avec la procédure, en limitant l'accueil en aide matérielle à un an maximum, quel que soit l'état de la procédure d'asile:

Après un an, passage en aide financière à charge des CPAS - code 207, et accès au marché du travail. Au sein de cette période d'un an en aide sociale matérielle, une distinction doit encore faite entre l'accueil en structure individuelle et l'accueil en centres communautaires:
Au terme d'une période de quatre mois, le demandeur d'asile pourra demander son transfert d'une structure d'accueil communautaire à une structure individuelle, en fonction de ses besoins et de la capacité des places disponibles)

Le Conseil des Ministres a finalement décidé, étant donné les débats sur la réforme de la procédure d'asile, de postposer la fixation de ce délai à une évaluation de nouvelle procédure d'asile .

Le problème principal de l'accueil reste donc entier et n'est donc pas résolu.

Par ailleurs, les informations sur les droits et obligations des demandeurs d'asile sont dorénavant clairement consignées dans la loi « accueil ».

10. Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

Un débat parlementaire a été entamé autour de la transposition de la directive.

Concernant les médias, le débat autour de l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile a été quelque peu éludé par l'importance du débat autour de la réforme de la procédure d'asile qui a eu lieu au même moment.

Au niveau politique, le débat sur la loi « accueil » a été « englobé » par celui sur les réformes de la procédure. La question de la fixation du délai d'un an maximal à l'accueil a été totalement éjectée, au vu des discussions et des enjeux sur la procédure. Il a été finalement décidé, en Conseil des Ministres, de ne pas fixer cette période, mais d'attendre un an, que la nouvelle procédure soit testée, avant de décider quoi que ce soit.

De sorte qu'un des principaux problèmes de l'accueil, qui est celui de la durée trop longue de séjour en centre, ne sera pas réglé. Vu qu'il n'y a actuellement aucune ouverture sur la régularisation des demandeurs d'asile en recours au Conseil d'Etat (qui constitue le public résidant depuis des années dans les centres), le problème reste entier.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

Suite au débat concernant la transposition de la directive, certaines des nouvelles dispositions légales sont plus strictes pour les demandeurs d'asile alors que d'autres sont plus généreuses.

Au vu de la nouvelle législation, le demandeur d'asile bénéficiera d'une aide matérielle pendant un délai à déterminer par arrêté royal.

La loi «accueil » comble cependant certaines lacunes de la réglementation belge par rapport aux exigences de la directives telles évaluation des besoins spécifiques du demandeur d'asile, information relative aux droits et obligations du demandeur d'asile, formation du personnel et des structures d'accueil.

Le législateur belge a mis en place une disposition plus favorable concernant l'application des normes relatives à l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile. En effet, la définition du demandeur d'asile vise non le ressortissant de pays tiers mais de manière plus générale : « l'étranger qui a introduit une demande d'asile, ayant pour objectif soit la reconnaissance du statut de réfugié, soit l'octroi du statut de protection subsidiaire » (article 2, 1° de la loi «accueil»).

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?[227]

- Points faibles

Les dispositions relatives à l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile n'ont pas été transposées aux demandeurs d'asile placés en détention.

L'accès des demandeurs d'asile au marché du travail va être modifié par les projets en cours mais rien n'est encore fixé à ce sujet.

Concernant l'application de nombres de principes relatés par la directive, des arrêtes royaux devront être pris afin d'en assurer la mise en place effective (voir Q.6). Ainsi, le délai maximum déterminé pour l'octroi de l'aide matérielle n'est pas encore défini.

- Points forts

La désignation d'un lieu obligatoire d'inscription permet aux demandeurs d'asile de se voir de suite déterminer un logement.

Le nombre de places disponibles au regard du nombre de demandeurs d'asile est suffisant.

En ce qui concerne l'aide matérielle, il existe une grande diversité de type d'accueil disponible, sur l'ensemble du territoire.

Auparavant, le contenu de l'accueil, des droits et des obligations, des voies de recours et des plaintes n'étaient inscrits que dans la pratique. Le fait d'insérer cela dans une loi l'élève au rang de droit protégé par la censure des tribunaux.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States[228]

La désignation d'un lieu obligatoire d'inscription permet aux demandeurs d'asile de se voir de suite déterminer un logement.

Le mécanisme de la Tutelle mise en place pour les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés a amélioré la prise en charge et l'encadrement de ces jeunes. Il y a dorénavant une personne qui s'occupe explicitement du bien être du mineur. La protection dont bénéficie le mineur est dès lors plus importante.

Les mineurs étrangers non accompagnés ne peuvent pas ailleurs plus être maintenus en centres fermés.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answers.

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.
The actions, taken especially for the transposition of the directive after its adoption, are the slight amendments to the Law on Asylum and Refugees in 2005 and mainly the amendments to the Law on Asylum and Refugees as of 29 June 2007.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.
Yes, there is a tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive or even "summarize" them in brief.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?
The amendments meant to transpose the directive have been published as late as on 29 June 2007. No regulation completing the law is envisaged. Where the standards are equated with those for nationals, reference for details can be made in relevant law for Bulgarian citizens.

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).
No such in-depth preparatory study exists.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).
No such scientific book exists. I haven't come across an article on the issue either. It is a fact that this topic is not yet popular in Bulgaria.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?
The new rules are in force since 3 July 2007. There is hardly any jurisprudence yet because the ongoing proceedings are completed under the old law.
However, there are several interesting cases which are told in the answers to Question 22.C. below.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

The main actor in charge of reception conditions is the State Agency for Refugees under the Council of Ministers. Currently the agency does not pertain to any specific ministry of the government.
The Migration Directorate at the Ministry of the Interior in charge of the immigration detention center might also be regarded as a competent body in this regard since asylum seekers who have entered Bulgaria illegally are detained throughout the procedure on the determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation and the accelerated procedure for examining their application.

Q.11. Q11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

Currently in Bulgaria there are two types of status determination procedures: an accelerated one and a common one. The amendments to the Law on Asylum and Refugees as of 29 June 2007 envisage a procedure for determining the state responsible to examine the asylum application.
The accelerated procedure applies to applications that are considered to be manifestly unfounded. The common procedure is meant to examine credible asylum applications in detail.

The Law on Asylum and Refugees (LAR) does not provide explicitly for different levels of reception conditions regarding the different stages of the asylum procedure. However, differences are implied in law and exist in practice. Asylum seekers in "closed" centers do not enjoy the rights that asylum seekers in "open" centers have. Art.47, Para.2, Subpara.1 LAR provides that "transit centers are assigned for registration, accommodation, medical screening and for carrying out the procedure on determining the state responsible for examining the asylum application and the accelerated asylum procedure of illegal foreigners" Asylum seekers have no freedom of movement outside the transit centre. Currently the head of the State Agency for Refugees has appointed the immigration detention center in Sofia to serve as a transit center. All this means that under Bulgarian law asylum seekers who are in a procedure for determining the state responsible for examining the application for asylum and those who have entered the country illegally and are in an accelerated asylum procedure are detained and have no freedom of movement. Even before the amendments in law were made, the Specialized Centre for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners (that is, the immigration detention center in Sofia) has served as a "transit centre".

According to Art.20, Para.2 of the Ordinance on the Procedure for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners, on the Organization and the Activities of the Specialized Centers for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners, asylum seekers who have been admitted to the common asylum procedure are released from the specialized center (i.e. the transit center).

The Specialized Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners in Sofia (i.e. the immigration detention center), where in practice all asylum seekers who have entered Bulgaria illegally are detained, is designed to accommodate foreigners with deportation orders (all asylum seekers who have been caught to have entered Bulgaria illegally are issued deportation orders) and there is no differentiation in the treatment between asylum seekers and other aliens. They are accommodated in big common dormitories. An important detail that should be paid attention is that asylum seekers there are treated as persons who have breached the law and a feeling of guilt is instilled in them. This adds to the fear of being deported since the embassies are asked for cooperation in the implementation of the deportation orders (the latter are usually issued with a ruling of their preliminary execution, i.e. the appeal has no suspensive effect unless the asylum application is registered). For problems with the registration of asylum applications by the State Agency for Refugees, see the answer to question 14.

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

Generally, the answers are valid for asylum seekers who have been admitted in the common asylum procedure. There are special notes when referring to detained asylum seekers.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

The maximum scope[229] of material reception conditions in Bulgaria includes three elements:

1) Housing is provided in kind: it takes the form of accommodation at the reception center of the State Agency for Refugees.

2) Asylum seekers receive health insurance.

3) For the rest of the material reception conditions asylum seekers receive 55 levs (which equal approximately 27 Euro) per month.

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

As it is obvious from the answer to Q.12.A., material reception conditions in Bulgaria are not sufficient for an adequate standard of living. Although the size of the monthly social assistance provided to Bulgarian citizens is not any higher, asylum-seeking is a circumstance necessary of "positive discrimination".

[229] It refers to asylum seekers who have been admitted to the common asylum procedure and therefore are not detained.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. Q 13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

No. There is no such provision.

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

Regarding the scope of application of reception conditions in Bulgaria, the term used in law is "persons who seek protection". This means that the rules apply equally to three categories of persons: the ones who apply for refugee status, the ones who apply for subsidiary protection status and the ones who apply for asylum before the President of the Republic.

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

No. There are no such specific provisions.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Reception conditions in Bulgaria are not available from the moment one asylum application is introduced; they are available from the moment the asylum application is registered by the State Agency for Refugees. There is a lapse of time between the introduction of the asylum application and its registration. The Amendments to the Law on Asylum and Refugees from 29 June 2007 repealed Para 2 of Art.58 which said that the asylum procedure is initiated with the introduction of the asylum application. Art.58, Para.2 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees has not been followed in practice and the amendment has been made to adapt the law to the practice. Unfortunately this has tremendous negative consequences for asylum seekers and opens the door for corruption since the law does not state a period of time within which an asylum application shall be registered. Asylum seekers who are not detained have to go the Agency for Refugees and beg for "a date", because in the meantime they live in the street. Those who are detained for entering illegally Bulgaria wait for months in the immigration detention center (pending deportation) until their application(s) is(are) registered (they send applications regularly in order to be paid attention; when lawyers send the application that the asylum seeker has written together with a lawyer's authorization, they receive the reply that this applications are inadmissible since should be handed out personally through the director of the detention center). There are cases when the interviewing organ of the State Agency for Refugees goes to the detention center to register/interview or "free" the asylum seeker (the latter means that the asylum application has been admitted to the common procedure), but the person has already been deported to his country of origin as an illegal immigrant.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

Reception conditions end after a final decision is reached: either an administrative or a judicial one; either one granting status or one refusing it. The appeal against the refusal of the status has suspensive effect.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Yes. According to Art.29, Para.5 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees the rights to housing and food and the right to social assistance shall not be granted to persons who have made a successive asylum application. This is a general rule; there is no individual assessment within the meaning of Art.16, Para.4 of the Directive. Even before the drafting of this provision, this has been the practice.

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too a large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

According to Art.58, para.6 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees, the applicant shall be "guided" as to "the procedure for submitting the application, the procedure that will follow and his rights and obligations, as well as about organizations that provide legal and social aid to foreigners". The grammatical interpretation of this provision leads to the conclusion that "the rights and obligations" of which the applicant receives guidance refer to the asylum procedure and not the reception conditions. There is no legal provision concerning the reception conditions.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Art.58, Para.6 LAR makes no reference as to whether the "guidance" shall be given in writing or orally. To some extent, it is good that "in writing" is not the only option. The latter could create practical problems leading to situations when asylum seekers are refused oral clarifications with the reply "read your brochure". There are cases when asylum seekers cannot read (for example, Chinese asylum seekers are often illiterate). However, if there is no information in writing, there are no guarantees that the obligation to provide the information has been realized.

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

Art.58, Para.6 LAR provides that the guidance shall be made in a language which the asylum seeker understands. In practice currently if you go to the reception room at the State Agency for Refugees where asylum seekers make their contact with the authorities through a front desk man, you will see that all announcements are written only in Bulgarian language. The front desk man speaks also in Bulgarian.

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

The new provision of Art.58, Para.6 LAR as of 29 June 2007 refers to this deadline by saying that the information shall be provided no later than 15 days from the submission of the application.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

There is no such list.

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

There is no information in writing. On 10 October 2007 the State Agency for Refugees submitted a written reply to the draft of the current report where it claims that such brochures are prepared at the moment. In practice the authorities sometimes give an advice orally and refer the person to the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee (for free legal aid), the Red Cross and the Caritas (for social assistance).

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

If there is a translator available in connection with the asylum procedure, the latter can be used to translate this information as well.

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

There are two organizations that provide free legal aid: the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee and the Legal Clinic for Refugees and Immigrants at Sofia University. There are three main organizations that provide social assistance: the Bulgarian Red Cross, the Council of Refugee Women and the Caritas. UNHCR has a branch office in Sofia but it does not provide direct assistance to asylum seekers; it rather enhances the capacity of the national actors to do so.

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

According to Art.40, Para.1, Subpara.1 LAR, asylum seekers receive a "registration card". It is explicitly stated that this registration card does not certify the identity of the person. The registration card is a certification of the status as asylum seeker.

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

The law does not provide for exceptions in which another equivalent document or no document is issued.

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

The registration card of a foreigner in a procedure for determining the state responsible to examine his asylum application is valid for 3 months.

The registration card of a foreigner in an accelerated status determination procedure is valid for 1 month.

The registration card of a foreigner in a common status determination procedure is valid for 3 months.

The law only states that the document's validity may be extended; there is no legal obligation for the state organ to do that.

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[230]?

The law does not provide for a deadline. In practice there is a lapse of time between the submission of the asylum application, its registration and the issuance of a document. Before a document is issued, asylum seekers who are not in detention receive a small piece of paper with a date on which they should appear to receive their document. In the meantime, if policemen stop them in the street, they could consider them illegal immigrants: an order for deportation is issued and asylum seekers are detained at the immigration detention center.

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

No.

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

The documents are issued by the State Agency for Refugees, separately from the Ministry of the Interior. According to Art.65 LAR the data is kept in a register by the State Agency for Refugees. According to Art.54, para.2, subpara.3 of the Law on the Foreigners in the Republic of Bulgaria, the Ministry of the Interior operates with the data of asylum seekers for the purposes of fulfilling its tasks of "administrative control of foreigners". The State Agency for Refugees is obliged to provide this information to the Ministry of the Interior. Art.58 states that the State Agency for Refugees and the Ministry of the Interior exchange information as to the documents issued to asylum seekers.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers :

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

There is no provision transposing Art.7, para.1 of the Directive. Freedom of movement is not forbidden only to asylum seekers who have been admitted in the common asylum procedure. See explanations in the answer to Q.11.A.

I wouldn't say that "the unalienable sphere of private life" of asylum seekers is not affected in the Specialized Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners since there are cameras in all facilities of the center (except for the bathrooms).

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

My answers to questions 20.B. and 20.C. are entwined for which I have answered after Q.20.C.

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

No reasons of public interest or public order are stated in law as determining the place of residence or the place of reception.

There are two reception centers for asylum seekers in Bulgaria (reception centers are not under a "special regime", i.e. asylum seekers there are not detained): one in Sofia (Bulgaria's capital) and another one in a small village in the province of Bulgaria - Banya, Nova Zagora municipality.

The law does not provide for a right of the asylum seeker to choose her place of residence or place of reception. Asylum seekers who are accommodated in a reception center and have freedom of movement cannot choose whether to be accommodated in Sofia or in Banya. Art.29 (4) LAR states that asylum seekers are accommodated in a reception center after an assessment of their "health condition, family and material status" is made and under conditions and order to be set by the head of the State Agency for Refugees. It is questionable whether the head of the State Agency for Refugees shall be allowed to pose additional conditions other than the ones set in law on the accommodation of asylum seekers.

According to Art.29, Para.6 LAR, throughout the common asylum procedure (as differentiated from the accelerated one) when the asylum seekers disposes of the necessary means to meet his main living needs, he may be granted permission to have an accommodation on his own account at an address which he chooses and in this case the asylum seeker does not receive financial or material assistance by the State Agency for Refugees. This provision begs the question why such permission is needed if the asylum seeker is the one who covers his expenses. Is the accommodation a coercive one or is the assistance provided by the State Agency for Refugees obligatory?

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)

The decision is taken by the head of the State Agency for Refugees. The only provision in this regard is Art.29, Para 4 LAR stating that asylum seekers are accommodated in a reception center after an assessment of their "health condition, family and material status" is made and under conditions and order to be set by the head of the State Agency for Refugees. The Rules for the Internal Order at the two reception centers do not contain distribution provisions as to which categories of asylum seekers shall be accommodated in them.

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

This issue is not regulated in law. In practice there is "an evening hour" before which asylum seekers should be at the reception center or otherwise not let in. In order for an asylum seeker to spend a night outside the centre without sanctions, permission shall be obtained.

Q.21. Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Yes, rules on reduction and withdrawal of reception conditions exist.

According to Art.29, Para.5 LAR, the rights to accommodation and food and the right to social assistance are not recognized to an asylum seeker who does not belong to a vulnerable group and:

1. submits a successive asylum application;
2. his asylum procedure is suspended.

According to Art.14 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees, the status determination procedure shall be suspended where the alien, without good reasons:

1. fails to appear for an interview within 10 working days, after having been duly invited to do so;

2. changes his/her address without giving notice to the State Agency for Refugees or the relevant reception centre;

3. refuses to assist the officials of the State Agency for Refugees in clarifying the circumstances pertaining to his/her application.

According to Art.77, para.2 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees the procedure suspended shall be resumed, if the alien seeking protection produces evidence that objective obstacles prevented him/her from appearing or assisting the officials.

According to Art.15, para.1, subpara.7 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees, a status determination procedure shall be discontinued where the alien fails to appear before the relevant official of the State Agency for Refugees within three months after the procedure has been suspended in accordance with Article 14.

The suspension and the discontinuance of the procedure equals withdrawal of reception conditions.

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice?

There is no explicit provision regarding reception conditions, but the law says that in this case the application is considered to be manifestly unfounded and is examined under an accelerated procedure. The latter affects the reception conditions for the asylum seeker.

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

This is issue is not regulated in Bulgarian law.

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the document attached to our sending)?

No.

Q.21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome?

Unfortunately asylum seekers in Bulgaria are not well-informed of their rights and do not dare to complain about the reception conditions. The asylum cases in courts concern decisions to refuse status.

There is no possibility for administrative appeal under the Law on Asylum and Refugees since the Head of the State Agency for Refugees is directly subordinate to the Council of Ministers. Under general administrative law, acts of officials from the State Agency for Refugees (SAR) are challengeable before the Head of SAR.

Q.22. Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

Art.21 of the Directive is not transposed in Bulgarian refugee legislation. General administrative law rules would apply that every administrative act which affects a person's rights and interests is an object of appeal. However, the lack of an explicit provision in the Law on Asylum and Refugees stipulating the right to appeal administrative acts relating to reception conditions leads to legal uncertainty in this regard.

Acts of the Head of the State Agency for Refugees can be appealed only before a judicial instance and not an administrative one.

According to general administrative law rules, individual administrative acts must include a statement as to whether they can be appealed, within what period of time and before which body. However, this is not always followed in practice by the State Agency for Refugees as is shown by a recent case of the Iraqi asylum seeker Ali who was given a decision for the discontinuance of his asylum procedure, without a translator and without the decision stating the possibility for appeal: in order for Ali to agree to sign the paper, another detainee at the immigration center was called to "translate" for him what the document was about and Ali was told that he was given protection status. A month and a half after that his lawyer managed to receive the information that Ali's asylum procedure had been discontinued and when asking Ali about receiving any paper he showed the decision with which he thought he was given status.

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

General rules of the Law on Legal Aid would apply stating that a public defender is assigned in cases where the person cannot afford to pay for legal services.

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

There have been attempts to appeal in court the inaction of the State Agency for Refugees with regard to registering the asylum applications and with regard to providing reception conditions to asylum seeekrs in open centers.

Currently the Sofia City Administrative Court (a judicial court dealing with administrative law cases) looks at the case of Bedjan Poshtiban v. The State Agency for Refugees (case number 2161/2007) in which the Iranian asylum seeker claims compensation for non-pecuniary damages suffered from the inaction of the State Agency for Refugees to register his asylum application for months, namely, the threat for refoulement and the factual deprivation of freedom at the immigration detention center.

In June and August 2007 the Sofia City Administrative Court also heard the case of Zia Abdulrahman v. The State Agency for Refugees (case number 2050/2007) in which the asylum seeker appealed the inaction of the State Agency for Refugees to issue him a document certifying his status as an asylum seeker and the inaction as to giving him the 55 levs monthly aid for food. As a result of that inaction Zia had spent the last three months in desparate conditions closed in his room because he was afraid to go out for fear of being detained again as undocumented immigrant. After the first court session in June 2007, the State Agency for Refugees issued the document to Zia and paid him social aid for the last three months. As a result of that, in August Zia withdrew his claim from the court.

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

No, there is no such mechanism.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

Supplementary Art.1 (3) of LAR stipulates that "family members" are:

- the spouse or the person with which there is a proven stable and long-lasting relationship and their minor unmarried children;
- the children which are no longer minors and are not married and who are unable to make a living for health reasons;
- the parent*s* of any of the spouses who are unable to take care of themselves because of their age or illness, and have to live in one household with their children.

As far as the transposition of Art.8 and Art.14 (2) (a) of the Directive is concerned, Art.29, Para 4 LAR states that asylum seekers are accommodated after an assessment of their family status is made.

Q.24. Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

Housing is provided in kind. There are two reception centers for asylum seekers in Bulgaria: one in Sofia (Bulgaria's capital) and another one in a small village in the province of Bulgaria - Banya, Nova Zagora municipality.

The law states that asylum seekers are accommodated in a reception center after an assessment of their "health condition, family and material status" is made and under conditions and order to be set by the head of the State Agency for Refugees.

According to Art.29, Para.6 LAR, throughout the common asylum procedure (as differentiated from the accelerated one) when the asylum seeker disposes of the necessary means to meet his main living needs, he may be granted permission to have an accommodation on his own account at an address which he chooses and in this case the asylum seeker does not receive financial or material assistance by the State Agency for Refugees. In this regard the national law does not contain the material and procedural law guarantees as stipulated in Art.7, Para.2 ("for reasons of public interest, public order or, when necessary, for the swift processing and effective monitoring of his or her application") and Para.4 ("shall be taken individually and established by national legislation") of the Directive.

The decision on housing is taken by the head of the State Agency for Refugees. The Rules for the Internal Order at the two reception centers do not contain distribution provisions as to which categories of asylum seekers shall be accommodated in them.

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers? Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

The only places where the housing expenses of asylum seekers are covered by the state are the two reception centers at the State Agency for Refugees. There is no information available regarding their capacity for places neither in the government decrees for their establishment nor in the rules for the internal order in them.

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?

The places for asylum seekers are sufficient. It is said that the asylum seekers are obliged to live in the two reception centers of the State Agency for Refugees since with the declining number of asylum seekers in the past years the reception centers fight to justify their existence.

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

No.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

As far as only open centers are concerned, no such differentiation is made since they apply only to asylum seekers who have been admitted to a common status determination procedure and to asylum seekers in an accelerated procedure who have entered the country legally.

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

No.

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

There is no general regulation, but each reception center has Rules for the Internal Order issued by the Head of the State Agency for Refugees.

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision? Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

Yes, the Rules for the Internal Order foresee sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules.

According to Art.5 and 6 of the Rules for the Internal Order at the Reception Center for Refugees at the State Agency for Refugees at the Council of Ministers in Sofia, as of 12 September 2005, there are the following grounds not to admit in or to expel an asylum seeker of the accommodation at the reception center:

1) Throughout the asylum procedure the asylum seeker was caught and handed over trying to cross or having crossed the Bulgarian border;

2) The asylum seeker does not fulfill his obligations under the Rules for the Internal Order;

3) After having been invited does not appear for an interview for 10 days and does not present justifying grounds for doing that;

4) The asylum seeker's application for status is a successive one.

According to Art.7 of the Rules for the Internal Order, the alien is expelled from the accommodation of the reception center following an order of the director of the reception center. The alien is given 1 hour (after the notification of the order) to leave the accommodation voluntarily; if the latter is not done, he is expelled coercively.

The above described exhausts the regulation of this issue. Under general principles of administrative law, every administrative act can be appealed.

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

No.

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

No.

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

There is no transposition of Art.14, §2, (b) of the Directive.

Asylum seekers in open centers who have freedom of movement can visit the offices of the respective actors.

Asylum seekers in closed centers can call via phone (if they have the financial means to call).

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

There is no transposition of Art.14, §7 of the Directive.

No access is allowed to the accommodation and housing facilities themselves.

Asylum seekers in open centers visit lawyers and NGOs by going to their office or meeting with them outside the accommodation center itself. There is an office of the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee at the registration center for asylum seekers at the State Agency for Refugees.

Asylum seekers in closed centers can call a lawyer or an NGO via telephone. The visits by lawyers are realized in special counsels' rooms at the specialized center for temporary accommodation of foreigners. There are visit hours for lawyers on Monday and Wednesday from 9:30h to 12:30h and from 13:30h to 16:30h and on Friday from 9:30 to 12:30h.

As far as NGO representatives are concerned, the latter are not allowed to visit asylum seekers in closed centers unless there is a signed agreement to that end between the NGO and the head of the National Police Directorate at the Bulgarian Ministry of the Interior, which in practice is very difficult to achieve. For the latter rule the head of the specialized center for temporary accommodation of foreigners invokes the Rules for the Internal Order at the specialized center, but they are not published and no access to them is allowed.

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

There is no access to the accommodation facilities themselves anyway.

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

The medical screening is obligatory and is organized by the state. According to Art.29, Para.4, last sentence, of LAR, "the alien is submitted to medical screening and examinations and remains under quarantine until the results become known." There is no implementing regulation of the law and no details are known as to the type of examinations made. There are blood tests, but it is not known whether they involve HIV tests.

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

According to the Law on Asylum and Refugees: yes. Art.29, Para.1, Subpara.4 LAR provides that asylum seekers have a right to health insurance, accessible medical care and free medical aid according to the conditions and the order laid down for Bulgarian citizens. However, this provision is not harmonized with Art.33, para.1, Subpara. 4 of the Law on Health Insurance which provides for the right to health insurance only to persons who have already received protection status.

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?

By word of mouth asylum seekers come to know of doctors who agree to be GPs' of "refugees" and go to their offices.

Q.28.

Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

1 year.

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

It is not yet clear how the new Art.29, Para.3 LAR as of 29 June 2007 will be applied. It stipulates that "the alien seeking asylum has a right to access the labour market if the procedure has not been completed up to one year since the submission of the asylum application for reasons that cannot be attributed to the applicant". It seems that the "access to the labour market" referred to in Art.29, para.3 LAR does not involve waiving of the requirement for a work permit under the Ordinance on the Conditions and the Procedure for the Issuance, Rejection and Revocation of Work Permits for Foreigners in the Republic of Bulgaria (16 April 2002). According to the latter, a work permit for asylum seekers is not required only within the labour activities organized in the centres of the State Agency for Refugees. This questions the "access to the labour market" of asylum seekers since a work permit to an alien is issued only under the condition that the employer proves that no Bulgarian citizen is available to do the job in question. The latter requirement is known to be "a mission impossible" to complete.

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

There is no legal elaboration of Art.29, Para.3 LAR providing for the conditions under which the access of asylum seekers to the labour market will be realized. The general conditions for the issuance of work permits to aliens seem to apply.

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Under the Ordinance on the Conditions and the Procedure for the Issuance, Rejection and Revocation of Work Permits for Foreigners in the Republic of Bulgaria a work permit to an alien is issued only under the condition that the employer proves that no Bulgarian citizen is available to do the job in question.

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

According to Art.47, Para.2, Subpara.3 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees, one of the territorial units of the State Agency for Refugees are integration centres "for providing Bulgarian language training, vocational qualification and other activities indispensable for the integration of aliens seeking or who have been granted protection in the Republic of Bulgaria."
However, there is no legal elaboration as to the conditions and the order according to which vocational training of asylum seekers is realized.
Currently there is one integration center at the reception center of the State Agency for Refugees in Sofia.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

The only change is the provision of Art.29, Para.3 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees which application begs questions (see answers to Q.28.B and Q.28.C).

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)
Art. 13 §§ 3 and 4 of the Directive have not been transposed in Bulgarian legislation. No such rules exist currently.

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30.

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

Art.30a LAR refers to minors, pregnant women, elderly people, single parents with minor children, disabled people, persons who have been subjected to serious forms of physical, psychological oe sexual violence. However the law does not provide for a procedure for identification of these persons with special needs.

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

The reduction of reception conditions under Art.29, para.5 LAR (see answer to Q.21A above) is not applied to persons belonging to a vulnerable group. There are special rules regarding unaccompanied minors. This exhausts the provisions elaborating the declaratory character of Art.30a LAR that the specific situation of vulnerable groups is taken into account.

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

There are no provisions in this regard. Article 17 § 2 of the Directive is not transposed in national legislation.

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

There are no specific provisions in this regard. It is only Art30a LAR (mentioned above) which has a declaratory character.

The national reporter is aware of the case of the Afghan asylum seeker Mohammad Niazi who was subjected to torture on several occasions in prisons in Afghanistan (a medical examination certified signs of beatings with metal bars on the back of the head, breaking of the nose, breaking of the right arm, torture with electricity, cigarette burning of the skin and falanga). He was granted humanitarian protection for 1 year in Bulgaria after which it was discontinued as was done in the cases of all Afghan refugees. However Mohammad could not return to Afghanistan since he feared individual persecution. He was detained as an undocumented immigrant pending deportation for over 17 months (from 8 November 2005 to 17 April 2007). On 17 April 2007 he was released as an asylum seeker admitted in the common asylum procedure which happened after his lawyer managed to receive by post from Afghanistan the originals of the documents proving his persecution. Before that he had only their fax copies, but the latter were not recognized as a valid proof by the State Agency for Refugees who refused to register the asylum application until receiving the originals. In spite of being released on 17 April 2007 however, on 3 July 2007 Mohammad was given a decision for the discontinuance of his RSD procedure (the reasoning being that his case was examined in the past and now he does not present any new facts, but only new evidence). He appeals the 3 July decision now.

Another example of treatment of torture survivors in Bulgaria is the case of the Chechnyan asylum seeker Said Kadzoev who was twice detained and tortured in Russia by the Federal Secirity Service: the second time he was considered to have "disappeared" for 7 months throughout which he was detained and interrogated every day with painful use of electricity, putting a gas mask on his head and stopping the air income, injecting him panick substances, squeezing his legs between metal presses, etc. After entering Bulgaria illegally at the end of October 2006, he was detained at the Special Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners. He submitted his written asylum application on 1 November 2006 (and later repeatedly sent other applications), but it wasn't registered until 30 May 2007. The asylum application was registered after Said protested by shouting on 28 May 2007 as a result of which he was put in the isolator of the immigration detention center (a cell without anything in it, but a camera). After a quick interview at the isolator itself on 30 May 2007, his asylum application was rejected as manifestly unfounded, without any medical examination as to his torture claims.
Since 1 November 2006 Said is detained at the immigration detention center. Since 28 May 2007, even at the moment of writing this report – 29 August 2007 – he has been in solitary confinement in the isolator.
His lawyer appealed the decision to reject his asylum application as manifestly unfounded. The first court session in this case is on 20 September 2007.

The isolator (or "the special room with security measures" as it is called by the authorities) is used as a disciplinary punishment at the immigration detention center in Sofia. As said above at Q.11.A., there is no distinction in the treatment of asylum seekers and other undocumented immigrants at the center.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

18 years.

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

According to Art.26, para.1 of LAR minor asylum seekers have right to access to education under the conditions and the order applicable for Bulgarian citizens.

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Art.10, Para.2 of the Directive is not transposed in Bulgarian legislation. The Ordinance on the Procedure for Admission of Refugees at State and Municipal Schools of the Republic of Bulgaria (27 July 2000) does not regulate these issues.

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

According to Art.47, Para.2, Subpara.3 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees, one of the territorial units of the State Agency for Refugees are integration centres "for providing Bulgarian language training, vocational qualification and other activities indispensable for the integration of aliens seeking or who have been granted protection in the Republic of Bulgaria." This is the only regulation in law of the issue.

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

In practice, yes. Art.29, Para.7, Subpara.1 LAR provides that the first option for accommodation of unaccompanied minors is with their adult relatives. This could be invoked as guidance for the intention of the legislator to accommodate minors with their adult family members. However, there is no explicit provision as to minors in general. Another problem is that no explicit mention is made to people, who are not biological relatives, but have actually taken care of the child and are close to her (in case of absence of relatives).

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

There is no explicit transposition of Art.18, §2 of the Directive in refugee specific legislation. The general rules on "children at risk" would apply under the Law on Child Protection. However, although similar, the definition of "a child at risk" given in the Supplementary Art.1, Para.6 of the Law on Child Protection does not fully correspond to the specific refugee-related hypothesis envisaged in Art.8, Para.2 of the Directive.

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

According to Art.25, Para.1 LAR unaccompanied minor asylum seekers are appointed a legal guardian. However, according to Art.25, Para.5 LAR, if no legal guardian has been appointed, unaccompanied minors are represented during the procedure by the Social Assistance Agency under Art.15, Para.7 of the Law on Child Protection. Art.25, Para.2 of LAR raises three important concerns. First of all, it discourages the incentive of the State Agency for Refugees to look for the appointment of a legal guardian under Para.1 by not stating under what conditions a legal guardian is not appointed. Secondly, it provides for the representation of the minor asylum seeker only during the asylum procedure, while the legal guardian is appointed in principle. Thirdly, under Art.15, Para.7 of the Law on Child Protection, the Social Assistance Agency is not obliged to assume the representation of the minor; it only has the right to do so.

The Law on Asylum and Refugees does not transpose the requirement of appointing the legal guardian or representative as soon as possible. There are no time limits to doing that. Neither does it provide for a regular assessment by the appropriate authorities.

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

Art.29, Para.7 of LAR copies the text of Art.19, Para.2, first indent, of the Directive.

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

Art.19, Para.3 of the Directive is not transposed.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?
No regulation in national legislation.

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas
No regulation in national legislation.

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities
No regulation in national legislation.

Q.32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post
No regulation in national legislation. However, asylum seekers are often detained at border posts and nearby police stations.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).
No legal regulation of the issue.

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[1] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

[1] Please specify if article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed).

Currently in Bulgaria immigrants who have been caught to have entered Bulgaria illegally are issued deportation orders and detained at the Special centre for temporary accommodation of foreigners with the purpose of executing the deportation. Asylum seekers write their applications for asylum at the detention centre, but stay there until they are admitted in the common asylum procedure (as differentiated from the accelerated one).

Art.47, Para.2, Subpara.1 LAR provides that "transit centers are assigned for registration, accommodation, medical screening and for carrying out the procedure on determining the state responsible for examining the asylum application and the accelerated asylum procedure of illegal foreigners" Asylum seekers have no freedom of movement outside the transit center.

According to Art.20, Para.2 of the Ordinance on the Procedure for Temporary Detention of Foreigners, on the Organization and the Activities of the Specialized Centers for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners, asylum seekers who have been admitted to the common asylum procedure are released from the specialized center (i.e. the transit center).

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Art.7, para.3 of the Directive has no explicit transposition in Bulgarian law other than the one mentioned above in the answer to Q.33A regarding transit centers. The latter can be considered as an implicit transposition.

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

Yes. According to Art.44, Para.5 of the Law on the Foreigners in the Republic of Bulgaria, when there are obstacles to the immediate execution of an order for deportation, the alien is obliged to report daily to the authorities. However, Art. 44, Para.6 of the Law stipulates that, under the discretion of the competent authorities, the alien can be "coercively accommodated" in a Specialized centre for temporary accommodation of foreigners. The latter becomes a rule in practice and all immigrants who have been caught to have entered the country illegally are detained. It is difficult to appeal that detention before court since Art.44, Para.6 leaves the issue to the discretion of the administrative organ. Lawyers of detainees argue in court that the order of "coercive accommodation" does not contain motives as to why the authorities have chosen to detain the alien rather than oblige him to report daily.

As far as the Law on Asylum and Refugees is concenrned, the alternative to the closed "transit center" are the "registration-reception centers" under Art.47, Para.2, Subpara.2 LAR. The legal provision states that they are assigned for "registration, accommodation, medical screening, social and medical assistance and for carrying out the procedure on determining the state responsible for examining the asylum application and the status determination procedure".

The provision of a guarantor is not regulated in law, although there is an administrative practice for that. The immigrant is obliged to present a notary declaration by a guarantor as to their address and subsistence.
Unfortunately, since the institute of the guarantor is not regulated in law, but exists only as an administrative practice, the presentation of a notary declaration by a guarantor does not oblige the authorities to release the alien. Often guarantors receive a reply that they have no "legal interest" to guarantee for that alien.

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.
The orders for "coercive accommodation" under Art.44, para.6 of the Law on the Foreigners in the Republic of Bulgaria, are issued either by the Directors of the District Police Directorates (for example, from the border districts where the alien was caught to have entered the country illegally) or by the Director of the Migration Directorate at the Bulgarian Ministry of the Interior.

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?
An asylum seeker can be detained until he/she is admitted in the common asylum procedure.
There is no legal provision that stipulates a time limit for the detention at the specialized centre for temporary accommodation of foreigners/ the transit centre. The latter situation leads to prolonged and arbitrary detention of asylum seekers for an unlimited period of time. It might take several months until an asylum application is registered and the asylum seeker admitted in a common asylum procedure.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?
As mentioned above, asylum seekers who have been caught to have entered the country illegally are detained at the Specialized Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners which is situated in the suburbs of Sofia. The law provides for "transit centers", but no such special centers only for asylum seekers exist at the moment. In the Specialized Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners asylum seekers are detained together with other undocumented immigrants or foreigners who have expulsion orders. They are accommodated in big common dormitories.

The authority managing the Specialized Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners is not the State Agency for Refugees, but the Migration Directorate at the Bulgarian Ministry of the Interior.

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?
NGOs are not allowed access to the places of detention unless there is a signed agreement to that end between the NGO and the head of the National Police Directorate at the Bulgarian Ministry of the Interior, which in practice is very difficult to achieve. For the latter rule the head of the specialized center for temporary detention of foreigners invokes the Rules for the Internal Order at the specialized center, but they are not published and no access to them is allowed.
Lawyers in personal capacity have access to the detainees after presenting their card as members of the Bar.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?
As any other administrative act, the order for "coercive accommodation" can be appealed before the administrative organ that is next in the administrative hierarchy and before the court.
Usually asylum seekers do not find any sense in appealing in an administrative way, because the orders are automatically confirmed.
There are no special procedural provisions regarding the court review of detention orders. When the court is overloaded, it takes a lot of time for a court hearing to be scheduled and there are no time priority rules in this regard.

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?
The legal regulation of the Specialized Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners which currently serves as a transit center for asylum seekers makes no reference to reception conditions for asylum seekers. The latter fall under the general regime of undocumented immigrants.

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

There are no provisions in Bulgarian legislation that guarantee reception conditions rights to asylum seekers at the Specialized Center for Temporary Accommodation of Foreigners.

It also deserves paying attention to the fact that before the asylum application of the detained asylum seeker is registered, the latter has no rights at all. As mentioned above, sometimes it takes the State Agency for Refugees months to register an asylum application (if it becomes registered at all – e.g., if the asylum seeker is not deported before that).

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

No such measures exist.

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Unaccompanied minor asylum seekers are detained before their asylum application is registered.

Here is a recent example: Alban Gashi, born in 1991, fleeing from Kosovo, entered Bulgaria in May 2007 and was immediately detained as an undocumented immigrant. A deportation order was issued against him. Alban did not appeal it since he didn't know its content and no legal representative or lawyer was appointed for him (although he was unaccompanied). He made his asylum application at the detention center as soon as possible, but it waited for months to be registered. In the meantime, Alban was detained under the same conditions as adult undocumented immigrants. I came to know his case at the beginning of September from other detainees. I asked Alban to write again his asylum application and accompanied him to witness its submission to the officials from the detention center. The officials severely refused to accept it with the argument that he had already submitted one. After Alban's lawyer wrote official letters to a number of authorities competent in child protection, Alban's asylum application was registered in October 2007 and he was transferred to the reception center of SAR.

There are cases in which the State Agency for Refugees waits on purpose for several months until the asylum seeker comes of age before registering his asylum application. According to the Law on Asylum and Refugees, minor asylum seekers are automatically admitted into the common asylum procedure which means that once their asylum application is registered, they should be released from the detention centre.

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?
No. In theory no minors should be detained since they are automatically admitted in the common asylum procedure.

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?
No such statistics is made. Asylum seekers at the Specialized centre for temporary accommodation of foreigners are rather regarded as undocumented immigrants to be deported.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).
The system of providing reception conditions is centralised. The State Agency for Refugees at the Council of Ministers provides the reception conditions.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)
At the moment they are public.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?
There are two reception centres that are "open" accommodation centres. There is one specialized centre for temporary accommodation of foreigners that is a "closed" accommodation centre. There are many places all over the country for temporary "arrest' of undocumented immigrants while they are transferred to the specialized centre for temporary accommodation of foreigners in Sofia.

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

A step in this direction is made with the reception center in the village of Banya in the Bourgas district. However, there are no legal provisions regarding this spread of responsibilities.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?
No.

Q.39. Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?
The Head of the State Agency for Refugees at the Council of Ministers. However, it is the organ that is responsible of providing the reception conditions. Subordinate officials with competence in reception conditions are part of the structure of the State Agency for Refugees.

Q.39.B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?
No.

Q.39.C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?
Since the body responsible for the provision of the reception conditions is the same body that exercises control over these activities, I wouldn't say that a system of objective monitoring, guidance and control exists.

Q.39.D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?
No.

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

There is no information as to the asylum seekers covered by reception conditions. The statistics of the State Agency for Refugees only states that from 1.01.2006 to 31.12.2006 there were 639 asylum seekers in Bulgaria.

Q.40.B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?
No such figures are available.

Q.40.C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?
No such figures are available.

Q.40.D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?
The costs are supported by the central government.

Q.40.E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the national provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?
I don't have information as to how much money Bulgaria has allocated to this end, but as shown in the answer to Q.12, material reception conditions in Bulgaria are not sufficient for an adequate standard of living.

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

The total number of the permanent employees at the State Agency for Refugees is 141. It is difficult to differentiate among them the precise number of persons working in the field of reception conditions since most of them seem to have competences in this field. Here are some examples with the numbers of permanent employees at

- Administrative, legal and information service department – 15 persons;
- Finance and management department – 22 persons;
- Methodism, procedural representation and identity documents department - 14 persons
- Reception and integration of refugees department – 12 persons
- Reception centre for refugees in the Banya village – 15 persons
- Reception centre for refugees in Sofia – 33 persons;
- Integration centre – 8 persons.

The source of this information is the Structural Statute of the State Agency for Refugees.

Q.41.B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?
In this regard there is no transposition in Bulgarian law.

Q.41.C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?
No.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)
There are no big problems with the translation.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?
Yes, in legislation. They've remained almost the same.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?
In the majority of cases - No.

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.
So far the changes are of minor importance.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)
No, this issue is not yet topical in Bulgaria.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

The changes that have been introduces so far seem to make the national rules more generous (e.g., the permission to work after one year in procedure, the 15-days deadline to provide the asylum seeker with information, the provision on the right of people with special needs, etc.). However, it is too early to assess since the transposition amendments are in force since 3 July 2007.

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?

Major weaknesses:

- Lack of a time limit within which the State Agency for Refugees shall be obliged to register the asylum application after its submission;
- Lack of differentiation between asylum seekers and illegal immigrants before the admission of the asylum seeker into the common procedure.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States

I can't think of any.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answer.

QUESTIONNAIRE FOR THE NATIONAL REPORT ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DIRECTIVE : RECEPTION CONDITIONS OF 27 JANUARY 2003

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

The main norm of transposition is the Reception Conditions For Asylum Seekers Regulations of 2005. (Administrative Act Regulation 598/2005) which was published in the official Gazette , Number 4064 dated 30/12/2005 .

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

The other norms of transposition are : The Refugee Law 2004 , which is a statutory (legislative instrument)

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

The Council of Ministers is the competent authority for the purposes of adopting the legal norms of reception conditions . These regulations are subject to approval of The house of Representatives. Implementation of the regulations is primarily in the hands of the Migration Department, Ministry of Interior.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

The legal technical choices applied in respect of the transposition are of a legislative and regulatory nature.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

The tendency to simply copy the provisions of the Directive manifests itself only in those aspects of reception conditions where there would appear to be no specific policy in place in relation thereto.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

It would appear that all texts have now been adopted including the all-important "informational for asylum seekers".

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

As far as one can reasonably assess no in-depth preparatory study as to the changes effected by the transposition, is currently available.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

No recent scientific book or article appears to have been published in this regard.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

There are no decisions of jurisprudence as yet, on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire.

Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

The Asylum Service of the Ministry of Interior is the main actor and central point of coordination of the system of reception conditions, since it is the actor that implements the policy of asylum, initiates and determines, as well as coordinates the asylum procedure, and finally takes final decision on the applications of the asylum seekers. Nonetheless, other state services are necessarily involved in the system of reception conditions and those are: the Police of the Ministry of Justice, the Immigration Office under the auspices of the Population and Migration Archive Department of the Ministry of Interior, the Welfare Office and the Labour Office of the Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance, the Ministry of Health.

Asylum seekers can apply for asylum in any Immigration police station at any entry point within the territory of the Cyprus Republic. After they have applied they are supposedly sent to the Welfare Office to obtain the allowance they are entitled to and to access any rights lawfully provided to them. As soon as they apply for asylum they are immediately issued with a confirmation letter with which they can have access to their rights. In some cases when asylum seekers want to access some of their rights they are asked for a residence permit, called the "pink slip", although the confirmation letter should be adequate. The Ministry of Health is responsible for the medical check of asylum seekers which is provided to them for free as part of the system of reception conditions. In essence, the medical examination is undertaken to ensure that Asylum Seekers do not suffer from any contageous disease that may be transmitted to the local population. Following the medical check the asylum seekers go to the Immigration Office to apply to the residence permit; the "pink slip" is sent to them via mail and it takes almost half a year or longer to receive it. The Asylum Service is responsible for the process of the asylum applications; the Service sends the letters to the address that the asylum seekers have submitted in their application and calls via phone to inform the asylum seekers for their personal interview. The Asylum Service is responsible for the conduct of the personal interviews of the asylum seekers. Following the personal interview the Asylum Service takes a decision on the application of the asylum seeker, taking in consideration all the facts and evidence that the asylum seeker has provided in the application and in the interview, and moreover the decision of acceptance or rejection is announced to the asylum seeker via mail. If the application is rejected the asylum seekers have thirty days to appeal to the Reviewing Authority, which will conduct the second review and thereafter issue a rejection or acceptance letter, as the case maybe. If the Reviewing Authority's letter conveys a rejection, the asylum seeker has the right of recourse by way of judicial review to the Supreme Court in seventy five days. (Although this is often done through a private lawyer, there is free legal support from one NGO's – Future Worlds - legal advisor and it is anticipated that additional legal assistance will be forthcoming from another NGO – KISA – through a joint European Refugee Fund and Governmental initiative). In this regard, it would be pertinent to note that such procedure does not have a suspensive effect. If they do not choose recourse to the Supreme Court they are supposed to receive a letter informing them that they have to leave the country in fourteen days, although this letter is not always received by the asylum seekers usually because asylum seekers change their residence (in order not to be tracked down by the Immigration Police) and they do not inform the Asylum Service, therefore it is sent to a previous address of the applicant. Other reasons for not receiving this letter are an acute lack of co-ordination amongst relevant governmental departments and weaknesses in maintaining and accessing files/ records at the Asylum Service.

Q.11.A Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

Availability of types and levels of reception conditions is not specifically dependant upon particular stages of the asylum procedure and are to be implemented in conformity with the Regulations, irrespective thereof and without differentiation. The reception conditions regime also embraces, in a like manner, applicants whose status is being determined by the member state responsible for examining eligibility under the Dublin accord. (53 (1) of the Regulations).

There are no different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure since the reception conditions are applicable as soon as the asylum seeker submits the asylum application and with the issuing of the confirmation letter they are entitled to all the rights stipulated in the Regulations on Reception Conditions.

The asylum procedure is as follows:

Asylum seekers can apply for asylum in any Immigration police station at any selected/ designated entry points within the territory of the Cyprus Republic. As soon as they submit their application they are issued with a confirmation letter, with which they can access their rights on the reception conditions. They are sent to the Welfare Office of the Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance to apply for the public allowance they are entitled to. The Welfare Office carries out an assessment on the economic situation of the asylum seekers in two stages, the fast-track and the final research, namely, an initial accelerated assessment process for the purpose of effective emergency interim payments where necessary and a final assessment/ evaluation procedure whereby it is determined whether they are in actual need of public help in order to sustain themselves. After carrying out the initial assessment, an application is accepted, the asylum seeker receives the emergency welfare allowance temporarily until the final assessment is conducted. They are entitled to public accommodation and welfare allowance, however due to limited capacity at the Reception Centre. Asylum seekers that reside in private accommodation receive a bigger amount of welfare allowance than those who reside at the Reception Centre.

Medical screening is compulsory and asylum seekers have free medical examinations of whose results are documented in an individual medical report which is given to the asylum seekers and the Asylum Service for the completion of the examination of the asylum application. The Ministry of Health is responsible for the medical examination of asylum seekers which is provided to them for free as part of the system of reception conditions. Following the medical check the asylum seekers go to the Immigration Office to apply for the residence permit; the "pink slip" is sent to them via mail and it takes almost half a year or more to receive it. With the residence permit they obtain a status of temporary residence and they also have the right to access the labour market. (although such access is more apparent than real in that asylum seekers are restricted to working in the farming and husbandry domain in the agricultural sector where, in any event, there are a very limited number of vacancies, hardly sufficient to cope with a multiplicity of applicants).

The Asylum Service holds files for each asylum seeker and follows the above procedures and documents them in the respective files of asylum seekers. As soon as the application is processed, (a procedure which may be delayed considerably- in some cases years) the Asylum Service calls the seeker for the individual interview, where the seeker is supposed to give more in-depth evidence about his/her case. The interview is conducted by the eligibility officers of the Asylum Service; in most cases with an interpreter been present Following the personal interview the Asylum Service conducts a full re-examination and reaches to a decision on the application of the asylum seeker, taking in consideration all the facts and evidence that the asylum seeker has provided in the application and in the interview. The decision of acceptance or rejection is announced to the asylum seeker via mail. If the application is rejected, the asylum seekers have thirty days to appeal to the Reviewing Authority, which will re-examine the case and issue a rejection or acceptance letter accordingly. If the Reviewing Authority's letter notifies the asylum seeker that his application has been rejected, he has the right of recourse (by way of judicial review) to the Supreme Court through a private lawyer (since there is no free legal support for asylum seekers) in seventy-five days. If they do not choose to refer the matter to the Supreme Court they are supposed to receive a letter informing them that they have to leave the country in fourteen days.

Q.11.B Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

In the absence of the applicability of reception conditions to distinctive procedural stages, no answer may be given to this particular question.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12.A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

Material reception conditions are provided through the Welfare Allowance by the Welfare Office of the Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance. The Welfare Allowance is generally provided in money, except to asylum seekers that are detained in the Police Detention Centres. The basic amount given to asylum seekers that do not reside in the Reception Centre in Kofinou is around 213 Cyprus pounds (Euros 355). For asylum seekers with families an extra amount of around 106 Cyprus pounds (Euros 177) is given for dependants (including spouses) over 14 years old, and around 63 Cyprus pounds (Euros 105) for dependants under 14 years old. Payments are to be effected for each dependant. In addition, asylum seekers are entitled to 106 Cyprus pounds (Euros 177) for accommodation rental upon production of lease agreement/receipts (although in practice rental assistance would appear to be the exception rather than the rule).

Material reception conditions are also provided through accommodation in the Reception Centre in Kofinou; however the capacity in the Centre is significantly limited to around 80 – 100 persons only and very few asylum seekers have access to the Centre, only exceptional cases of single women and families (although very exceptionally some single men have been permitted to stay, in real terms this option is not available to them) At the Centre they are provided with food, limited free transportation (a return bus ticket provided once a day to travel to any city under the control of the Republic of Cyprus), transportation of children to school, transportation to the hospital in emergency. Asylum seekers that reside at the Reception Centre in Kofinou receive 50 Cyprus pounds (Euros 83) plus 10 Cyprus pounds (Euros 17) for each dependant. Although most of their basic needs are provided in the Centre these monetary allowance is given to them to cover for the breakfast that is not provided by the Centre but also for their own personal expenses.

The asylum seekers receive the Welfare Allowance if when filling in the application they inform the officials that they are not in a position to sustain themselves and they cannot obtain food, clothing and residence without the allowance. Asylum seekers that request the Welfare Allowance are subject to the laws and conditions set under the Public Allowance Laws of 1991-2003 of the Republic. In practice, the number of applicants who received welfare allowances are minimal.

The reception centre at Kofinou does in fact provide children with clothing and accessories (satchels, bags, cases), which are required for school. However, although there is no Governmental budget allocation for providing adults' clothing, there is a sizeable stockpile of garments available by virtue of charitable donations and these are distributed accordingly.

The reception centre also provides hygienic sanitary items to meet the needs of 'asylum' occupants.

Q.12.B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

As the Asylum Service claims the Welfare Allowance provided to asylum seekers is provided under the same criteria and for the same amount of money as for Cypriots. However, it is not possible to know whether the amount given to Cypriots is indeed the same given to asylum seekers. Nonetheless, even if the amount is the same it must be noted that this amount is insufficient for asylum seekers to cover all of their costs. Firstly, the fact that asylum seekers have to pay for approximately around 150 Cyprus pounds of rent including electricity and water supply (approximately 79% of the welfare allowance they receive), since they cannot be hosted to the Reception Centre in Kofinou due to its limited capacity of around 80-100 persons, suggests that the allowance is insufficient. Asylum seekers face problems since they have difficulties in paying for rent and in many occasions they have to reside in apartments with very little space as they are not in a financial position to afford otherwise. Yet they face problems in providing for their children since the amount left following payments of rent is insufficient to provide the necessary needs for their family. It must be noted that only around 350 asylum seekers out of the approximate amount of 10,000 asylum applicants receive the welfare benefit, therefore it can be assumed that the rest of asylum applicants have inadequate resources to support themselves, hence most of them, even those who receive the welfare allowance and who reside in the Reception Centre, find illegal employment (in which, in most cases they are exploited, face discrimination and violation of their human and basic rights) in the sectors of agriculture which is inadequate to receive such a huge number of employees. It must also be noted that many women and children who apply for asylum find it difficult to work in these sectors and hence they face tremendous difficulties in covering their costs. Also it must be mentioned that usually the procedure to obtain the welfare allowance takes around 3-4 months and until then asylum seekers have difficulties in maintaining their economic sustainability.

It ought to be pointed out that whilst asylum applicants are entitled to receive the welfare benefit upon presentation of the confirmation letter, in practice, many are denied this particular benefit for the following reasons:

- Although relatively small in number, those detained would, under the circumstances, be precluded from applying for welfare allowance.

- The fact that the procedure for obtaining the welfare allowance takes long, and the amount provided is considered inadequate discourages some asylum seekers from applying for it.

- The welfare service examines each case as mentioned in question 30A and this means that it can decide that some asylum seekers may not fulfil the criteria for welfare allowance.

- There is a possibility that asylum seekers are unaware of this entitlement, since they might not have been informed that they can be provided with this allowance, or they might not know how to apply for the allowance or what procedure to follow in this regard.

- There have been incidents where the asylum seekers had problems in espressing themselves to the Welfare officers because of language problems, since translators are not always available in the welfare service.

  Lack of effective communication and co-ordination between superiors and subordinates engaged in welfare services regarding the manner in which applicants were to be dealt with, have necessarily resulted in instances where this created an unfavourable climate for dealing equitably and effectively with matters in hand.

Perhaps the key underlying problem which may conceivably be regarded as the primary contributory factor in obstructing a more liberal approach with regard to payment of the welfare benefit is the state's bureaucratic 'machinery' or 'red-tape' culture which is not effectively geared towards achieving an efficient speedy and systematic process.

As is apparent from answers to Q10 and Q11, asylum seekers are issued with a confirmation letter upon application for asylum status. However, full enjoyment of reception rights (particularly welfare benefit) may take 3-4 months during which time no help in kind or financial support is forthcoming, (refer to difficulties encountered in dealing with bureaucracy impediments at Welfare service).

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13.A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

As to the question of whether international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention, there is no express provision in the Asylum Regulations which is the norm of transposition in Cyprus. However, the Asylum Regulations do provide that they will apply to applicants who fall within the provisions of the Refugee Law 2000-2004. This inter alia provides that a "refugee" is one who, due to fear of persecution for racial or religious reasons or for reasons of nationality, membership of a particular social class, or political affiliation/ beliefs is not willing to return to the country of which he is a citizen or of which he was ordinarily resident. The Refugee Law further defines "asylum" as protection and rights which are made available to an "alien" (the latter as defined in the Aliens Immigration Law) who is recognised as a "refugee" (as defined above by the Refugee Law)

Q.13.B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

Scope of application of reception conditions is not extended to the asylum seekers other than refugees under the Geneva Convention.

Q.13.C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

There are no specific provisions for reception conditions in respect of diplomatic or territorial asylum.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Yes- Reception conditions are available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced. (Subject to provisions in the Regulations which allow for reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions in certain circumstances as envisaged by the Directive).

In theory the reception conditions are available as from the moment the asylum application is introduced. However, in practice the Welfare Office procedure to provide the Welfare Allowance can take really long. There are two stages in this procedure; (a) emergency help, in money, is provided to asylum seekers until all conditions are met, however the Welfare Office conducts a research, which takes long to be processed, on the conditions of the asylum seeker before the emergency help is given; (b) welfare allowance is given after the examination of all conditions is complete, yet this process can take really long time.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

S30 of the Regulations. Suggests that reception conditions end upon the negative outcome of an administrative appeal. (Or if no appeal is filed within thirty days of an administrative decision having been made). A right of recourse to the Supreme Court (by way of Judicial Review) is also available under the regulations and in accordance with Article 146 of the Constitution. However any such judicial review would (in contrast to an administrative appeal) not have a suspensory effect so that effectively all entitlements to reception conditions would thereby cease.

Q.16. Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

No. There is not yet an accelerated procedure for cases of successive applications for asylum.

Q.17[231]. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q.17.A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

The Regulation on the Reception Conditions of Asylum Seekers, of the Refugee Law of 2005, in article 4 (1) foresees that the Asylum Service of the Ministry of Interior (the competent authority for the asylum procedures and other relative actions) issues a leaflet (in languages that are considered understandable to the applicants) for their information regarding:

(a) their rights

(b) the provisions they are entitled to regarding the reception conditions and the ensuing procedures for their access to these provisions

(c) the organizations or groups of people that provide them with legal support and/or support regarding the reception conditions, including medical and health care, and

(d) their obligations to which they have to conform to in relation to the reception conditions.

The Asylum Service has produced an "informational leaflet for asylum seekers" which, inter alia, lays down applicants' rights as regards the following:

- to legally stay in Cyprus
- to move freely in Cyprus
- the right to work (subject to current guidelines)
- to receive public assistance through social welfare
- to free medical care on the same basis as for Cypriot citizens
- access to education for underage asylum seekers and/or underage asylum seekers children

The leaflet also mentions the following obligations:

- to follow the laws and regulations of Cyprus
- not to leave Cyprus without the permission of the Director of the Civil Registry and Migration Department
- to notify change of address within three days of such change to the District Immigration Office
- to respond to letters sent by the asylum service failing which examination of claims will be discontinued

Although the leaflet has been printed there would appear to be practical problems in terms of its availability and effective dissemination at strategic points, thereby running the risk that asylum applicants would have to rely on information from their colleagues or from Governmental officers at the relevant points.

Q.17.B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Please refer to previous answer which is self-explanatory.

Q.17.C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available.

When information is provided orally, in many cases it is not provided in a language fully comprehended by the asylum seekers. The languages usually used for the provision of information in some police stations are English, French and Turkish. Only in extreme cases interpreters are used for providing oral information to asylum seekers. However, provided the information leaflet will be readily accessible to applicants, they will be informed in a variety of languages whereby the leaflet has been translated into French, Turkish, Farci, Urdu, Bandla, Arabic, Hindi, English, Chinese and Sinhala.

Q.17.D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Any kind of information is unavailable therefore the deadline is not respected. However, the Asylum Service claims that the information is provided to applicants upon the submission of the application. Sometimes information is provided in the confirmation letter given to asylum seekers upon submission of the application.

Q.18[232]. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extent a mandatory provision):

Q.18.A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

The informational leaflet provides information as to whom the asylum applicants can lodge their appeals and in this regard provides contact details of the refugee reviewing authority which is the competent body for this process. Other information covers contact details of at least two NGOs as well as the UNHCR who may provide free of charge services to asylum seekers (the two NGO'S listed are 'KISA' and 'APANEMI'. The Asylum Service will need to update this however as due to a recent development, APANEMI is no longer active. Furthermore two additional active NGO'S will be required to be added to the list to include the 'Unit for Rehabilitation of Victims of Torture' and the 'Future Worlds Centre'. However, in

Q.18.B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Although written information is available to asylum seekers, this is not efficiently disseminated as indicated previously. Oral information is provided in exceptional cases and many asylum seekers rely on other applicants who may exploit the situation by asking for money in exchange for guidance and assistance.

Q.18.C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

Yes, information is generally provided in a language understood by asylum seekers in terms of the information leaflet text (see available languages above). However when oral information is provided there are rarely interpreters available, particularly at the welfare service where asylum seekers are required to attend from time to time.

Q.18.D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

There are only three organisations active in this field: KISA (Action for Equality, Support and Antiracism), Future Worlds, APANEMI: Women's Information and Support Centre. KISA is the most active non-governmental organization in the field of refugees, asylum seekers, and migrants and withholds more expertise from the rest of the NGOs in this field. It has been actively involved in the protection, support and assistance, as well as in the defence of the rights of refugees, asylum seekers and migrants in Cyprus. Lately it has been acting more like a pressure group in order to achieve its aims to defend the lawful rights of these groups of people. Future Worlds in a newly established non-governmental organization in this field and its main activities for the moment are legal support to asylum seekers, as well as provision of necessary information as it concerns reception conditions and other relative issues (including the Unit for the Rehabilitation of Victims of Torture). APANEMI is a small capacity NGO that provided social support to asylum seekers and provides them with any other kin of informational assistance they need. There are also other organizations/institutions/actors/individuals that are involved in this area through other means, such as through academic research, surveys, conferences, seminars, training courses, awareness campaigns and publications. Such institutions are the Mediterranean Institute of Gender Studies, the International Peace Research Institute of Oslo in Cyprus, the Intercollege Research Center.

Q.19 Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19.A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

A confirmation letter is issued to the asylum seeker following the application, which is just a certification of status that the person has filled an application for asylum and can use that document according to the Laws and Regulations on Refugees. With the confirmation letter the asylum seeker can access his/her entitled rights as foreseen in the legislation on the reception conditions. With the confirmation letter and after the medical examination the asylum seeker obtains the alien card which has the status of identity document.

The alien card, formally referred to as the "Alien Registration Certificate" is simply an identity document which is issued by the Aliens and Immigration office of the Ministry of Justice and, constitutes proof that a foreigner (not necessarily or exclusively an asylum seeker) has applied for a particular status (e.g. asylum, employment, student, visitor etc.). This is reflected by the following text in the document itself:

"It is hereby certified that the above- named alien has been duly registered as an alien in the Register of Aliens in the category of (asylum, student etc., as the case may be)"

Q.19.B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

There is no equivalent document issued and there are no cases that no document was issued.

Q.19.C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

The confirmations letter is valid until the application is examined and determined on second instance by the Asylum Service. (Section 8 of the Refugee Law- Law 6(1) of 2000, as amended, provides that the applicant is entitled to a temporary residence permit until a final decision on his application is reached. The residence permit ("pink slip") is valid for a year and each year it needs to be renewed.

The so called "Pink Slip" represents a temporary residence permit which is granted to enable the holder (not necessarily or exclusively an asylum seeker) to remain in Cyprus temporarily by applying for an extension at least one month before its expiry date. (The validity of this permit is granted in accordance with Article 8(1) and 8(2) of the Refugee Law 2000/2002 6(1).

The Alien Card, on the other hand, is valid indefinitely as this is only an identity document, which simply requires notification of any subsequent change in the holder's residential address.

Whilst the main document providing an asylum seeker with access to reception conditions is the Confirmation Letter, this constitutes a component part of the other documentary formalities (pink slip and alien card) which are requirements pertaining to aliens in general.

The confirmation letter serves as proof of the applicant's status as an asylum seeker towards any authority of the Republic until the issuance of the special temporary residence permit (pink slip) and secures the access of the holder to the rights and benefits provided by law (medical treatment, application for work, welfare benefits, public education, etc.).

Q.19.D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[233]?

Section 5(1) of the Regulations requires the issuance of the confirmation letter immediately upon submission of the Asylum seeker's application. This would also appear to be the case in practice.

Q.19.E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

According to the Regulation on the Reception conditions of 2005, article 16 foresees that the Director, following a reference from the Supervisor, issues the necessary travel documents to the applicant, only if this is necessary, every time that severe humanitarian reasons arise which prescribe the presence of the asylum seeker in another country.

Q.19.F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

There is a different central system of registration of asylum seekers and aliens. It is an electronic database that contains the file numbers, the countries of origin of the asylum seekers, and their names, and if the applicants travelled in and out of Cyprus.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers[234]:

[233] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.20.A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Asylum seekers are free to move within the territory of the Cyprus Republic; not in the occupied areas.

Q.20.B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

There is only one Reception Centre in Cyprus positioned in the area of Kofinou. The Centre can only accommodate 80-100 individuals, although the number of asylum seekers is approximately around 10,000. Accommodation at the centre is available only to single women and families. In very exceptional circumstances some single men have been authorised to stay at the centre. The place of residence does not depend on the asylum procedure since the State does not provide sufficient housing resources to accommodate asylum seekers. Asylum seekers seek accommodation on their own initiative. There are no restrictions as to where they may seek accommodation since the State does not have sufficient provision for accommodation. However, article 8 (1) of the Regulations on the Reception Conditions of 2005 foresees that the Minister of Interior has the power to decide upon the place of residence of the asylum seekers or to restrict the right of freedom of movement in specific areas of the Republic for reasons of public interest, and this decision is to be published in the Official Gazette of the Republic. Most asylum seekers find apartments which they rent and reside. Nonetheless, asylum seekers face acute problems in paying the rent, since as previously mentioned, the amount of public help they receive is insufficient for this purpose.

It is evident that the Kofinou Reception Centre is entirely inadequate to deal with the influx of asylum seekers and its acute imitations in terms of critical lack of capacity generates a multitude of problems which have a substantial negative impact on those who need it most. There is therefore an urgent and imperative need to look at fresh options that would serve to resolve the all-important need for emergency accommodation and adequate reception facilities.

Q.20.C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

As mentioned previously the State does not provide any other kind of accommodation except the Reception Centre in Kofinou which has limited capacity. The asylum seekers, since they have no other choice, find accommodation by themselves through renting. The Welfare Allowance is insufficient to cover all of their expenses including rent, therefore the fact that the State does not provide them with an extra amount of money for rent shows that the personal economic situation of the asylum seekers is not taken into consideration, as well as other matters of determining their personal situation. The place of residence normally does not affect the provision of benefits from reception conditions, since the asylum seekers have not many choices for accommodation.

Q.20.D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)[235]

Asylum seekers distribute themselves to cheap renting accommodation. However, many have problems in renting accommodation because many accommodation owners ask for deposit, which asylum seekers do not have and the Welfare Service in very extreme cases pays for the deposit or part of it. It has been noted by asylum seekers that they rent a small capacity room/apartment in which many of them reside so that they divide the amount of rent.

Q.20.E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

An asylum seeker has a general right to freedom of movement. This is a logical consequence of the fact that the vast majority are in any event living in "open" accommodation facilities (Houses, apartments, flats as opposed to the reception centre which houses a negligible number of persons who are predominantly single women and families). Temporary permission to leave their place of residence is thus not really an issue and as such, there are no regimented restrictions as to an individual's movements (although exceptionally, a specific area may generally be designated by ministerial order, out of bounds for reasons of public interest and may thereby preclude one's movement there).

Q.21.A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Yes- Rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions do exist under 525 (1)(a) of the Regulations. Whereby such reduction or withdrawal may be effected under circumstances: where an asylum seeker:

- (i) Abandons a place of residence as determined by the competent authority without informing it. –OR-
- (ii) Does not appear for personal internews as arranged by the Asylum Unit of the Ministry of Interior –OR-
- (iii) Does not comply with requests to provide information in the context of the relevant asylum procedure.

And

In respect of the foregoing, the asylum seeker does not offer any reasonable explanation in relation thereto.
In Addition S25 (1) (b) of the Regulations for reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions where the asylum seeker:
-Has already lodged an application for asylum in the Republic of Cyprus
-S25 (1) (c) allows for somewhere an applicant has concealed financial resources and has thereby been "unjustly enriched" by the provision of material reception conditions.
-S25 (1) (d) provides another ground for reduction withdrawal an asylum seeker has failed to prove that his application was made as soon as reasonably practical after arrival in the Republic.

Note: The Regulations do not distinguish between cases of reduction and withdrawal and no provision is made in respect of ensuring access to emergency health care under all circumstances.

Q.21.B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice[236]?

This has been transposed but there is no indication as to whether there are any cases in practice.

. [236] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or to be completed on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire

Q.21.C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

Mechanisms are in place by virtue of an individual's rights under the constitution to challenge administrative decisions (e.g. through Judicial review).

Q.21.D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the documentation pack you received at our meeting in Brussels in April)?

Q.21.E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome[237]?

There are no administrative appeal decisions or judgements in cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal.

Q.22.A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

Section 30 of the Regulations allows for an administrative appeal in respect of benefits. In any event however, the right of access to the courts for the purposes of challenging administrative decisions (e.g. by way of appeal, habeas corpus, judicial review) is entrenched per Article 146 of the Constitution. (Please refer to Question 15 regarding implications of appeals procedures).

Q.22.B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

The issue of legal assistance is not covered by the Regulations although the Asylum Unit attached to the Ministry of Interior is in the process of laying down an appropriate infrastructure for dealing with this matter utilising the resources of the European Refugee Fund. This will be done through the NGO KISA which is currently actively in the process of setting up the necessary mechanisms and dealing with procedural issues regarding implementation.

Q.22.C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones[238]?

Not as yet.

Q.22.D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

There would appear to be no mechanisms of complaint as such although asylum seekers can lodge complaints with the Commission of Administration (Ombudsman) which is an entity independent of Government ministries and is not linked in any way to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions.
Asylum seekers usually approach the non-governmental organizations that are active in this field and they conduct the procedure in filling a complaint on behalf of the asylum seekers.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

Whilst "family" is not specifically defined in the regulations, there is a general provision, which stipulates that any issues of interpretation of terms not mentioned therein would be in accordance with the meaning attributed by the national Law.

In this context, this would be the meaning accorded by Article 25(4) of the Refugee Law, 2004 which essentially provides that "family" shall include the applicant's spouse, minor children, his or her dependant parents and the parents of an applicant who is himself a minor.

A very small number of families reside at the Reception Centre, and these families chose to reside at the Reception Centre because they experienced difficulties in self-sustaining by residing in private accommodation due to the high costs, inadequate sources, and in many occasions the discrimination of landlords. However, a big number of families reside in private accommodation and they are supposedly provided with the Welfare Allowance to cover their basic costs and needs.

Q.24.A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

There is no system for the organisation of housing for asylum seekers. There is only one Reception Centre which can accommodate only around 80-100 persons. The Centre accommodates desperate cases of families, women and children, and very exceptional cases of men. The rest of the asylum seekers are distributed in private accommodation which they find and pay themselves. There are many desperate cases of asylum seekers that went voluntarily to police stations and asked to be detained so that they can reside in the detention centres.

Q.24.B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers?[239] Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

There are only 80-100 places in the Reception Centre in Kofinou. An actual number of houses and apartments that asylum seekers reside, is not available.

Q.24.C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?[240]

Having in mind the number of 10,000 asylum seekers in Cyprus and the capacity of the Reception Centre in Kofinou the number of places is permanently insufficient.

Q.24.D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

No.

[239] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[239] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

[240] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question).

Q.25.A. Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

No.

Q.25.B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

Usually the maximum time limit for the Reception Centre is two months, since the Centre is supposedly a temporary solution for asylum seekers until they are able to find private accommodation and employment. However, due to lack of economic sources for asylum seekers, the difficulties they face in accessing the labour market, the exploitation they face in illegal employment, they find it difficult to sustain themselves, even more to find accommodation that they can afford to in order to have a normal residence in Cyprus as long as their application is being processed, which usually takes long time. Therefore those that find residence at the Reception Centre can stay there for long; there are cases that reside there for almost a year.

Q.25.C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

The Asylum Service is responsible for the operation of the Reception Centre and it has delegated the administration of the Centre to the local authority of Kofinou. There is general regulation about the internal functioning of the Centre as it concerns the reception of asylum seekers in the Centre, the rights, obligations and duties of the asylum seekers, as they are foreseen in the Regulations for Reception Conditions in article 20. These regulations do not apply for private accommodation.

Q.25.D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision*?* Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones? [241]

The Regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case they breach the rules. Asylum seekers are responsible for any damage they create at the Centre, and for whose replacement there is a relative cut from the public help they would possibly receive after their departure from the Reception Centre. There is no clear provision as to which is the competent authority to decide upon the damages caused at the Centre. There are not any specified possibilities of appealing. No such administrative decisions are taken so far.

Q.25.E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

No they are not involved in the management of the Centre. Under the Regulations, in article 20 (3), asylum seekers are allowed to participate in the administration of the material means and the daily parameters of life in the Reception Centre through a consultation committee or through a representative consultant body of the residents, which will collaborate with the competent authorities that manage the Centre.

Q.25.F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

There are no specific rules existing on work of asylum seekers inside the Reception Centre, since they are not allowed to work in the Reception Centre or in any other sector except of the agricultural sector.

Q.26.A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

All the information and contact details necessary for asylum seekers to contact with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs are to be given in the brochure that the State is producing. However, the information and contact details are given to asylum seekers by word of mouth either among themselves or from people they come into contact daily. Representatives of UNHCR have full access to the Reception Centre, the Detention Centres so that the asylum seekers can come into contact with them. NGOs have access to the Reception Centre and they are usually informed about asylum seekers that need help by other asylum seekers that know about such cases.

Q.26.B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision).

Legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs have access to the Reception Centre at any time.

Q.26.C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

Access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs cannot be limited for security reasons or any other reason in the Reception Centre.

Q.27.A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision).

The medical screening, including HIV tests, is compulsory by the State and the competent authority is the Ministry of Health. Right after the submission of the application the asylum seekers are sent to a hospital to be subject of medical screening. The medical examination has to take place within three days after the submission of the application and the initial screening might be incomplete. After the conduction of the medical examination the applicant returns to the hospital for the final evaluation of his/her health and the relevant report is prepared from the competent doctor.

Q.27.B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Upon the Regulations asylum seekers and the members of their family have access to free medical and health care, which included at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness, in all the public medical institutions if they do not acquire adequate sources, by showing the confirmation letter. In practice the asylum seekers that reside at the Reception Centre have access to emergency care and essential treatment of illness. However, many asylum seekers that reside in private accommodation face problems in having access in emergency treatment, and even more problems in receiving essential treatment since many times the hospitals ask for a medical card, although the confirmation letter should be enough.

Q.27.C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?[242]

Asylum seekers that reside to the Kofinou Reception Centre have access to medical facility in Larnaca and they are taken there by taxi paid by the Centre. As for the asylum seekers that reside in private accommodation, they receive the so-called "red card» along with the confirmation letter, with which they are entitled to have access to health care. However, they do not have access for emergency treatment and in many cases asylum seekers, even those that obtain the "red card", do not even receive proper health care and treatment at the public hospitals.

Q.28.A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

Under the Regulations the Minister of Interior, after consultation with the Minister of Labour and Social Insurance, has the power to determine the period during which the asylum seekers do not have access to the labour market.

Asylum seekers are not now permitted access to the labour market 6 months from the date of submission of their respective asylum applications, in the light of the following decisions:

(1)Decision taken under section 12(2) of the Regulations whereby the Minister of Labour and Social Insurance (having consulted with the Minister of Interior)permits asylum seekers access to the labour market (in the sectors of agriculture and animal husbandry)after the expiration of 6 months from the date of the asylum application, subject to presenting a contract of employment duty endorsed by the Department of Labour (per Government Gazette, No 4231,of 26/10/2001, ΚΔΠ 418/2007 Para. No 418)

(2) Decision taken under S II (1) of the Regulations whereby the Minister of Interior, (having consulted with the Minister of Labour and Social Insurance) prohibits asylum seekers access to the labour market for a period of six months from the date of submission of their application for asylum (per government Gazette NO 4227 of 12/10/2007, ΚΔΠ 404/2007, Para. No 404.

In case that one year after the application has been submitted there is no initial decision by the Asylum Service, the asylum seeker has the right to access the labour market under the conditions and rules of the Allien and Migration Law. However, in practice asylum seekers find illegal employment in order to be able to sustain themselves.

Q.28.B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

Under the Regulation, article 12 foresees that since access to the labour market in allowed, the special residence issued is also a working permit.

Q.28.C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

The only condition that is not found in the Regulations but it works in practice is that asylum seekers are only allowed to work in the agricultural sector, as the Labour Office of the Ministry of Labour and Social Insurance does not give them access to any other sector or industry.

Q.28.D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

A priority list issued as part of an inter-ministerial decision on labour affords preferential treatment for citizens of the Cyprus Republic, then for EU citizens, legally-resident third-country nationals and then asylum seekers.

Q.28.E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

The state does not yet have the mechanism to provide vocational training to asylum seekers. Only certain private institutions provide this service but on limited capacity and limited time, and they are funded mostly under EU projects, such as EQUAL, ERF etc. Vocational training does not depend on the right of asylum seekers to access the labour market since they do not have such right. The number of asylum seekers that attend vocational training is very small and the reasons they attend is to make their social inclusion easier, as well as to make it easier for themselves to communicate with officials in Greek.

Q.28.F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

It seems that the rules regarding the access to the labour marker adopted to transpose the directive are less generous than the ones applicable previously, since the current rules are very ambiguous and they do not help the situation of asylum seekers in accessing the labour market and finding employment that can help them to sustain themselves and become gradually independent of the public help. The Regulation has many gaps and ambiguities as it concerns the rules on the access in the labour market and this leads the administration to take advantage of these gaps and to create a situation not favourable to asylum seekers.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

Reception conditions are not subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources, however the Services of Social Welfare have the power to reject in whole or partly the application for public help if they document that the asylum seeker is employed and/or acquires adequate sources that provide to him/her and their family the basic and special needs and an appropriate healthy living standard. If the Services of Social Welfare expose that the asylum seeker obtained adequate sources for covering the material reception conditions, while he/she was provided for these conditions, then the Services of Social Welfare can claim back the relative amount from the asylum seeker, as foreseen in the Public Help and Services Law.

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

According to the regulations, the Welfare Office, when making the decision to grand a social allowance to asylum seekers, takes into consideration the special conditions of such categories of people, such as minors, unaccompanied minors, pregnant women, elders, single parent families with minor children and people who have been victims of torture, or rape, or other forms of psychological, or physical, or sexual violence. The authorities examine each such case according to its needs. As it concerns single women and unaccompanied minors they are usually housed in different shelters, mostly at the Reception Centre.

Q.30.B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

There are not so many such cases therefore no mechanism exists to provide them with all the necessities they seek. Currently there is no psychological support provided to asylum seekers that have been victims of any kind of violence. Minors are taken under the protection of the Director of the Welfare Office, trying to find a family for these children. As it concerns pregnant women no special treatment is provided, nor for elders and single parent families. They still have to face the daily difficulties of survival although they have special needs.

Q.30.C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

The special needs of the concerned persons are supposedly to be legally identified when the Welfare Office examines a case of an asylum seeker and records their needs, but also when the medical examination is finalized and the medical report is written.

Q.30.D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

The mechanisms for providing the necessary medical and other assistance to these special groups of persons have not yet been created.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31.A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

Until the age of 18.

Q.31.B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Minors and unaccompanied minors have access to public education and they are subject to the same terms and conditions as nationals. However, many minors do not attend school because they do not know Greek, which is the language used in public schools, and hence they cannot participate but also comprehend the classes. There have been evident cases of racist attitudes and racial discrimination against asylum seeker's children either due to their colour, language, religion, or the fact that they are foreigners. The education offered is at schools and not at the Reception Centre.

Q.31.C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

The three-month period is ensured and it can reach the period of a year when special education is provided.

Q.31.D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

There are very limited vocational trainings for asylum seekers that are mostly provided by non state actors through EU funding or other sources of funding. The state has not yet set up a mechanism for vocational training.

Q.31.E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Yes they are accommodated with their parents or with a person responsible for them assigned by the Welfare Office.

Q.31.F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Supposedly under the regulations they have access.

In terms of appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling, there would appear to be no formal systematic procedure or facilities in place to cater for minors with special needs. In very limited or exceptional circumstances, where it appears that one has been the victim of psychological violence, a medical council will decide on what therapy is to be pursued, although this cannot be regarded as being part of an organised or structured approach where referrals are made to specific mental health care or counselling facilities.

Q.31.G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

The Welfare Office is responsible for the representation of the unaccompanied minors and has the guardianship and the special organization, and is regularly assessed.

The Welfare office is the authority responsible for unaccompanied minors and undertakes the guardianship function in this regard.

Q.31.H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

The unaccompanied minors stay either with their relatives, or in a foster family, or in special Centres only for minors. The Director of the Welfare Office makes sure that brothers and sisters stay together and that only limited and necessary change is made in their housing.

There are a small number of accommodation centres for minors which are managed by the Welfare office. These facilities are not connected with or part of the Reception Centre in Kofinou.

Q.31.I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

The requirement of the Directive regarding the tracing of family members of unaccompanied minors, have been transposed into national law by virtue of clause 28 (3) of the Regulations. In view of the sensitivity and confidentiality aspect of this issue, no precise information is available or can be ascertained as to how the tracing process is organised. The Asylum Service undertakes responsibility for tracing (this could conceivably be on the basis of feedback received from the welfare office) and in the event that parents may be situated in another EU member state, encrypted information would be exchanged, via the confidential on-line 'Dublin' network in an effort to locate, the minor's immediate family members. Other than this there would appear to be no other pre-determined procedures in place and any other steps to be adopted might well be undertaken on a case-by-case basis. There would appear to be a conscious effort to be discreet and to avoid disclosure where this may be prejudicial to the minors' best interests.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32.A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

Q.32.B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

No.

Q.32.C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

No exceptional modalities.

Q.32.D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

No.

Q.32.E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33.A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[243] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

The detention of an asylum seeker, only as such is forbidden. The detention can only be carried out if there is a warrant from the Supreme Court and for the following instances:

1. For identity verification in case the person has no nationality, or in case the person destroyed his/her travel documents, or used false documents to enter the Republic with the purpose to mislead the authorities, they are supposed to be detained only for 5 days,
2. For the examination of new evidence that the asylum seeker claims to have after the rejection of the case in second instance.
3. For driving without a driving licence; after they serve the sentence they are kept in detention until there is a decision on the application and this can take more than one and half year.
4. For working illegally
5. For a traffic accident or any other offence.
6. Arrested for illegal entry and applied for asylum after the arrest; this sentence is as long as 6 and maybe more months.

The detention of a minor is forbidden.

There is no legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in the national law.

The authorities will not hold a person in detention for the sole reason the he/she is an applicant for asylum. In this sense, article 18(1) of the Directive on Asylum procedures of 1/12/2005 would appear to be respected. Asylum seekers will not be detained for illegal entry if it transpires that the purpose of such entry was to apply for asylum. Inevitably however, there may be "grey area" cases whereby a person might apply for asylum after his arrest and that prima facie circumstances indicate that there is an attempt to abuse the asylum system. In such cases, the individual concerned might be considered illegal and detained accordingly following which he would have the right to pursue the constitutional remedies available to him to reverse the detention order.

Q.33.B. Has your Member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Yes, para 3 of Article 7 has been transposed per section 8 of the national Regulations, in the sense that the Minister of Interior may limit freedom of movement in certain areas or decide upon an asylum seekers place of residence having regard to what is in the public interest.

Q.33.C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

No alternatives are available.

Q.33.D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

The Supreme Court is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker if he/she has committed an offence. The Immigration Police and the Population and Migration Archive Department can request for administrative detention of the asylum seeker.

Q.33.E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

They are supposedly detained for only 32 days, but in reality they can be detained until their application has been rejected and a deportation order has been decided.

Q.33.F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

They are detained in the Police Detention Centres, which are located in the Central Prisons in Nicosia in Block 10, and in local Police Detention Centres in every city. They are not closed centres and asylum seekers are detained together with illegal aliens and other criminals. The Police is managing these Centres, not the Asylum Service, and has no connection with the managing of the reception conditions.

Q.33.G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

UNHCR has very good access to the detention places and they do not need to inform of their arrival in advance. However after the recent rebellion of the asylum seekers in the detention centres that occurred as a protest against the inhumane detention conditions, there were cases that the police officers created problems in the access of the UNHCR officers. However, the good communication of the UNHCR with the Chief of the Police allowed the UNHCR officers to have access at any time.

NGO'S are permitted access to detention centres both within the territory and in transit zones. Although certain practical problems have previously been encountered in this regard (eg bureaucratic/ procedural delays by police officers in granting access), matters now appear to have been resolved largely through the good offices and initiative of the UNHCR which has seen the implementation of a documentary system whereby a particular person's/lawyer's status as a specialist in the asylum field is verified accordingly.

Q.33.H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

Upon being detained, an asylum seeker has the right to challenge his confinement by virtue of the right of judicial review and habeus corpus which are available remedies enshrined in the Constitution of the Republic of Cyprus. The right to pursue these remedies is respected by the State in compliance with article 18 of the Directive on Asylum procedures.

Q.33.I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

No. They have restricted information about their rights and they do not have access to free legal advice; they have to call for a private lawyer. In addition in many occasions asylum seekers in detention are not allowed to have access to health care intentionally.

Q.33.J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

They are detained as prisoners and they do not have rights foreseen in the reception conditions. They do not even have access to daylight in the Detention Centres.

Q.33.K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

There are no such cases.

Q.33.L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Minor asylum seekers cannot be detained. The Director of the Welfare Office takes special measures for the protection of minors.

Q.33.M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?
This is not applicable as minors cannot is any event be detained.

No.

Q.33.N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

The number given is a rough estimate, but also includes rejected cases and many cases of Iranians that cannot be deported and are detained. There are around 110 detainees out of 10,000 applicants for asylum.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

The system of providing reception conditions is centralized to the Asylum Service of the Ministry of Interior. However, many other Services, Departments of Ministries are involved in the reception conditions.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)[244]

No.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?[245]

One, which is public.

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

No.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?[246]

No central body representing all the actors involved in the reception conditions.

Q.39.A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

[244] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[245] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[246] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

There is no body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions, except of the Head of the Asylum Service that is the responsible authority for asylum seekers. The Ministry of Interior is the competent ministry for reception conditions.

The orientation guidance and control given by the ministry of Interior cannot reasonably be considered as sufficient to satisfy the requirements of Article 23 of the Directive. (Currently NGO's are providing this support on an ad hoc basis and as when circumstances permit). In fact, there is no system of this nature currently in place, and this is acknowledged by the Asylum Service itself through its "short and sharp" response to Q19B of the Practical Questionnaire.

However, notwithstanding the above state of affairs, indications are that steps are being taken to implement an effective system and that a process has begun whereby crucial services pivotal to the efficacy and operational efficiency thereof might be "outsourced" to private entities which might be financed both by the state and other sources (e.g. The European Refugee Fund)

Although, as is evident from the above, no system is currently in place, there would appear to be a clear realisation that the provisions of Article 23 of the Directive must be respected and to this end, the transposition of these requirements have been effected by clause 31 of the national Regulations and, as indicated above, matters have been set in motion (albeit not as quickly as circumstances necessitate) to achieve implementation in compliance therewith.

Q.39.B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?[247]

No

Q.39.C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?[248]

[247] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[248] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Much would appear to be done on an ad hoc basis and there would appear to be room for improvement in the organisational structures of controlling and monitoring reception conditions.

Q.39.D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?[249]

No.

Q.40.A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

10,000 asylum seekers.

The above figure represents the overall total number of asylum applicants in Cyprus and an analytical breakdown (as given by the Asylum Service of the Ministry of Interior) of the number of Asylum applicants, per country of origin, up to end May 2006, is attached hereto as an APPENDIX.

Q.40.B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?[250]

The total budget for reception conditions is 420,000 Cyprus pounds. (Approximately 700000 Euros)

Q.40.C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?[251]

511 Euro per person per month

Q.40.D. Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

Only supported by the central government.

[249] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[250] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[251] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.40.E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?[252]

As matters stand, it would appear that insufficient resources are currently available (e.g. inadequacy of reception centre, lack of trained staff) for the effective implementation of national provisions, which have been enacted to comply with the Directive. However, there are indications that whilst the wheels of progress are somewhat slow, there is nevertheless a "thought process" in motion to alleviate existing problems through the "outsourcing" of services to private entities and securing external funding to compliment any financial contribution emanating from any governmental budget allocation.
In order to improve the lot of asylum seekers, the Asylum Service in tandem with the European Refugee Fund has launched an awareness campaign entitled "Together in Cyprus" which is geared to improving public attitudes integrating refugees into Cypriot society and improving their general wellbeing. The programme aims to improve reception services and enhancing social integration. Measures adopted include social and psychological support, provision of free legal advice, upgrading living conditions at the Kofinou Reception Centre, establishing a support and rehabilitation unit for torture victims, Greek language teaching courses, research into the areas of bottlenecks, delays and inefficiency of the asylum system in Cyprus, and creation of a unit within the asylum service examining conditions prevalent in applicants' home countries.

Q.41.A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions? [253]

Unable to find out or determine the total number of persons working for reception conditions, as this was not specified in response to enquiry.

[252] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.41.B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?[254]

As regards training of persons in the reception center, no specific training is provided.

However there is a process whereby efforts are in motion to outsource training and other Services to private sector entities with funding assistance from the European Refugee Fund etc.

The UNHCR has been periodically engaged in an ongoing training exercise with officers of the Asylum Service who very recently have also attended seminars held by an NGO from Greece on the subject of "Victims of Torture".

Additionally, and following a tender process, a consultant has very recently been engaged to advise officers of the Asylum Service, with funding being made available through the transition facility of the European Commission.

As an illustration of practical remedial steps that are being undertaken it was recently announced that a Unit for the Rehabilitation and Care of Victims of Torture has been established with funding provided by the European Refugee Fund and Asylum Services of the Ministry of Interior.

Q.41.C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?[255]

Not specified.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

There would appear to be no major problems with the translation of the Directive in the official (Greek) language. In this respect, it would perhaps be prudent to point out that in order to deal with any possible ambiguities and as an avoidance of doubt measure in the interpretation process, the transposition itself was duty effected with reference to the English, French & Greek texts of the Directive.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

Yes, the Refugee Law 2000 as amended which is of a "legislative " nature.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

With the adoption of the transposition norm, there is on the whole greater clarity, informative detail and more precise provisions, which allow for a more systematic approach in implementation. Importantly, there is now one concise document which incorporates regulations on reception conditions and which can only facilitate more effective implementation.

However, whilst reception conditions are primarily dealt with by on specific text in the form of the Asylum Regulations, this is still to be read in conjunction with the Refugee Law for definitional and contextual purposes.

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

Whilst the existing Refugee Law went some way towards catering for asylum seekers (e.g. right to apply for work permit, right to welfare benefits, right to free medical care and access to education for minors), the prevailing state of affairs, effectively, allowed only for a theoretical perspective of benefits/ entitlements and posed difficulties with regard to actual implementation as these were of somewhat general nature and allowed for a dilution of their impact (because of technicalities, procedures & conditions which impeded their applicability). This has largely been overcome by the fact that asylum seekers' applications would, (in most cases), activate immediate entitlement to the reception conditions envisaged by the Directive.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

The consultation process regarding transposition began in September.

There were consultation procedures both at Ministerial level (culminating) in the formulation of the Regulations by the council of Ministers and at Parliamentary level as part of the endorsement approval of the Regulations by the House of Representatives. During the course of the above process, the UNHCR as well as NGO'S were afforded the opportunity to express their opinions with regard to the content, applicability impact and implications of the proposed Regulations. Media coverage did, to some extent, provoke public debate with regard to asylum seekers' access to the labour market, an issue which appears to have generated protracted discussions as between the Ministry of Interior and Ministry of Labour for the purpose of determining the nature of the regulation which would ultimately be incorporated into national law within the parameters of the Directive.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

In one sense, the transposition of the directive has made internal rules more generous, by virtue of allowing for more effecting implementation through specific mandatory provisions which to some extent, do not offer procedural or technical mechanisms which would otherwise facilitate deviations or departure therefrom.

However, in another sense, the internal rules can be said to have been made stricter, particularly in the light of S25 of the Regulations which, in conformity with the non-obligatory Article 16 of the Directive, now allows for the reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions under specified circumstances.

Moreover, under the pre-existing REFUGEE LAW, asylum seekers' were afforded the right to apply for a work permit upon receipt of a letter confirming their status as asylum applicants. This might be viewed as being a more favourable state of affairs than that envisaged by the Directive and adopted by the Regulations at national level. (Whereby member states are at liberty to restrict access to the labour market for up to one year from the relevant application date).

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?[256]

Whilst there is a much- improved theoretical legal framework for implementing a systematic regime as regards reception conditions, there would appear to be much room for improvement in the effective implementation of procedural and practical streamlining lining measures to cater the needs of miners, social conditions in general, access to the labour market, accommodation and the overall welfare of applicants. Stronger governmental support for NGO's would contribute positively and significantly in this regard.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States[257]

Not available.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answers.

QUESTIONNAIRE FOR THE NATIONAL REPORT ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DIRECTIVE : RECEPTION CONDITIONS OF 27 JANUARY 2003

IN: THE CZECH REPUBLIC

by Kosař David
JUDr.
Supreme Administrative Court, Brno, Czech Republic
david.kosar@nssoud.cz

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

Directive 2003/9/EC laying down minimum standards for the reception of asylum seekers was transposed by Act No. 57/2005 Coll.[258] that amended Act No. 325/1999 Coll. on Asylum[259] (hereinafter the "Asylum Act"). Act No. 57/2005 Coll. was published in Issue No. 15/2005 of the Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic (pp. 354-357) on February 4, 2005 and entered into force on the date of its promulgation.[260] This mode of transposition was chosen because reception conditions need to have a formal statutory basis, and the Asylum Act already contains provisions stipulating the receptions conditions for asylum seekers and management of the reception facilities.

Act No. 57/2005 Coll. was not devoted solely to Directive 2003/9/EC but also to the transposition of Directive 2003/86/EC on the right to family reunification and EC Regulation No. 343/2003, usually referred to as the Dublin II Regulation, and to implementation of the Protocol on asylum for nationals of Member States of the European Union. Since the reception conditions were mostly sufficient even prior to the adoption of Directive 2003/9/EC, the directive was transposed by the insertion of several provisions and by refining existing definitions. Although it is to some extent difficult to distil precisely the provisions adopted to transpose solely Directive 2003/9/EC, these include the following articles and paragraphs of Act No. 57/2005 Coll.: Part 1, Art. I, subsections 2, 5, 7, 9, 10, 15, 17-22, 26-29, 31-33, and Part 2, Art. II.

[259] The full title of the Asylum Act reads as follows: Act No. 325/1999 Coll. on Asylum and Amendment to Act No. 283/1991 Coll., on the Police of the Czech Republic, as amended (the Asylum Act).

[260] Art. III of Act No. 57/2005 Coll. Interestingly enough, although Art. III of Act No. 57/2005 Coll. stipulates its entry into force on February 1, 2005, the Act itself was published in the Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic only on February 4, 2005. This "anomaly" (i.e. "pre-entry" into force) occurred probably due to the final rush to meet the transposition deadline.

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

As mentioned above, there has been only one transposition norm. Therefore, I did not set up any order of importance. However, since the entry into force of Act No. 57/2005 Coll., the Asylum Act has been subject to five subsequent amendments, several of which dealt also with reception conditions. Indeed, Act No. 57/2005 Coll. was initially envisaged not only to transpose obligations stemming from EC legislature but also to address specific problems of the Czech asylum procedure, including reception conditions. However, after significant delays in the preparation of the draft bill and in order to meet the transposition deadline, the Asylum Act was subsequently amended in two separate statutes – the above-mentioned Act No. 57/2005 Coll. and Act. No. 350/2005 Coll.[261]

While Act No. 57/2005 Coll. was intended to transpose mandatory provisions of inter alia Directive 2003/9/EC and bring the Asylum Act in line with the European asylum acquis, Act. No. 350/2005 Coll. dealt in detail inter alia with material reception conditions, pocket money and contribution to the costs of reception facilities, medical screening, the rights and duties of asylum seekers, sanctions against asylum seekers, the duration of visas for asylum seekers, and in particular restrictions on access of asylum seekers to the Supreme Administrative Court.[262]

Due to a major revision of the system of the State social support benefits (linked to the subsistence minimum) and State social assistance benefits (linked to the existence minimum), the Amendment to Asylum Act, Act. No. 112/2006 Coll.[263] introduced a new system for the calculation of several financial allowances for applicants for international protection. Not surprisingly, it is impossible to describe this reform in detail within the confines of a brief report and therefore only significant issues will be dealt with in the responses to the questions below.

[261] The full title of this norm reads as follows: Act No. 350/2005 Coll. amending Act No. 325/1999 Coll. on Asylum and Amendment to Act No. 283/1991 Coll., on the Police of the Czech Republic, as amended (the Asylum Act), and Amendment to several other Acts. It was published in issue No. 122/2005 the Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic (pp. 6049-6057) on September 13, 2005 and entered into force on October 13, 2005.

[262] It introduced a new admissibility criterion which is very close to the institutions of "leave to appeal" or "writ a certiorari". Pursuant to Art. 104a of Act. No. 150/2002 Coll., the Code of Administrative Justice, as amended, "the Supreme Administrative Court shall dismiss a cassational complaint in cases of international protection unless the significance of the complaint extends substantially beyond the personal interests of the complainant". For the interpretation of this provision see Decision of the Supreme Administrative Court, No 1 Azs 13-2006-39, April 26, 2006, available at www.nssoud.cz.

The latest significant amendment to the Asylum Act, Act No. 165/2006 Coll.,[264] was adopted in order to transpose Directive 2004/83/EC, the "Qualification Directive". Act No. 165/2006 Coll. was published in issue 56/2006 of the Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic (pp. 1994-2009) on April 28, 2006 and entered into force on September 1, 2006. In particular, Act No. 165/2006 Coll. introduced, in the Czech Republic, the subsidiary protection status (see also footnote no. 26), opted for a single procedure for requests for international protection (see below), and stipulated the rights and duties of beneficiaries of the subsidiary protection.

The new amendment to the Asylum Act (Act. No. 343/2007 Coll.) was signed by the President of the Czech Republic on December 21, 2007 (hereinafter only the "2007 Amendment"), and entered into force on the very same day. This amendment was supposed to transpose mainly the so-called Procedures Directive but due to the interconnection of the several provisions of the Procedures Directive and the Reception Conditions Directive, it also affected the issues covered by this report. However, due to the late approval of this Bill, only the most important changes will be mentioned in this report.

Unless explicitly specified otherwise, in the text below reference will be made to the wording of the "Asylum Act" as of March 1, 2007. Similarly, unless explicitly specified otherwise, the term "international protection" includes both applications for asylum as well as for subsidiary protection and the abbreviation "Art." without further specification refers to the Asylum Act.

As to norms of lower legal force, the amount of pocket money, the date it is to be paid out, and amount of the contribution to the expense of reception conditions when the asylum seekers have personal resources are specified in Decree No. 376/2005 Coll.[265] This procedure is envisaged in Art. 42 § 7 of the Asylum Act. Furthermore, the amount of the contribution to municipalities to cover their expenses associated with the existence of the asylum facility in its territory is specified in the Government decision upon the amount of the contribution to be paid to municipalities in a calendar year (Art. 84 of the Asylum Act).[266] The amount of pocket money has not been changed since Decree No. 376/2005 Coll.[267]

[263] The full title of this norm reads as follows: Act No. 112/2006 Coll. amending several other Acts in connection with the adoption of the Act on Subsistence and Existential Minimum and of the Act on Assistance in Situations of Material Hardship. It was published in issue No. 37/2006 of the Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic (pp. 1329-1343) on March 31, 2006 and entered into force on January 1, 2007.
[264] The full title of this norm reads as follows: Act No. 165/2006 Coll., amending Act No. 325/1999 Coll. on Asylum and Amendment to Act No. 283/1991 Coll., on the Police of the Czech Republic, as amended (the Asylum Act), and Amendment to several other Acts.
[265] The full title of this norm reads as follows: Decree No. 376/2005 Coll., stipulating the amount of compensation for catering and accommodation services provided in asylum centres, the amount of allowances and the dates of their payment; it was promulgated on September 12, 2005 and entered into force on September 27, 2005.

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

Since the Czech Republic is not a federal state this question is irrelevant. The only body competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers is a Parliament (on few exceptions see Q.4).

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

Since the reception conditions were already quite demanding even prior to the adoption of Directive 2003/9/EC, substantial modifications of the Asylum Act were not required. Directive 2003/9/EC was transposed (1) by the insertion of several new provisions into the Asylum Act, such as the definition of "unaccompanied minors", the obligation to endeavour to trace the members of the minor's family or the provision stating that the individual needs of asylum seekers must be taken into account, (2) by refining existing provisions such as the duty to provide information to asylum seekers in writing and in a language she may reasonably be supposed to understand, and (3) by introducing new mandatory deadlines, such as a 15 day deadline for providing information to the asylum seeker. While many of the new provisions, such as the right of an asylum seeker and his family to be accommodated or the right to contact legal advisors were already observed in practice, their explicit inclusion into the Asylum Act no doubt strengthened the position of asylum seekers.

This mode of transposition was chosen because administrative decisions on reception conditions are required to have a formal statutory basis, and most provisions stipulating the receptions conditions for asylum seekers and the management of the reception facilities were already laid down in the Asylum Act. Only specific issues such as the amount of pocket money are prescribed by norms of a lower legal force. Therefore, the transposition of Directive 2003/9/EC was first carried out by statute and only thereafter were new administration instructions and guidelines adopted.

[266] To date (for calendar year 2007), the Decision of the Government No. 63 from January 24, 2007 on Principles for providing contribution to the municipalities to cover the costs expended by the municipality in association with existence of the asylum facility in its territory, is applicable.
[267] Decree No. 174/2006 Coll. solely replaced the word "asylum" with the term "international protection" (as a consequence of Act No. 165/2006 Coll. that amended the Asylum Act in April 2006).

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

As mentioned above, the Asylum Act underwent a proper screening process aimed at adapting of the provisions of Directive 2003/9/EC to national circumstances. There was no pattern of mere copying the provisions of the directive into national legislation without appropriate redrafting or adaptation in this case.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

All texts that were necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the Directive 2003/9/EC were adopted by the transposition deadline. Since the reception conditions are regulated almost exclusively by the Asylum Act (i.e. by statute), there has not been any need of adopting other norms of lower force.

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

In general, the Asylum Act underwent a proper screening process, and there were thorough negotiations with the UNHCR and NGOs before the transposition of Directive 2003/9/EC. The draft bill was accessible to the public and subject to intensive debate. Indeed, when the Ministry of the Interior had completed the draft bill and distributed it to the other ministries and state agencies, it was also sent to the UNHCR and NGOs for comments. Both the draft bill including explanatory memorandum and table of compatibility with EC law and the comments of UNHCR and NGOs are attached to this report.

The compatibility with EC law is ensured on several levels: (1) in the first stage of the drafting process, there are special units within the Ministry of the Interior responsible for transposition of EC Law, both at the level of the Department of Asylum and Migration

Policy of the Ministry of Interior (Section for EU and International Law) and at the level of the Ministry of Interior itself (Department of EC law); (2) in the second stage, within the Government, a draft bill is reviewed by the Department of Compatibility of the Office of the Government of the Czech Republic and by the Parliamentary Institute.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

There has not been any scholarly book published about Directive 2003/9/EC and there has been only one article which was devoted solely to Act No. 57/2005 Coll.:

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

There has not been any legal challenge made before Czech courts of the reception conditions for asylum seekers. The only decision that explicitly mentions Directive 2003/9/EC was the judgment of the Supreme Administrative Court, No. 5 Azs 56/2004-56 of 19 May 2004.[268] However, in this case the applicant misinterpreted Art. 8 of Directive 2003/9/EC and submitted that he was entitled to asylum for the purpose of family reunification (Art. 13 of the Asylum Act). Furthermore, the applicant relied on the above-mentioned Art. 8 of Directive 2003/9/EC before the transposition deadline expired.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

The Ministry of the Interior has been responsible for refugee issues since 1990.[269] Správa Uprchlických Zařízení (Refugee Facilities Administration, hereinafter the "RFA") was established on 1 January 1996 as a budgetary organisation of the Ministry of the Interior of the Czech Republic. It came into being as a result of the division of the Refugee Department, which was effected in order to separate the part of the state administration conducting asylum proceedings (Department for Asylum and Migration Policies, hereinafter the "DAMP") from that providing services to asylum applicants (RFA). The RFA operates the reception and accommodation centres for asylum seekers, integration centres for recognised refugees and facilities for administrative detention of foreign national and provides inter alia accommodation, catering, social, health and other services for asylum seekers and persons who are under the temporary protection of the Czech Republic's government.

The reception conditions for asylum seekers in the Czech Republic are almost exclusively laid down in the Asylum Act. Only certain issues, such as the amount of pocket money are prescribed by norms of a lower legal force. The Czech reception system is considered to be a centralised one. The RFA, which is a specialized agency of the Ministry of the Interior, so far remains responsible for management of all asylum facilities in the country.

[269] See Act No. 498/1990 Coll. on Refugees.

Although a debate has already begun on the possible involvement of NGOs in the management of certain asylum facilities, no proposal has been submitted so far.

However, there are also several other actors. The most important actor except for the RFA and DAMP is the Aliens' and Border Police. With regards of other important actors, on involvement of Ombudsman see Q.39, on the so-called OSPODs see Q.31 G, and on involvement of the Office for International Legal Protection of Children see Q.31 I.

Q.11. Q11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

Asylum issues in the Czech Republic are regulated by the Asylum Act. Proceedings for the grant and withdrawal of asylum are within the competence of the Ministry of the Interior. After the Ministry of the Interior renders the first instance decision on an asylum application, the asylum seeker may file with the competent regional court an action against the decision of the Ministry. Unless the Asylum Act stipulates otherwise, this action has a suspensive effect. There exists an extraordinary remedy against decisions of the regional court on asylum matters, which is a cassational complaint over which the Supreme Administrative Court has jurisdiction. Both judicial instances review decisions of the Ministry of the Interior both as to points of law and fact (albeit the Supreme Administrative Court only under specific circumstances), but they are not entitled to grant asylum or subsidiary protection. Hence, the courts can either confirm the decision of the administrative body or quash the decision and remand the case for reconsideration by the Ministry of Interior (or by the Regional Court). As mentioned above (see Q.2), Act. No. 350/2005 Coll. introduced a new admissibility criterion for a cassational complaint and thus restricted the access of asylum seekers to the Supreme Administrative Court.

A procedure on international protection is conditional upon the alien making a declaration within the territory of the Czech Republic apparently manifesting her intention to seek protection (hereinafter the "Declaration") in the Czech Republic from persecution or serious harm (Art. 3 § 1 of the Asylum Act). The alien is then issued an entry visa which entitles her to remain in the territory for the period of time required to appear at the designated reception centre (Art. 3e). The alien who made the Declaration in hospital, custody or prison is obliged to arrive at a reception centre within 24 hours from the moment of her release (Art. 4a § 1).

There are two phases of reception of asylum seekers. The first phase is carried out in one of the reception centres, i.e. either at Vyšní Lhoty or at the Prague airport (see below). These facilities are closed reception centres. In Vyšní Lhoty, the applicants are not allowed to leave the centre until primary admission procedure is completed, which takes approximately three weeks. However, in the reception centre in the transit zone of the Prague airport the asylum seekers might be required to stay beyond the completion of the admission procedure for the whole duration of the airport proceeding as stipulated by the Asylum Act (see Q.20 A). The admission procedures[270] include identification by the Aliens' and Border Police (taking photographs and fingerprints), initiation of the procedure for international protection by an administrative body (the DAMP), the issuance of a visa by the Police and a Certificate of an Applicant for International Protection by the DAMP, comprehensive medical examinations, and quarantine or other measures related to the protection of public health (Art. 46 § 1). In the reception centre in the transit zone of the airport, the applicants are not allowed to leave the centre even after the admission procedure is concluded (Art. 46 § 2). The 2007 Amendment contains inter alia (in general, it introduces the brand new airport procedure) highly controversial provision (Art. 46a) that under certain circumstances allows the Ministry of the Interior to confine the applicant for international protection in the reception centre until her deportation (see Q.20.A).

In the second phase, after the conclusion of the admission procedures, an asylum applicant is moved to one of the accommodation centres (sometimes also referred to as "residential centres") or can exercise her right to stay in private housing. In contrast to reception centres, asylum applicants staying at accommodation centres may come and go as they please.[271] The asylum seeker is entitled to housing in the accommodation centre throughout the whole procedure, more precisely during the first instance procedure before the DAMP and proceedings before the regional court. If the asylum seeker submits a cassational complaint to the Supreme Administrative Court against the decision of the regional court, she is issued a toleration visa and her status is governed by the Aliens Act[272] (Art. 78b § 7 of the Asylum Act). Therefore, she is not entitled to housing in the accommodation centres and is obliged to find private accommodation by herself. However, if she proves that her financial situation does not allow her to cover the expenses and that she is not able to secure accommodation, housing for her will be provided by the Ministry of the Interior (Art. 78c). In practice, the applicant is usually provided with cheap accommodation in a hostel designed for that purpose. Those hostels are run by NGOs or private owners (in Litoměřice and in Brno). The asylum seeker can be also granted financial support that is equal to the subsistence minimum (see below).

[270] It should not be confused with "admissibility procedures". On one hand, it is true that decision on admissibility (i.e. procedural decision) is usually taken during the stay in the reception centres, it is not necessarily so. In other words, whereas admission procedures always take place in the reception centre, a decision on admissibility may be rendered also after the transfer of the asylum seeker to the accommodation centre.

[271] Although several restrictions apply; e.g. asylum seekers registered at accommodation centres are allowed to leave the centres for a maximum period of 10 days per calendar month, unless explicitly permitted to prolong this period.

[272] Act No. 326/1999 Coll. on Residence of Aliens on the Territory of the Czech Republic and Amendment to Some Acts (hereinafter the "Aliens Act").

Generally, both filing the action at the regional court and at the Supreme Administrative Court has a suspensive effect, including most "manifestly unfounded" cases (see below), "airport" cases and "detention" cases.[273] As for the exceptions to this rule, the filing of an action at the regional court does not have suspensive effect in the following cases: (1) an action against the decision on discontinuance of the asylum proceedings; (2) an action against the rejection of asylum application (as "manifestly unfounded") on the ground that the applicant arrives from a safe third country or a safe country of origin; (3) an action against the rejection of asylum application (as "manifestly unfounded") on the ground that the applicant holds more than one citizenship and failed to avail herself of the protection of any of the countries of which she is a citizen. However, an asylum case involving an unaccompanied minor cannot be determined to be "manifestly unfounded", and thus the accelerated procedure cannot be used (Art. 16 § 4).

The "manifestly unfounded" cases, "airport" cases and "detention" cases are generally dealt with in a specific (often accelerated) procedure; thus different conditions and time limits generally apply. The specific features and dissimilarities of these procedures will be addressed separately in response to the relevant questions. These include e.g. restriction on the freedom of movement in the airport reception centre, in Dublin cases and in the detention facilities, shorter time limits for filing actions against the first instance decisions, the fact that the "Certificate of an Applicant for International Protection" is not issued to the applicants in detention before their transfer to the accommodation centre etc.

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

The answers on reception conditions given below are valid for the first and second stage of the asylum procedure (i.e. during the first instance procedure before the DAMP and proceedings before the regional court), unless explicitly specified otherwise. The modalities of reception conditions of the asylum seekers who lodged a cassational complaint are mentioned separately. Special procedures such as detention and airport procedures and Dublin cases will be dealt with separately where appropriate.

[273] However, there is a shorter time limit for filing the action at the regional court for the above-mentioned special procedures. The action must be filed within 7 days, in contrast to 15 days in "regular" cases (Art. 32 § 2).

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

Material reception conditions (housing, food, clothes, hygienic items and health service) are primarily provided in kind, but depending on the circumstances there are also several benefits provided in cash. Asylum applicants have the following rights in the asylum facility in which they have their registered address: to be provided with accommodation, food and other services (hygienic items such as toothbrush, toothpaste, toilet paper, soap etc.) at no charge, and to receive pocket money (Art. 42). In general, except for restriction of freedom of movement, material reception conditions (housing, food, hygiene, social and psychological assistance, leisure time activities and pocket money) are delivered under the same conditions both in the "accommodation centres" and "reception centres". Since January 2004, asylum seekers no longer receive financial support in the form of monetary benefits (see below).

Asylum seekers accommodated both in the reception and accommodation centres are entitled to pocket money (sometimes referred to as "spending money") which amounts to 16 CZK per day and thus approximately to 480 CZK (€17) per month. An asylum seeker accommodated in these centres can perform work in the centre (e.g. cleaning, help in the kitchen, etc.), on a voluntary basis, up to 12 hours per month, in which case her pocket money will be increased up to double the regular amount. Furthermore, in the accommodation centres where no meals are provided, asylum seekers receive financial contribution to the catering which amounts to approximately 2400 CZK per month (this sum is linked to the subsistence minimum and varies slightly according to the age of the applicant and number of family members).[274] However, an applicant who receives contribution to the catering is not entitled to pocket money (and thus also not to the doubled pocket money for extra work in the asylum centre). Self-catering facilities are always provided in the centre. If the asylum seeker is only registered in the centre, which means that she lives in private accommodation and has only the obligation to report regularly to the DAMP in the centre, she is not entitled to any material or financial support, apart from medical service (see below).

[274] To date (31 May, 2006) adults receive 79 CZK per day, children under 6 years old, 57.50 CZK, children 6-10 years old, 64 CZK, children 10-15 years old, 76 CZK, children over 15 years old, 83 CZK. There are also extra benefits available, e.g. 26 CZK per day for diabetics.

Asylum seekers, who chose to stay outside the accommodation centre, must find private housing by themselves and report for registration at the Aliens' and Border Police. With the exception of medical care, those applicants must cover their living expenses themselves. Furthermore, they can apply for financial contribution up to the subsistence minimum mentioned above if they prove that their financial situation does not allow them to cover their housing expenses (Art. 43 § 2). Nevertheless, such financial support may be provided only for a period of 3 months (Art. 43 § 2).

Aliens holding a toleration visa, i.e. those who submitted a cassational complaint to the Supreme Administrative Court, are obliged to find their own accommodation and cover their own expenses. If they prove their financial situation does not allow them to cover the expenses and they are not able to secure their accommodation, they can be provided with a cheap accommodation and be granted financial support equal to the subsistence minimum (see also Q.11).

There is no system of vouchers, and no specific contribution to transportation (except in emergencies) or clothing expenses is provided to asylum applicants in the Czech Republic. Furthermore, after January 2004, as a result of changes to the Act on State Social Support,[275] such applicants were excluded from the group of persons entitled to state social support benefits and therefore asylum seekers had no access to the general system of social aid at any stage of the procedure. Since March 2005, the amendment to the Act on State Social Support stipulates that, of the 365 days needed to fulfil an alien's condition of stay in order to be entitled to state social support benefits, only that period will be excluded when the asylum seeker is housed in the accommodation centre. Therefore, if the alien (i.e. asylum seeker) is housed outside such a centre, she is entitled to state social support benefits after the period of 365 days expires.

As to the clothing, it is usually provided by Caritas (NGO) that maintains storerooms of old clothes in most asylum facilities and also provides clothing to the RFA on the individual request basis. In case of deficiency of certain type of clothes (e.g. baby outfit) or of a particular size of shoes (i.e. they are not available at Caritas), these are provided directly by the RFA (on the basis of Art. 42 § 2). This system of 'residuary intervention' of the RFA has been working efficiently in practice, but strictly legally speaking, it is problematic because of the lack of certainty regarding the implementation of the Directive. (See also similar problem with 'residuary intervention' in the health care provision in Q.27.C.)

Furthermore, Caritas also maintains so-called "mini-humanitarian depots" at the borders with Austria, Germany, Poland and Slovakia. These mini-depots provide basic material conditions for those, who are intercepted by the Police during their attempt to cross the borders or to asylum seekers returned back on the basis of readmission agreements. This system seems to be working well.

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

Reception conditions can be generally considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as required by Art. 13 (2) of the Directive.

All asylum applicants staying in the reception and accommodation centres are entitled to free board, housing and pocket money (Art. 42 § 1). Asylum facilities provide also other services such as social and psychological services, library privileges, leisure time activities (sports, art workrooms, etc.),[276] which was perceived as a positive example in the Report of Information and Cooperation Forum (see Q.8). Leisure time activities are provided both by the RFA and by NGOs (but usually in cooperation of both subjects) and include sport events, art workshops, libraries, IT and language classes, discotheques, visits to cinemas etc. Furthermore, these activities are not restricted only to the accommodation centres but take place also in the reception centres – i.e. in transit zone at the Prague International Airport and in Vyšní Lhoty. The services provided by the RFA in the reception and accommodation centres are further specified in Art. 81 § 1 and include basic sanitary material, food three times a day for adults and five times a day for children under 18, and provision of a bed and night table for personal belongings (all free of charge). Art. 81 § 1 further stipulates other privileges of applicants for international protection such as the right to receive parcels and money, right to receive visits, right to receive and send letters, right to uninterrupted sleep for 8 hours and right to leave the asylum facility pursuant to Art. 82.

It is up to each asylum seeker to decide individually whether she opts for being housed in the accommodation centre or privately. The number of places available in the centres is sufficient and can be increased in case of emergency (see below Q.20 D and 24 D); there seems to be no problem with availability of housing premises in the centres. Nevertheless, a reception system that encourages living in large accommodation centres also has its drawbacks. The financial support made available to those living in private accommodation is sufficient for very economical and simple living but is available only for 3 months (see subquestion A). Furthermore, not all asylum seekers are able by themselves to find private accommodation legally so as to entitle them to apply for financial support. It is notable that asylum seekers living outside asylum facilities face two constraints during the first year of the asylum proceedings: (1) they do not have access to the labour market,[277] and (2) they are not entitled to the state social support benefits,[278] and therefore they have to rely on their own financial resources. Due to the restricted access to the labour market, their earning possibilities are limited, forcing them either to find unlawful employment or to return to the accommodation centre (where they become completely dependent upon the State).[279] What is more, housing an asylum seeker in an accommodation centre is more costly (see Q.40 C) for the State than if she lived outside the centres (in private), even when the State provides financial support therefor.

There are numerous kinds of social benefits for Czech citizens (such as unemployment and housing benefits, child allowances etc.). As of July 1, 2006 the minimum wage was 7.955 CZK (€282). Since January 1, 2006 the minimum social support benefit for citizens in need (subsistence minimum) has been 4,420 CZK (€157) per month. However, a new law was adopted in March 2006 which entered into force on January 1, 2007. This law introduces two benefits – the "subsistence minimum" which amounts to 3,126 CZK (€111) and the "existential minimum" which amounts to 2,020 CZK (€72) per month.[280] Therefore, in comparison with the main social benefits, the amount of pocket money (€17 per month) is more or less symbolic and limits the asylum seekers in their mobility, which is exacerbated by the fact that accommodation centres are often situated in remote areas (this problem has been mitigated by the fact that several remote centres have been closed since 2006). Furthermore, low pocket money is sometimes problematic[281] for asylum seekers with special dietary requirements (Muslims, small children, pregnant women, etc.). While it is true that they can ask for special meals and are subsequently provided with a special diet, it might be difficult to fulfil all the individual preferences[282] and due to low pocket money they cannot purchase their own food. Since the financial contribution to catering, provided in some accommodation centres instead of food, is deemed to be sufficient to purchase quality food (see above), it would be preferable to allow applicants with special dietary demands to opt for this contribution and choose their own food. This fact has been already acknowledged by the RFA and the system of self-catering will be implemented in other asylum facilities. System of self-catering has been already implemented in the following asylum facilities: Zbýšov u Brna, Havířov, Kostelec nad Orlicí and Stráž pod Ralskem.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

[277] Art. 99 letter (a) of Act No. 435/2004 Coll., on Employment; see Q.28
[278] Art. 3 § 1 of Act No. 117/1995 Coll., on State Social Support.
[279] See the Report on the State of Human Rights in the Czech Republic in 2004, § 9.6.5, pp. 67-68; and the 2003 Report, § 10.2.4, pp. 100-101.
[280] However, the new social benefits are not comparable to the former "subsistence minimum", since they do not cover the housing expenses, which will be covered separately.
[281] But reception conditions are still "sufficient" in the terms of Art. 13 (2) of the Directive.
[282] For example, during Ramadan Muslims may eat only in the evening which does not fit to the hours when catering is provided in the centres and although the RFA provides them with special "take-away food", it would be preferable, if they are allowed to buy their own food. Similarly, pregnant women would prefer to buy their own food including vitamins etc.

Q.13. Q 13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

Art. 2 § 3 of the Asylum Act stipulates that "an 'application for international protection' means the application of an alien who can be presumed to be seeking asylum or subsidiary protection in the Czech Republic". The primacy of the Geneva Convention is clearly stipulated in Art. 14a § 1 which provides that the "subsidiary protection shall be granted to the alien who does not satisfy criteria for granting asylum" but "in respect of whom substantial grounds have been shown for believing that the person concerned, if returned to his or her country of origin, or in the case of a stateless person, to his or her country of former habitual residence, would face a real risk of suffering serious harm … and is unable, or, owing to such risk, unwilling to avail himself or herself of the protection of that country". Art. 2 (b) of the Directive was therefore correctly transposed.

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

Since September 2006, there is only a single procedure; apart from examining the asylum applications under the 1951 Geneva Convention, it allows for granting humanitarian asylum and subsidiary protection within the meaning of the Directive 2004/83/EC. Therefore, the scope of application of reception conditions is extended also to persons seeking subsidiary protection within the meaning of Directive 2004/83/EC.

With regards of the humanitarian asylum, the Ministry of the Interior has discretionary power to grant asylum for humanitarian reasons in a case requiring special consideration (e.g. pregnancy, serious disease) even if a ground for asylum under the Geneva Convention is not established (Art. 14 of the Asylum Act). This provision does not seem to be of diminished importance even though the subsidiary protection status[283] (introduced by Act No. 165/2006 Coll. (see above Q.2) was supposed to mitigate the problems with the so-called "Obstacles to Leave".

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

[283] There were only so-called "Obstacles to Leave" (Art. 91 of the Asylum Act applicable before September, 1, 2006) which stipulated only basic rights for their beneficiaries. Obstacles to Leave were abolished by Act No. 165/2006 Coll. and replaced with the subsidiary protection status. However, "Obstacles to Leave" remain in the Aliens Act (Art. 179).

Since the Czech Republic does not provide either diplomatic or territorial asylum, this question is of no relevance.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Yes, reception conditions are available from the moment an alien express his intention to apply for international protection. She can make the Declaration either to the Police (1) at the border crossing, (2) in the reception centre, (3) at the Regional Headquarters of the Aliens' and Border Police Service on the condition that she availed herself voluntarily, or (4) in the aliens detention centre; or to the Ministry of the Interior, if she is hospitalized in a medical facility, held in custody or imprisoned. There is no time limit for making the Declaration, except for applicants in detention centres, who must submit it within the first 7 days, i.e. within 7 days from the moment when she was informed by the Police of her opportunity to apply for international protection and of the consequences of the failure to meet this time limit (Art. 3b § 1).

After submitting the Declaration, an alien is obliged to appear at the reception centre within the validity of an entry visa issued by the Police, except when prevented by detention and airport cases, as well as objective obstacles such as hospitalisation or the execution of a prison sentence. The entry visa can be issued for a maximum period of 30 days (Art. 3d § 3). Before proceedings on granting international protection are initiated, the alien is entitled to reception conditions, i.e. for the purpose of provision of health care, accommodation, food and other services she is deemed to have the status of an asylum applicant: (1) for the period of time for which she is given leave to remain in the Czech Republic on the basis of an entry visa for a stay of up to 90 days for the purpose of filing an application for international protection (hereinafter the "Entry Visa"); (2) for a period of 5 days from the date of the Declaration, if she is not issued an Entry Visa; (3) from the date of the Declaration made during hospitalisation, custody or imprisonment until the date on which she is obligated to appear at a reception centre (Art. 3c § 1).

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

Reception conditions end when the alien loses his status as an asylum applicant. An alien enjoys the status as an asylum applicant during the administrative procedure on a request for international protection and during judicial review of the decision of the Ministry of the Interior, provided the action has a suspensive effect (see Q.11 on suspensive effect). However, on specific situation of asylum seekers who lodged a cassational complaint, see Q.11 A and Q.12 A.

Therefore, in most cases reception conditions end upon the refusal of the asylum request in the last instance. However, certain elements thereof are linked to a particular stage of the proceeding. For a general description, and as to the housing, see Q.11 A. During a period between rendering a negative decision and filing an action to the Regional Court, the applicant is entitled to material reception conditions (with the exception of pocket-money and financial contribution to self-catering). If she files the action within the time limit, she is entitled to the same material reception conditions (i.e. including pocket-money and financial contribution to self-catering) as apply during proceedings before the Ministry of Interior. However, if she fails to file the action by this deadline she is deprived of all material reception conditions. Similarly, the same rules apply when the negative decision of the final instance (i.e. of the Supreme Administrative Decision) is rendered. The rejected applicant who is staying on the territory with the toleration visa is issued the "exit permit visa" (výjezdní příkaz) pursuant to Art. 50 of the Aliens Act and is deprived of all material reception conditions until his departure from the territory of the Czech Republic.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Yes, there are special rules for successive applications. According to Art.10 § 3 of the Asylum Act[284] "an alien who has already applied in the Czech Republic for international protection is authorised to file an application for international protection no sooner than 2 years after the end of the previous proceedings".[285] Consequently, asylum seekers who lodged successive application are generally not entitled to the material reception conditions from the Ministry of Interior.

The two-year period shall not apply to Dublin cases, where proceedings were suspended and the Czech Republic is competent to assess the alien's new application for international protection (Art. 10 § 3 of the Asylum Act). Relevant part of Art. 10 § 4 of the Asylum Act reads as follows: "The two-year term shall not apply if the procedure on granting of international protection commenced by filing an application for international protection has been terminated in accordance with Article 25 point a) or h) and the Czech Republic is competent to examine her new application for international protection. Furthermore the two-year term shall not apply to an application for international protection filed by an alien in whose case it has been decided in the procedure on administrative expulsion conducted in accordance with a special legal regulation that it is impossible for him/her to leave the Territory." (footnote omitted)

[284] This provision will most likely be subject to change during the ongoing process of transposition of the Procedures Directive.
[285] If an alien applies to a court for the review of an administrative decision, the date on which the court decision has become legally effective is deemed to be the beginning of the two-year period.

Furthermore, in all cases, the Ministry of the Interior may allow an exception to 2-year time limit in individual cases (Art. 10 § 4 of the Asylum Act). If an asylum seeker lodges a request for exception to 2-year time limit, she is accommodated in the reception centre in Vyšní Lhoty, where she waits for the decision of the Ministry of Interior. During this period she is entitled to the same material reception conditions as a regular asylum seeker.

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Yes, when they lodge their application asylum seekers are given a leaflet with detailed information on reception conditions. The leaflet is prepared by the RFA and includes: information about DAMP, Aliens' and Border Police and free legal counselling provided by NGOs; contact on social service workers and manager of the asylum facility; comprehensive list of organisations providing legal, social and psychological counselling, health care with all necessary contacts, including the above-mentioned NGOs, UNHCR and IOM; emergency phone numbers; access to laundry services and telephone; information about pocket money, catering facilities, sanitary items etc. In all the reception and accommodation centres the asylum seekers have also access to the accommodation rules, basic information about asylum facility and information on various medical tests (HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, syphilis etc.), basic hygienic information and information about domestic violence. Other information concerning the management of the centre is placed on notice boards of the asylum centre (in the form of pictures/pictograms).[286]

Furthermore, UNHCR had designed a special information leaflet for asylum seekers at the airport, which contains basic information about the course of the airport asylum procedure, rights and obligations of asylum seekers and list of NGOs providing assistance to asylum seekers in the Czech Republic. The UNHCR information leaflet has been translated to the most frequent languages, including English, Russian, Arabic and French. As to the special leaflet prepared by UNHCR for asylum seekers in the detention centres, see Q.33 I.

[286] E.g. information on how to proceed in case of transfer, how to get hygienic parcels, how to borrow various materials, how to arrange changing of bed-sheets or how to get information on food provision. Several centres have this information available only in printed versions.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

The information is provided both in writing and orally. As mentioned above, asylum seekers are given a leaflet with detailed information when they lodge their application and they are again orally instructed (by means of an interpreter) on asylum proceedings, including their rights and duties before and during the interview. In addition, every reception and accommodation centre offers 24-hour social services providing relevant information. During the course of asylum procedure, the asylum seekers have access to information concerning their rights and obligations through the Ministry of the Interior and/or NGOs.

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

Yes, information is provided in a language understood by the asylum seeker. Information is provided in nearly all languages, except for rare African tribal languages. DAMP always try to find interpreter from particular region, so that the asylum seeker can be provided with oral instructions. Pursuant to reply from the RFA, the information leaflets are available in 9 languages: Russian, English, Chinese, Turkish, French, Vietnamese, Romanian, Arabic and Mongolian.

More generally, an asylum seeker is entitled to use her mother tongue, or with her consent a language in which she is able to communicate, during the entire course of a proceeding on international protection. The Ministry of the Interior thus provides asylum seekers with an interpreter for the entire course of a proceeding (Art. 22 § 1). Furthermore, if the asylum seeker is not satisfied with the assigned interpreter, she is entitled to engage an interpreter of her own choice, albeit at her expenses (Art. 22 § 2).

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Yes, the duty to provide information within the deadline of 15 days is explicitly laid down in Art. 10 § 5 of the Asylum Act and is respected. Indeed, as mentioned above, the information leaflet is passed to the asylum seeker straight away when she submits the application. According to the NGOs, there have been problems reported as to the asylum seekers at the airport who speak rare language, and particularly due to the special procedure and short time limits for issuing the RSD decisions.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

There are two leaflets given to the asylum seekers, one prepared by the RFA which includes information on reception conditions (see Q.17 A) and one prepared by the DAMP with information about asylum procedure. The information leaflet of the RFA includes a comprehensive list of organisations providing legal, social and psychological counselling with all necessary contacts. However, it is true that the leaflet of the RFA could in addition of the mere list of organisations provide greater detail of the range of services provided by each NGO. The leaflets provided by UNHCR to asylum seekers placed in detention centres serve as a good example of a short description of services provided by NGOs. Asylum seekers are also instructed about the provision of health care and can obtain a list of doctors providing health care on a contract basis with the Ministry of the Interior. From September 1, 2006 health care is supposed to be provided through the public health insurance system (i.e. that the costs associated with the health care will be covered by the State and the costs incurred by the health care facility will be paid from the public health insurance), and therefore health care will be provided under the same conditions as to Czech citizens. There is always a nurse on call in the centres and general practitioners visit the centres on a regular basis (see below Q.27 C). The list of the pharmacies and organisations providing health care is also available on the website of the RFA.

The RFA has finished its work on translation of information about changes in the system of health insurance concerning asylum-seekers and their access to health care that became effective as of September 1, 2006. This information is provided in the following languages: Czech, English, Vietnamese, Chinese, French, Arabic, Mongolian and Russian.

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Yes, the information is provided to the asylum seekers in writing and also orally if necessary. As mentioned above, every reception and accommodation centre also offers 24-hour social services providing relevant information.

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

Yes, this obligation is met. See Q.17 C. Most information is provided at least in Czech, English, Russian, French, Chinese and Arabic. If the asylum seeker does not speak one of the relevant languages, the RFA is obliged to inform her about the content of the information "in an alternative way".

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

It depends on the classification. There are 4 major organizations (OPU, PPU, SOZE, Caritas) that specialise in providing comprehensive legal, social and psychological services for asylum seekers. Furthermore, there are many others that provide services only in certain field(s) or on an ad hoc basis including inter alia material assistance, leisure time activities, crisis intervention for women etc. Overall, there are approximately 20 NGOs active in this field.[287]

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

The asylum seeker is issued a "Certificate of an Applicant for International Protection" (hereinafter the "Certificate") by the Ministry of the Interior (Art. 57 § 1), and she is simultaneously provided with a "visa for the purpose of the procedure on international protection" (Art. 72 § 1). The Certificate serves also as a document proving the identity of its holder. The holder of a Certificate is not obligated to prove the facts entered therein in any other manner, unless a special law stipulates otherwise (Art. 57 § 3).

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

The Certificate is not issued to an asylum seeker who is in custody, imprisoned, or in the detention centre. The Ministry of the Interior is obliged to issue the Certificate no later than 3 days after the asylum applicant arrives (or is transferred) to an asylum facility (Art. 57 § 2). There is no exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant to enter legally on the territory" in the Asylum Act. These procedures are briefly described in Q.32 D.

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

[287] A comprehensive list of all actors involved in the field is available (even in English) at http://www.migrationonline.cz/contacts_i.shtml.

The Certificate is in principle valid for as long as is the visa issued for the purpose of the procedure on international protection (Art. 57 § 5). The validity of the Certificate may be repeatedly extended depending on whether the visa is renewed. A visa issued for the purpose of the procedure on international protection is in principle issued for a period of up to 90 days and must be renewed regularly (Art. 72 § 2). Asylum seekers staying outside the accommodation centres are obliged to renew their visa at the local Police Department according to their registered address (Art. 72 § 3). If the asylum seeker has not registered her address, she must renew her visa at the local Police Department according to the location of the asylum facility where she was last registered (Art. 72 § 4).

An asylum seeker is obligated to file an application for extension before the current visa expires. The visa for the purpose of the procedure on international protection expires when the decision on international protection becomes final (Art. 72 § 2). However, a different regime applies for applicants who lodged a cassational complaint. These applicants hand the Certificate in to the Ministry of the Interior and they are subsequently issued a toleration visa, either to their valid travel document (i.e. passport) or if they do not possess such document they are provided with a special document by the Police. Their status is then governed by the Aliens Act and not the Asylum Act.

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[288]?

The Ministry of the Interior is obliged to issue the Certificate no later than 3 days after the asylum seeker lodges an application for international protection (Art. 57 § 1). This mandatory deadline is respected.

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

No, the Czech Republic has not implemented this measure. This possibility is not envisaged in the Asylum Act; therefore, an asylum seeker is not allowed to travel to another state, even if serious humanitarian reasons arise. Any attempt to cross the borders of the Czech Republic results in the discontinuance of the procedure, the deprivation of entitlement to material reception conditions, detention and subsequent expulsion of the asylum seeker.

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

The Ministry of the Interior runs the following registers: (1) of aliens who have made the Declaration; (2) of the residence of applicants for international protection; (3) of applicants for international protection who have filed a cassational complaint; (4) of aliens born in the Czech Republic to applicants for international protection; (5) of photographs made during admission procedures in the reception centres; (6) of applicants who have applied for the financial contribution, (7) of aliens whose proceedings for the grant of international protection have been dismissed due to the inadmissibility of their application (Art. 71 § 1). Furthermore, the Police runs its own database that includes registers under subheadings (2) and (3) and also a database of visas issued and fingerprints taken. The databases exist both in print and electronic versions.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers :

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Yes, after the admission procedure in the closed reception centre, asylum seekers are in principle free to move about the territory of the Czech Republic. However, the visa issued under the Asylum Act may restrict movement to a part of the territory of the Czech Republic for the following reasons: (1) protection of state security, (2) the maintenance of public order, (3) the protection of public health, or (4) compliance with international treaties (Art. 85b § 1). When issuing the visa which restricts movement to certain part of the territory, it is necessary to ensure that the consequences of such a restrictive measure are proportional to the reasons for such measure (Art. 85b § 2). The Police are obliged to take into account, in particular, the effect of the restriction on the applicant's private and family life (Art. 85b § 2). Under no circumstances may such territorial restrictions exceed 3 months following the commencement of proceedings for international protection (Art. 85b § 2). However, this provision has not been applied at all (this is to clarify the position in 2006 Synthesis Report [p. 46] that suggests that "this possibility is not very often used") in practice;[289] it is therefore difficult to predict to which part of the territory, or within how large an area, an asylum seeker is to be restricted. From the Czech wording of the Asylum Act, it is possible to infer that the restriction should be to a part of the territory rather than to a particular place or facility (a contrario Art. 52 § 1 letter a) clause 1. of the Aliens Act which refers both to a specific place and a part of the territory).

Freedom of movement is also restricted in the reception centre during admission procedures (see also Q.20 E). In addition, special rules apply for asylum seekers in the transit zone of the international airport.[290] A new reception centre was established in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport as of January 16, 2006. Asylum seekers may not leave the reception centre in the transit zone even after admission procedures are concluded. However, the Ministry of the Interior is obliged to transfer the asylum seeker to a different reception or accommodation centre designated by it, if (1) it does not issue a decision within 5 days of the date of commencement of the proceedings for the grant of asylum, or (2) the court does not issue a decision within 45 days of the date of filing of an action against the decision of the Ministry of the Interior (Art. 73 § 2). The maximum duration of stay is thus generally 57 days (5 days for rendering the first instance decision + 7 days for filling an action to the regional court + 45 days during the proceedings before the regional court). After this period at the latest, asylum seekers are brought to the accommodation centre. Until 2004, there were some problems reported, e.g. although the Ministry of the Interior issued a decision within the time-limit of five days (Art. 73 § 2), the applicant waited in the centre for another two weeks until the decision was delivered.[291] This problem with delays in delivering the decisions of the DAMP has been challenged before the Supreme Administrative Court which has not conclusively decided this issue so far. See also Q.32 C.

[289] In fact, the Ministry of the Interior is seriously thinking of repealing this provision for its redundancy.
[290] To date, the Prague International Airport is the only such reception centre. But see Q.32 C.

The 2007 Amendment contains highly controversial provision (Art. 46a) that under certain circumstances (Art. 46a § 1) allows the Ministry of the Interior to confine the applicant for international protection in the reception centre until her deportation (i.e. even after initial medical screening). This decision on confinement is appealable to the administrative courts (Art. 46a § 3) and is subject to regular review of the necessity of confinement (Art. 46a § 4).

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

After the first phase of the reception of asylum seekers (see Q.11 A), an asylum applicant is free to choose to stay in the accommodation centre or in private accommodation. However, if she opts for the accommodation centre, she is not free to choose a particular accommodation centre and is obliged to stay in the centre designated by the Ministry of the Interior (Art. 77 § 1). The only exception is for the purposes of maintaining family unity (see Q.23). There is also a possibility to return back to the accommodation centre from the private housing.

The asylum applicant may seek a change of residence by applying in writing to the Police Department that has jurisdiction ratione loci in the intended new place of residence. The application must be accompanied by a written consent of the owner of the housing facility. Within 15 days the Police must then forward the application (accompanied by its opinion) to the Ministry of the Interior (Art. 77 § 2). The Ministry of the Interior will reject the application (1) if there is a concern that the applicant will not be easily reachable for the purpose of the processing her application or (2) if the submitted documents contain any untrue statements. The opinion of social workers is also taken into account.

[291] Since under the Asylum Act the Ministry of the Interior is obliged to issue, and not deliver, the decision within 5 days. The delivery of a decision is often hindered by administrative and technical factors, which the administrative body cannot influence (e.g. lack of interpreters for a given language, etc.). See the Report on the State of Human Rights in the Czech Republic in 2004, § 9.6.2, p. 67.

As to the choice of place of residence, generally there is no modification depending on the stage of the international protection procedure. Until 2005, the RFA internally divided accommodation centres into the first instance and second instance centres. The asylum seekers were transferred into the second instance centre after a negative decision in the first instance. This transfer was justified by processing of the application for asylum. In the first instance procedure a frequent contact between the RFA and the applicant is necessary and the RFA maintained permanent offices only in certain centres. The RFA can also transfer asylum seekers from its own motion, e.g. in order to prevent disputes among the seekers or in order to protect vulnerable groups such as unaccompanied women or minors.[292]

There are two major modalities as to the choice of place of residence: (1) visas which restrict movement to certain part of the territory and (2) third instance procedure. As to the visas restricted to certain part of the territory, these might be issued only for 3 months following the commencement of proceedings for international protection (see Q.20 A and Q.21 E). As to the third instance procedure, if the asylum seeker submits to the Supreme Administrative Court a cassational complaint against the decision of the regional court, she is issued a toleration visa and her status is governed by the Aliens Act (Art. 78b § 7 of the Asylum Act). Therefore, she is no longer entitled to housing in the accommodation centres and is obliged to find private accommodation herself. However, if she proves that her financial situation does not allow her to cover the expenses and that she is not able to secure the accommodation, her housing will be secured by the Ministry of the Interior (Art. 78c). In practice, the applicant is usually provided with cheap accommodation in a hostel designated for that purpose. Those hostels are run by NGOs or private owners in cooperation with the RFA (for example by Caritas in Litoměřice and Brozany nad Ohří). Most recently, the NGOs reported problems with the access to the funding from the RFA for running these hostels.

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

During the admission procedure, the asylum seekers are placed into the reception centre either in Vyšní Lhoty or in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport[293] (depending on a place of submitting asylum claim). The applicant cannot influence the decision of the Ministry of the Interior concerning his place of stay in this phase.

After the completion of admission procedure, she is transferred from the reception centre to the accommodation centre or can decide to stay in private. The applicant can choose the accommodation centre only to a very limited extent since it depends on several factors such as capacity of the centres; furthermore, until 2005 some camps were only for asylum seekers in the first or second instance etc. The decisions determining the place are taken individually and the applicants can ask for their transfer but the decision is taken in rather informal procedure and the outcome is solely within the discretion of the Ministry of the Interior.

The applicants are entitled to the material reception conditions only if they opted for housing in an accommodation centre. Applicants staying in private accommodation are only entitled to the financial contribution, and it must be remembered that they can are entitled to this contribution only during the first three months (see Q.11 A). If the asylum seekers opted for housing in private, there is a special procedure which must be followed in order to get approval from the Ministry of the Interior (see subquestion B). Put differently, the Czech Asylum Act restricts access to several reception conditions in cases where asylum seekers refuse to stay in collective reception centres because they have the possibility to accommodate themselves (the Czech Republic should be thus added to 5 states mentioned in the 2006 Synthesis Report on p. 8 and p. 48, Q.20C). As stressed in the 2006 Synthesis Report, this practice undermines the autonomy of the individuals concerned.

For the situation of applicants who lodged a cassational complaint, see also subquestion B.

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)

This question is of no relevance for the Czech Republic. As a general rule, an asylum applicant is free to choose to stay either in the accommodation centre or in a private accommodation (see also Q.12 B). If an accommodation centre runs out of space, its capacity can be further expanded (see Q.24 D). Emergency situations are also foreseen in the quality standards approved by the Minister of the Interior in August 2005 and implemented by the RFA (see Q.39 B). Furthermore, the RFA provide no accommodation facilities other than the accommodation centres (and reception centres).

In sum, under any circumstances applicants are ensured a place to live. Several centres were taken out of service, but they can be quickly renewed, thus the number of the available spots can be increased by almost three times within few days. Pursuant to the Asylum Act, the RFA is responsible for providing accommodation at no charge to every applicant for international protection, and it is neither possible to assign them to any other type of facility nor to force them to find private housing (except for the third instance procedure, i.e. before the Supreme Administrative Court, see Q.20 B).

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

Applicants may leave their accommodation centre as they please under the conditions mentioned below. An applicant residing in an accommodation centre (i.e. whose address is registered with the accommodation centre) can leave this centre for a period not exceeding 10 days in a calendar month (Art. 82 § 1). The Ministry of the Interior may also permit an applicant to stay outside the centre beyond the limit of 10 days per month, provided that this absence does not hinder the processing of his application (Art. 82 § 3).

The applicant is obligated to notify the Ministry of the Interior in writing that she is leaving the centre for any period exceeding 24 hours. The applicant must state the address of her temporary residence and the period of stay outside the accommodation centre. In case of an absence from the centre for a period exceeding 3 days, she must notify the Ministry at least 24 hours before her departure (Art. 82 § 2).

If the visa is restricted to a part of the territory (Art. 85b § 1), a temporary permission to leave the assigned part of the territory of the Czech Republic is not available. Furthermore, there is no right of administrative appeal in such cases. The applicant can only file a complaint under Art. 175 of the Administrative Code to local department of the Aliens' and Border Police, and in case of negative decision also to the Directorate of the Aliens' and Border Police. As to the judicial review, the outcome is unclear since there has not been any challenge of this provision before the courts. However, there is no reason in principle why a negative decision on a temporary permission to leave the assigned part of the territory of the Czech Republic should not fall under judicial review, most likely under Art. 4 § 1 letter c) of the Code of Administrative Justice (for short description of the administrative judicial review, see Q.22 A).

However, the accumulation of two facts – a limited period of these visas (they may not exceed 3 months following the commencement of proceedings for international protection) and the fact that almost no administrative court would be able to decide on a negative decision on a temporary permission within such a short period – renders the judicial review ineffective. On the other hand, the situation is to some extent mitigated by the fact that the visas restricted to a particular part of the territory so far have not been issued.

Q.21. Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

The Czech Republic has not implemented this measure; therefore, there are only financial sanctions for the breach of the applicant's obligations (see Q.25 D). Access to health care is ensured on the same level (which means on the same basis as for Czech citizens) during all the stages of the procedure (i.e. including the third instance procedure before the Supreme Administrative Court).

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice?

No, the Czech Republic has not implemented this measure, and there was no such practice prior to the transposition of Directive 2003/9/EC. In practice, these cases might be treated as manifestly unfounded submissions (Art. 16 § 2), a fact which has no direct consequences for access to reception conditions. The only exception is in the case of a detained alien, who must make the Declaration within 7 days of the moment when she was informed by the Police of her opportunity to apply for international protection and of the consequences of her failure to meet this time limit (Art. 3b § 1). Otherwise, her right to apply expires. See also Q.14.

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

Since the Czech Republic has not implemented Art. 16 (1) and (2) of the Directive, this question is of no relevance. Under all circumstance, judicial review would be available (see Q.22).

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the document attached to our sending)?

Due to the answer to the Q.21 A, it is clear that the statement 14/03 is respected in the Czech Republic.

Q.21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome?

Since the Czech Republic has not implemented Art. 16(1) and 16(2) of the Directive, this question is of no relevance.

Q.22. Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

The applicant for international protection can file a complaint to the RFA and then to the Ministry of the Interior (Art. 175 of Administrative Code[294]), and then (or directly) appeal to the Regional Court, and finally lodge a cassational complaint to the Supreme Administrative Court. Therefore, there is no formal administrative appeal. The only way to challenging all such decisions is by way of judicial review.

On the other hand, there is no restriction on access to administrative judicial review; therefore, the guarantee of an appeal to a judicial body in the last instance is respected. As to the judicial review in general, courts of administrative justice decide inter alia not only on complaints against decisions of and administrative authority (Art. 4 § 1 letter a) of the Code of Administrative Justice[295]), but also on protection against the inaction of an administrative authority (Art. 4 § 1 letter b) of the CAJ) and protection against an unlawful interference of an administrative authority (Art. 4 § 1 letter c) of the CAJ), [294] However, there are several limitations on applicability of Administrative Code to the asylum procedure. See Arts. 9 and 92b § 1 of the Asylum Act.

[295] Hereinafter only the "CAJ".

Therefore, there is no reason in principle why a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on Art. 7 of the Directive should not fall under one of the abovementioned grounds (i.e. those stipulated in the CAJ) of jurisdiction of the administrative courts. The asylum seekers thus can appeal to the Regional Court pursuant to Art. 65 and the following of the CAJ and ultimately lodge a cassational complaint to the Supreme Administrative Court pursuant to Art. 103 of the CAJ. This view is also accepted by the Ministry of the Interior. Nevertheless, there has not been any case where these provisions have been challenged before the Czech courts.

However, as mentioned above (see Q.20 E), temporary permission to leave the assigned part of the territory of the Czech Republic is not available neither under Asylum Act nor under Aliens Act. It is true that this situation is to some extent mitigated by the fact that the visas restricted to a particular part of the territory so far have not been issued and by a limited period of these visas (see also Q.20 A), but for practical consequences see Q.20 E (on appeal to a judicial body in the last instance in these cases and its effectiveness, see ibid).

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

NGOs regularly provide legal assistance in these cases for free since the Ministry of the Interior reimburses the costs of this assistance incurred by NGOs even though strictly speaking Art. 21 § 1 does not stipulate obligation of the Ministry to reimburse these costs; it solely empowers the Ministry to do so. Furthermore, an applicant's right to obtain legal assistance provided on the basis of a different legal regulation (i.e. on a paid basis) is not affected thereby (Art. 21 § 2).

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

There has so far been no legal challenges of negative decisions relating to the grant of benefits under Directive 2003/9/EC. The only case worthy of note is the so-called "electric socket" case. As to the facts, the RFA decided to gradually remove electric sockets from some buildings (because of the alleged abuse of these facilities), including from rooms used for housing asylum seekers. This measure attracted the attention of the media, of NGOs as well as of the Public Defender of Rights (hereinafter Ombudsman). The situation was also addressed by the Government Council for Human Rights, which adopted a resolution in the matter.[296] The problem was finally solved to the satisfaction of all involved actors by the implementation of the quality standards by the RFA and thus the electric sockets were installed in all rooms in accommodation centres which are used for housing, except for the accommodation centre in Kostelec n. Orlici, which needs reconstruction.[297] The solution was also supported by the notion of "dignified standards of living" mentioned in the Directive, which was heavily relied on during the negotiations with the Ministry of the Interior.

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

The applicant for international protection can file a complaint under Art. 175 of the Administrative Code (Act. No. 400/2004 Coll.). Pursuant to Art. 175 § 5 of the Administrative Code, these complaints must be handled within 60 days. This complaint may be lodged both orally or/and in writing (Art. 175 § 3 of the Administrative Code). Furthermore, special boxes for anonymous complaints are also available at each asylum facility. The complaint might be addressed to the following actors: (1) to manager of a particular facility; or (2) to the Director of the RFA.

Asylum seeker might address problem also to the Deputy Minister of the Interior, to the Minister of the Interior, NGOs and also to the Ombudsman (see Q.39 A). It is thus closely linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

The definition of family for the purposes of shared housing includes the spouse of the applicant, direct relatives (i.e. children, parents, grandchildren, grandparents etc.) or a "close persons" (Art. 44). Persons who declare that they have personal relations with each other are deemed to be "close persons" (Art. 44). Therefore, there is no distinction in treatment between married and unmarried couples. Furthermore, there is no searching inquiry as to the requirement of a "stability of the relationship". It is notable that the Asylum Act includes unmarried partners within the definition of "family members" for purpose of housing even though the Czech law relating to aliens (Aliens Act) does not treat unmarried couples in a way comparable to married couples (see in particular Art. 42a § 1 of the Aliens Act; the only exception is treatment of unmarried couples of the EU citizens, see Art. 15a § 4 of the Aliens Act). The Asylum Act thus clearly provides more favourable standard than the Directive itself.

The above-mentioned group of applicants for international protection is entitled to share accommodation in the asylum facilities. Shared accommodation is provided only with the applicant's consent and on the condition that the family persons are also seeking international protection (Art. 44). Ministry of Interior may under exceptional circumstances permit person not seeking international protection to be accommodated in asylum facility with her minor or legitimate representative, who is asylum seeker (Art. 79 § 5). Arts. 8 and 14(2) of the Directive are thus respected.

Furthermore, due to the adoption of the Same-Sex Marriage Law in 2006 (Act No. 115/2006 Coll.), the 2007 Amendment included within the definition of "family members" for the purpose of family reunification same-sex couples (proposed wording of Art. 13 § 1(a)). Therefore, it can be reasonably inferred that the notion of "close persons" in Art. 44 will include same-sex couples as well.

Q.24. Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

Housing takes the form of reception and accommodation centres. There are no private houses, apartments or other premises provided by the Ministry of the Interior. There are twelve asylum facilities in the Czech Republic. The RFA is responsible for the management of all asylum facilities in the country. Seven centres are owned by the state and operated by the RFA, and five are run by other legal entities, mostly municipalities, on a contract basis with the RFA and for a fee.

There are 2 reception centres and 10 accommodation centres (for further details see also Q.36). The average length of stay of applicants in the accommodation centres is approximately 6 months. The reception centre in Vyšní Lhoty is located in the north-western part of the Czech Republic, close to the border with Slovakia and Poland, as the majority of migrants enter the territory of the Czech Republic from these two countries. The second reception centre is located at the international airport in Prague. Ten accommodation centres are evenly spread across the territory of the Czech Republic; they are located in both rural and urban locations.

Act No. 57/2005 Coll. further explicitly transposed Art. 14 (1) (b) of the Directive by adding a provision to the Asylum Act that stipulates that "the asylum facilities are used for collective housing of applicants for international protection ... under conditions ensuring full respect for [their] human dignity".[298]

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers? Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

There are 467 available places in the reception centres and 1,808 places in the accommodation centres. There are no private houses, apartments or other premises provided by the Ministry of the Interior.

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?

The existing reception capacity has been sufficient in the past and can be extended in emergencies. Furthermore, the number of asylum seekers has decreased since 2004. A few buildings are thus currently closed (e.g. Červený Újezd in 2005) and some are being reconstructed. Nevertheless, the government does not plan to reduce significantly the number of existing facilities. (Due to the decrease, RFA has recently taken out of service only one of the centres.)

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

Yes, there are special measures foreseen in the quality standards approved by the Minister of the Interior in August 2005 and implemented by the RFA for all the reception and accommodation centres. In urgent cases, the number of places in the centres can be increased to 4,293 beds. In the case of a mass influx of applicants for international protection the quality standards envisage precise steps for the adaptation of the centre in two stages: (1) extended capacity; and (2) crisis capacity.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

No, there are no different categories of accommodation centres any more. The RFA internally divided accommodation centres into the first instance and second instance centres only until 2005 (see Q.20 B). An asylum seeker is thus entitled to housing in an accommodation centre throughout the whole procedure, more precisely during the first instance procedure before the DAMP and proceedings before the regional court. If an asylum seeker lodges a cassational complaint to the Supreme Administrative Court, she is no longer allowed to stay in the accommodation centre and is obliged to find private accommodation herself (see Q.11 A).

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

No, there is no time limit upon entitlement to stay in the accommodation centre during the first (the DAMP) and second (the regional court) instance proceedings. However, a different regime applies if the applicant lodges a cassational complaint. (see above and also Q.11 A)

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

Yes, there are internal rules of conduct applicable in the accommodation centres. The general rights and duties of applicants are also laid down in the Asylum Act. There are no purely private centres, and the RFA is responsible for the management of all asylum facilities in the country. Seven centres are owned by the state and operated by the RFA, and five are run by other legal entities, mostly municipalities, on a contract basis with the RFA and for a fee. The internal rules of conduct are always laid down by the RFA and they are administered centrally by the RFA. Quality Standards approved by the Minister of the Interior and implemented by the RFA are applicable to all asylum facilities in the Czech Republic.

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision? Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

There are no sanctions in the internal rules of conduct. The sanctions for a breach of the duties of an applicant for international protection are set forth (exclusively) in the Asylum Act.

According to the Asylum Act, the DAMP can impose a fine of up to 2000 CZK upon an applicant for international protection inter alia in case she: (1) on purpose intentionally damages the equipment of the centre or her Certificate; (2) does not report the loss of her Certificate; (3) fails to comply with the orders or instructions of the Police or DAMP officials in the asylum facility; (4) refuses to allow an inspection of her person or of her personal belongings; (5) leaves the centre without prior notification to the DAMP; (6) returns to the centre after the expiry of the allowed period (i.e. if she leaves the accommodation centre for more than 10 days in a month without obtaining advance permission); (7) leaves the restricted territory within which she is obliged to stay according to the regional validity of the visa; (8) stays in the asylum facility without authorisation; and (9) conceals her property and financial situation. A similar fine can be imposed also upon an alien for a breach of several duties occurring before the international protection procedure is initiated, i.e. in a period between the Declaration and the commencement of the procedure.

There is always an individual administrative procedure initiated in the case of an offence. The accused offender can defend herself and has the right to appeal to the Minister of the Interior. Decisions shall be objective and impartial. Appeals to the regional court are allowed. However, so far no judgement relating to the sanction regime has been delivered.

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

The Czech Republic has not implemented this measure; therefore, applicants for international protection are not involved in the management of asylum facilities. On limited contribution to the management of the centre, see subquestion F.

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

Yes, there are specific rules. An asylum seeker in an accommodation centre can work in the centre (e.g. cleaning, help in the kitchen, etc.), on a voluntary basis, up to 12 hours per month, in which case her pocket money will be increased up to double the regular amount (see Q.12 A). This work can be considered as a contribution to the management of the centre only to a limited extent, since it is only ancillary work. Similarly, it does not imply access to the labour market.

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

Asylum applicants have access to free legal counsel. Lawyers from different NGOs regularly visit accommodation centres and help asylum applicants with their problems. As regards the Asylum Act, an applicant is entitled to request assistance from an organisation or a private individual who is providing legal assistance to refugees (Art. 21 § 1). Furthermore, she is entitled to contact any private individual or organisation providing her with legal assistance (Art. 21 § 3). Finally, she is entitled to be in contact with the UNHCR and other organisations protecting the rights of refugees throughout her entire proceedings (Art. 38).

If such legal advisers or NGO representatives provide legal assistance for free, the Ministry of the Interior may, on the basis of a written agreement, contribute to the payment of the costs related to the provision of such assistance (Art. 21 § 1). The applicant's right to obtain legal assistance provided on the basis of a different legal regulation (i.e. on a paid basis) is not affected thereby (Art. 21 § 2).

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

In practice, legal advisers, the UNHCR and NGOs have regular access both to the reception centre in Vyšní Lhoty and the accommodation centres. For reasons of security, every visitor to the centre (except for UNHCR representatives) needs a permit from the RFA. However, legal counsellors have no problem in obtaining this permit. UNHCR representatives do not need such a permit to enter asylum facilities.

There is a slightly different procedure for obtaining permission to visit the reception centre in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport. For an individual visit, it is necessary to undergo a security clearance from the special department of the Ministry of the Interior. For regular visits to the reception centre in the transit zone of the airport, it is necessary to apply to the Czech Airports Authority for a special permit.

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

In general, after obtaining permission from the RFA, there is no restriction on access. Right to access to legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs is expressly guaranteed by Art. 21 § 3.

One NGO reported that access was very rarely limited for the security reasons or in the case of quarantine or a danger of epidemic in the past. It was presumably on the ground of laws of general application. However, according to the UNHCR representative, their access to the asylum facilities was never denied. A different regime applies at the Prague International Airport (see subquestion B).

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

Yes, there is a mandatory medical screening during the admission procedure in the reception centre. The medical screening includes:

- for adults: a lung x-ray, a blood test for BWR (syphilis), an inspection of stool for parasites, and a bacteriological inspection of stool;
- for pregnant women: a blood test for BWR, HIV, HBSAG, and blood type, an inspection of stool for parasites, and a bacteriological inspection of stool;
- for children up to 15: an inspection of stool for parasites, a bacteriological inspection of stool, and a MANTOUX test.

HIV tests are not mandatory except for pregnant women, who are always tested for HIV and jaundice. It was reported that HIV tests are also conducted if there are "indications of an infection" present. The HIV test can also be done at the asylum seeker's request.

Furthermore, the applicant is obligated to permit a medical screening at any stage of the procedure, if it is necessary in the interests of public health (Art. 47 § 2).

The 2007 Amendment (that is supposed to among others transpose the Procedures Directive) stipulates medical screening for reason of determining the age of unaccompanied minor in case of doubts about her age (Art. 89 § 3). If a minor refuses to undergo this treatment she will no longer be considered a minor (Art. 89 § 3 last sentence). Art. 89 § 4 provides certain safeguards against misuse of this provision and stipulates that the Ministry of the Interior must inform the applicant about the 'age screening' within 15 days after submitting a Declaration (see Q.11.A) in a language understood by the applicant. Furthermore, applicant must be informed about the consequences of the 'age screening' and also about the consequences of refusing to undergo the 'age screening' (Art. 89 § 4).

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Yes, applicants for international protection always receive emergency care and essential treatment of illness. Indeed, they also have full access to health care on the same level as the Czech nationals (see subquestion C).

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?

Health care is provided in all accommodation centres. Nurses (employees of the RFA) are on call in the centres and the doctors visit the centres on a regular basis.

Until August 31, 2006, applicants living in private accommodation can seek treatment either in an asylum facility or in a health centres having a contract with the RFA. From September 1, 2006 health care is supposed to be provided on the public health insurance basis (i.e. that the costs associated with health care will be covered by the State and costs incurred by the health care facility will be paid from the public health insurance); therefore, health care will be provided under the same conditions as to Czech citizens (see also Q.18 A).

From October 2005 (the entry into force of Act No. 350/2005 Coll.) until August 2006 (prior to the entry into force of Act No. 165/2006 Coll.), there was a problem as to the payments of health care provided to asylum seekers. This problem was caused by the inconsistent interpretations of Art. 88 § 2 of the Asylum Act and Art. 7 of Act No. 48/1997 Coll., on Public Health Insurance, adopted by the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Health and the Health Insurance Companies.[299] Fortunately, this issue was resolved in Act No. 165/2006 Coll.,[300] so that there should have no longer been any problems in practice.

However, after the entry into force of Act No. 165/2006 Coll. as of September 1, 2006, the problems mentioned hereinafter were reported and it seems that in practice the whole process of transition to the public health insurance has been insufficiently facilitated and may indeed lead to watering-down the existing standards. Firstly, the General Health Insurance Company was not able to manage the sudden increase of applications for [299] For a detailed analysis, see the Report on the State of Human Rights in the Czech Republic in 2005, § 9.4.1, pp. 80-81; or the Position Paper of AEC: Problems with providing and payment for health care to asylum seekers and aliens with toleration visas, available at http://www.migraceonline.cz/clanky_f.shtml?x=1362250 (see bibliography).

health insurance cards and instead issued only temporary cards. This problem has already been rectified in the meantime. Secondly, every participant in the public health insurance must be registered with the general practitioner. However, as certain accommodation centres are situated in rural areas or close to the small towns, the GPs are not prepared to accept all the asylum seekers and in consequence, the asylum seekers must commute. Thirdly, commuting is costly and in particular as to the amount of pocket money given to the asylum seekers. The RFA reimbursed all the incidental expenses for commuting to the general practitioner. However, since January 2007 the RFA ceased to provide these commuting expenses and similarly to the reimbursement of surcharges mentioned below, commuting expenses have been reimbursed by the NGOs from various grants so far. Fourthly, a new problem with supplementary charges arose. Prior to the amendment, the RFA always reimbursed all health care expenses (including surcharges going beyond what is provided by the public health insurance scheme) but after September 1, 2006 these surcharges must be disbursed directly by asylum seekers. For example, it was reported that the asylum seeker who suffers from cancer receives appropriate treatment but does not have enough money for expectoration pills (which were previously provided by the RFA). These surcharges have been reimbursed by the NGOs from various grants so far. And finally, although the transition to the public health insurance is acknowledged step further to foster integration of asylum seekers in the Czech society (and to prevent their seclusion), complexity of this process was underestimated. Indeed, the leaflet for asylum seekers with necessary information was drafted only in the Czech language and distributed only a few days before the end of August.

The abovementioned system of 'residuary intervention' of the NGOs (in contrast to 'residuary intervention' of the RFA) with regards to commuting expenses and surcharges has been working efficiently in practice so far, but strictly legally speaking, it is problematic because of the lack of certainty regarding the implementation of the Directive. More precisely, the 'residuary intervention' of the NGOs is funded from the ERF projects that do not have to be necessarily prolonged.

Q.28. Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

Applicants for international protection have access to the labour market no sooner than 12 months after submitting the Declaration.[301] Therefore, they can obtain a work permit no earlier than one year after the Declaration is made.

From 2000 until 2002, there were no restrictions on access to the labour market for asylum seekers. However, as a result of the abuse of this system, the one-year period was introduced.

[301] Art. 99 letter (a) of Act No. 435/2004 Coll., on Employment.

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

Yes, they are obliged to obtain a work permit but they enjoy preferential treatment to other aliens (see Q.28.D). A work permit may be issued for a maximum period of one year. A work permit shall be delivered within a maximum of 30 days. This time-limit is observed by the Labour Offices. The work permit is usually issued for the period of the validity of the visa for the purpose of the asylum proceedings, i.e. 90 days. Decision on granting work permit, including its length, always depends on discretion of the Labour Office. In practice there are cases where work permits are issued beyond the length of visa for the purpose of the asylum proceedings.

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

There are no limitations such as a maximum permitted number of working hours or days per week, month or year, and no special limitation in terms of the type of work or of professions which applicants for international protection are authorised to engage in.

An applicant must only find a job and apply for a work permit to the Labour Office. However, the filing of an application for a work permit is subject to an administrative fee of 500 CZK (€18).

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Applicants for international protection (among other specific groups of aliens, such as the holders of a permanent residence permit or members of the family of the member of a diplomatic mission) are entitled to preferential treatment.[302]

In general, an alien may be employed in the Czech Republic provided that the employer has obtained a special permit to recruit employees abroad, and provided that the respective aliens have been granted individual work permits. However, an employer does not need a special permit in order to employ an applicant for international protection, which means that the employer is not obliged to report vacant positions to the Labour Office, so that the situation of the labour market is not taken into account (otherwise a position is deemed vacant only if it cannot otherwise be filled given the required qualifications or the temporary shortage in the workforce).

Due to an oversight during the adoption of Act No. 350/2005 Coll., from October 2005 (the entry into force of Act No. 350/2005 Coll.) until August 2006 (before the entry into force of Act No. 165/2006 Coll.), applicants who lodge a cassational complaint (i.e. those with a toleration visa) were deprived of this preferential treatment.

Citizens of EU/EEA countries and Swiss citizens, as well as their family members, are not considered aliens under the Employment Act, and they enjoy the same status under this Act as citizens of the Czech Republic. Therefore, an EU/EEA and Swiss citizens or their family members do not need a work permit in order to be employed in the Czech Republic.

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

No special vocational training is organised for applicants for international protection. The Czech Republic has not explicitly transposed this optional provision but Art. 109 of Act No. 435/2004 Coll., on Employment, allows the applicants for international protection to take requalification courses. However, in contrast to refugees, these requalification courses are not provided to applicants for international protection for free (a contrario Art. 40 of Act No. 435/2004 Coll., on Employment) and thus the access to the requalification courses is de facto non-existent for most of the applicants for international protection since they do not have enough funds to pay for them. Czech Republic also allows applicants for international protection who have access to the labour market to participate in vocational training funded by their employer. The second indent of Art. 12 of the Directive is thus respected.

In addition, several vocational training courses such as PC or language courses are regularly organised by the Consortium of NGOs assisting refugees.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

No, these rules were changed before the transposition of the Directive, thus were not affected thereby.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

Yes, the reception conditions are subject to the fact that applicants for international protection do not have sufficient resources. An applicant who keeps at her disposal money in excess of the subsistence minimum (approximately 4,420 CZK, although this sum varies slightly according to the number of family members) is not entitled to pocket money and is also obliged to contribute towards covering his catering and housing expenses. The contribution for housing amounts to 130 CZK (€4.60) and for catering to 112 CZK (€4) per person per day.

An applicant is also obliged (1) to report her financial and material resources (and may be fined for the failure to do so); and (2) to allow the Police to conduct a personal inspection in order to determine her financial and material resources (and the failure to permit this search is also subject to fine).

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30.

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

The Asylum Act defines the following different categories of persons with special needs: "unaccompanied minors, applicants under 18, pregnant women, disabled person, persons who have been subjected to torture, rape or other serious forms of psychological, physical or sexual violence and other persons in individual cases".[303] Neither the Asylum Act nor other legislative acts contain a definition of "other persons in individual cases" and this term is to be decided on ad hoc basis. In practice, a decision as to who qualifies as "other persons with special needs" for the purpose of provision of services in the government-run asylum centres is within the discretion of the RFA which is in charge of operating these centres.

Not surprisingly (as mentioned elsewhere in this report), there has not been any challenge before the Czech courts relating to the interpretation of this term. However, courts of administrative justice decide inter alia not only on complaints against decisions of and administrative authority (Art. 4 § 1 letter a) of the CAJ, but also on protection against the inaction of an administrative authority (Art. 4 § 1 letter b) of the CAJ) and protection against an unlawful interference of an administrative authority (Art. 4 § 1 letter c) of the CAJ), The challenge against negative decision of the RFA would perhaps fall within the third option, i.e. Art. 4 § 1 letter c) of the CAJ.

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

Applicants with special needs are placed in the protected zones of the centres. There are also special facilities for disabled persons and unaccompanied minors. Families, women and men are accommodated separately. The nationality and religion of asylum seekers is also taken into consideration. With regard to single women and mothers, attention is focused on their protection because of their vulnerability and exposure to abuse. In order to enable them to stay in an asylum facility in a dignified manner, women are accommodated in protected zones. If unaccompanied minors are under 18 years of age, they are placed in children's diagnostic institutions (see Q.31 H). They stay in accommodation centres only if an applicant who is their legal guardian accompanies them.

The system described above stems from the Internal Security Strategy project that was launched by the RFA in 2002. Its objective has been to consolidate the social and technical aspects of care for vulnerable groups into a well-functioning system. Each asylum facility has been divided into standard and protected zones. Each zone is run in a different manner. The aim of this concept of protected and standard zones is to provide each applicant with safety, differing care and protection of personal freedom.

A protected zone demands enhanced attention and guarding in order to provide maximum security. Asylum applicants who belong to vulnerable groups are accommodated there. The standard zone, where mainly single men are accommodated, demands a different approach, with respect to their adaptation. Both zones are visibly demarcated, and either a private security service or RFA employees guard the entrance. Monitoring systems surveying grounds and interior spaces are installed in the reception centres and larger accommodation centres.

As to the reception centre in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport, whenever a female asylum seeker stays there, the common corridor is divided by a lockable gate in order to allow women to be accommodated separately from men at night. The children have access to a child care room, where board games, toys, magazines and other means to spend their free-time are available. All asylum seekers have access to the day room and surgery with a regular presence of doctor and nurse, as well as to the outdoor exercise facility.

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

In general, the special needs of concerned persons are usually identified during the initial interview in the reception centre, and these special needs might be written on the Certificate. Immediately after arrival at an asylum facility, asylum applicants are placed in one of the above-mentioned zones, following preliminary screening carried out by social and reception workers. Not surprisingly, it is also possible that the relevant information will only be revealed subsequently during the second interview (on the refugee status determination).

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Yes, necessary medical and other assistance is provided to persons with special needs throughout their entire procedure and is considered systematic and continual. The status of these persons is registered within the Ministry of the Interior, and special programmes are designed for them. The RFA provides them with enhanced social advice, health care, psychological assistance, prevention and individual material assistance (especially during pregnancy and motherhood). Furthermore, at each centre expert care and the assistance of doctors, psychologists and psychiatrist for traumatized persons and victims of violence is made available.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

An applicant is considered to be a minor until the age of 18.

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Applicants for international protection are granted access to primary (sometimes also referred to as "basic" or "elementary" education), secondary and higher professional education under the same conditions as Czech nationals (Art. 80 § 4). The Ministry of the Interior is also obliged to provide minor applicants free of charge with necessary school materials as per teachers' requirements (Art. 89a). School attendance is compulsory for all children under 15 years of age in the Czech Republic. The Ministry of Education, Youth and Sports is a provider of education to applicants for international protection. As to pre-school facilities, children's centres for pre-school children have been established in all asylum facilities and they are equipped as nurseries. In these centres children are taught basic hygienic habits, learn to live and work in a group as regards adapting to the new conditions in the host country and overcome the language barrier. As to secondary education, minors who attend secondary schools are not excluded therefrom for the sole reason that they have reached the age of majority.

After completing primary education, applicants attend various secondary schools and universities free of charge; the sole condition is a sufficient knowledge of the Czech language. However, this was completely true only until December, 31, 2004. With the adoption of the new Schools Act[304] which came into force on January 1, 2005, a new problem has arisen as to the scope of the access to education system for all third country nationals (including refugees and applicants for international protection). As a result of the new Schools Act, third country nationals are not granted access to pre-school facilities (such as kindergartens etc.), and also to several secondary education facilities such as art schools and conservatories, as well as to other school services (such as meal plans, accommodation, education counselling etc.) under same conditions as the Czech nationals.

The new Schools Act provides for equal access of third country nationals under same conditions as the Czech nationals to primary, secondary and higher secondary education. As concerns access to other forms of educations (such as inter alia pre-school, art and language schools, conservatories, that are not included in the abovementioned term "primary, secondary and higher secondary education"), the law distinguishes between the Czech and the EU citizens and their family members on the one hand and the third country nationals on the other. In practice it means that the third country nationals are not prevented from access to these types of education, but they are provided with a less favourable treatment. For example they have to pay a higher fee than the Czech citizens for the provision of school services (accommodation, catering), contribute to expenses of school facility related to their attendance of kindergarten etc. The amount of a fee depends upon decision of a headmaster of each school and varies from one school to another.[305] Taken in conjunction with the amount of pocket money granted to the asylum seekers (€17 per month; see Q.12 A), this practice leads to de facto exclusion from access to the abovementioned types of secondary education facilities (as to the pre-school facilities, the situation is even more complex; see below).

[304] Act. No. 561/2004, on Pre-School, Primary, Secondary, Higher Professional and Other Education (the Schools Act), as amended. The adoption of the new Schools Act was heavily influenced by the widely criticised placement of Roma children into special schools and alleged racial segregation. For details, see also D.H. and Others v. the Czech Republic, 7 February 2006, 57325/00 (the judgement is not final since it has been referred to the Grand Chamber).

[305] Indeed, it is within the discretion of each headmaster how high the contribution to expenses of the school is and whether he will charge this fee at all.

Nevertheless, it is true that the Czech Republic has an obligation to grant to minor asylum seekers access only under conditions similar to those for Czech nationals.[306] Furthermore, pre-school facilities are available in the asylum centres;[307] therefore, a problem arises only for applicants in private accommodation. On the other hand, there are no grounds for excluding access to secondary education for third country nationals. Indeed, the NGOs reported that, since a good knowledge of the Czech language is a prerequisite, only a few asylum seekers attend secondary school (and therefore they not present a significant burden on the state). In conclusion, this issue is complex and has attracted the broad attention of the media, the public, NGOs and also of the Government Council for Human Rights.

This criticism has been only partially successful so far. The Bill (No. 43/0) amending the Schools Act was prepared and presented to the Parliament but it has been recently rejected by the lower house of the Parliament. Most recently, the new amendment (No. 227/0) is pending before the Government. In conclusion, the situation is thus is as it was in 2006.

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Yes, both conditions are fulfilled. After the admission procedures are completed (i.e. after approximately 3 weeks), minors are placed into the Czech school in the region of the respective accommodation centre. As to minors in the detention centres, see Q.33 M.

However, although both conditions (i.e. the access to education is ensured not later than 3 months running from lodging the application for international protection and till an expulsion decision is really enforced) are respected in practice, strictly legally speaking the Asylum Act does not explicitly lay down these limits.

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

In larger accommodation centres, there Czech language classes are organized that last for approximately 3 months. According to a child's skills and results, she is assigned to regular classes with Czech children. The child's previous education is recognized.

[306] See the different wording in Art. 27 of Directive 2004/83/EC which stipulates "full access to the education system under the same conditions as nationals".

[307] In fact, specialized "children centres" were established in the asylum centres. These "children centres" provide comprehensive program for both pre-school and school-age children.

Unfortunately in most centres no such classes are organized, and children are assigned to schools with Czech children straight away without any facilitation. The same is true for applicants who opted for housing in private accommodation, since they have to find specific courses and pay for them.

There are also special classes in primary schools with extended Czech language courses dedicated solely for applicants for international protection.

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Yes, minors are always accommodated together with their parents or the person responsible for them. The obligation to maintain the family unity in housing the applicants is explicitly laid down in the Asylum Act (see Q.23). Furthermore, unaccompanied minors are accommodated in a special centre, assigned a guardian, and special pedagogical workers are also engaged for them.

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Yes, they do. There are paediatricians, expert psychologists and psychiatrists, and social workers available for minors (see also Q.30 B, C and D).

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

In order to protect the rights of minor children seeking international protection in the Czech Republic, guardians are appointed for unaccompanied minors (Art. 89 § 1). Pursuant to Art. 89 § 2, order of persons eligible for being appointed as a guardian reads as follows: “The duties of the guardian shall be carried out by a relative of the unaccompanied minor who is staying on the Territory [of the Czech Republic]; if there is no such person or if such person cannot be appointed to act as a guardian, the duties of the guardian shall be carried out by another suitable natural or legal person and/or the municipal office in the municipality with extended competencies according to the place in which the unaccompanied minor is registered to reside [i.e. by OSPOD]”.

The court appoints a guardian without delay by way of a preliminary ruling (Art. 89 § 1). At the beginning of the procedure, unaccompanied minors used to be represented by the "asylum guardian" (Art. 92), who was competent only for the initial phase of the procedure before the appointment of the “residential guardian”. In most cases, these guardians were NGO staff members. A second guardian ("residential guardian") was appointed to unaccompanied minors living in the asylum centre for the duration of their residence in the Czech Republic (Art. 2 of the Act on Legal and Social Protection of Children). A representative of the Organ of Social and Legal Protection of Children (hereinafter only "OSPOD")[308] usually acts on behalf of an applicant as his residential guardian. Unaccompanied minors in a detention centre were only represented by the asylum guardian. Such a minor was not appointed a residential guardian until she was released from detention and brought to the accommodation centre. However, the amendment to the Aliens Act (Art. 124 § 3 of the Aliens Act) effective as of November 2005, provides for an appointment of the so called "residential guardian" to protect the rights and interests of an unaccompanied minor in the age of 15 to 18 years (minors under 15 cannot be detained) also during her stay in detention facility. See also Q.33 E.

However, the Regional Court in Hradec Kralové held that the asylum seekers have no right to be granted the "asylum guardian"[309] (because according to a proper interpretation of Art. 92, the "asylum guardian" is available only for the asylum seeker who reached the age of majority but is unable to act in his own capacity) and therefore since 2004 only residential guardians are appointed for unaccompanied minors. Since the "residential guardians" (i.e. mostly representatives of the OSPODs[310]) are not familiar with asylum procedure, it might cause problems in practice and may even render legal guardianship (i.e. legal representation in asylum procedure) ineffective.[311] However, this problem was raised during the ongoing transposition of the Procedures Directive and the situation might be improved by the subsequent amendment to the Asylum Act.

The situation as to the guardianship has not changed since 2006.

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

Unaccompanied minors are placed in a special diagnostic centre (Centre for Children – Aliens) run by the Ministry of Education, Youth and Sports. There are two such centres (in Prague and in Příbram). Unaccompanied minors are transferred to these centres immediately after the admission procedures in the reception centre or upon release from detention.

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

The obligation stemming from Art. 19(3) of the Directive was transposed into Art. 88b of the Asylum Act and Art. 35 § 2 letter j) of the Act on Social and Legal Protection of Children.[312] The tracing of family members is conducted under the auspices of the Office for International Legal Protection of Children, which is a special agency of the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs. The Office is the only competent authority in the Czech Republic authorized to secure and provide legal protection to minor children. When tracing family members, Czech state organs are obliged to proceed so as not to endanger the life and freedom of the minor and her family (Art. 88b).

The confidentiality of information was buttressed by adoption of new Art. 19 § 1 in the 2007 Amendment, that explicitly incorporated the principle of confidentiality into the Asylum Act.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

No, this is not the case in the Czech Republic.

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

No, this is not the case in the Czech Republic. The accommodation centres are evenly spread across the territory of the Czech Republic.

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

No, this is not the case in the Czech Republic. The number of places is sufficient and can be expanded in case of an emergency. This situation has happened only rarely (e.g. mass influx of Chechens) or exceptionally at the reception centre in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport.

However, in response to a high number of new arrivals of asylum seekers at the Prague International Airport during summer 2006, the Minister of the Interior decided to establish a branch of the airport reception centre in the detention centre in Velké Přílepy situated approximately 40 km from Prague. Since 1 July 2006, this "new" branch has been used for accommodation of the asylum seekers who made asylum declaration in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport provided that reception centre in the transit zone of the airport runs out of the space.[313] The asylum seekers transferred to this "new" branch are subjected to the same legal regime as if they were staying at the airport reception centre, i.e. they are not entitled to leave the facility for the whole duration of the "airport" asylum proceedings (see Q.20 A), since it is presumed that they are legally staying in the Prague International Airport. The Ministry of the Interior thus creates a legal fiction of residence of the asylum seeker at the transit zone of the airport, which triggers a specific "airport procedure".

The transfer policy after 1 July 2006 is problematic not only with regards Arts. 14(8) and 14(4) of the Directive (because these transfers to the detention centre are not necessary; however, this provision of the Directive is not mentioned in the questionnaire) but also with regards of Art. 18(1) of the Procedures Directive. Furthermore, this transfer policy was rather ad hoc solution and had no legal basis in the Asylum Act. Finally, application of the so-called "airport procedure" rests on very vague grounds since the transferred asylum seekers are clearly on the territory of the Czech Republic and not "confined to the border post" as stipulated in Art. 14(8) last prong of the Directive. Therefore, a transfer in case of temporary exhaustion of housing capacities (Art. 14 (8) third prong) in the transit zone of the airport is compatible with the Directive but a "standard procedure" and not an "airport procedure" (with prolonged detention) should apply. In other words, the applicants should be transferred to the reception centre in Vyšní Lhoty and not to the detention centre. Since this is a recent phenomenon, it will be necessary to focus on its application and development in future. As of 30 April 2007, branch of the airport reception centre in Velké Přílepy was closed and its future (i.e. its possible reopening) depends upon the success of the Government Bill in the Parliament.

The new specific section on the airport procedure (§ 73) was adopted in the 2007 Amendment. This new airport procedure legalizes the transfer policy mentioned above. This procedure is very complex but in a nutshell it allows the Ministry of the Interior to confine the applicant for international protection in the airport transit centre or in the branch of the airport reception centre in the detention centre in Velké Přílepy up to 180[314] days[315] (Art. 73 § 9) and thus effectively creates from these centres detention facilities.

[314] Under certain circumstances it can go even beyond 180 days (see 73 § 9 last sentence).
[315] There are certain exceptions for handicapped applicants, unaccompanied minors, or parents with handicapped or unaccompanied minors; see Art. 73 § 7.

On the other hand, new airport procedure cannot be applied to vulnerable persons and the confinement in the airport transit centre can be challenged before the courts.

The airport procedure under the proposed wording of Art. 73 is further problematic for the following two reasons: (1) in contrast to other applications, a cassational complaint does not have suspensive effect (Art. 73 § 8); and (2) applicants are deprived of pocket money (Art. 87a § 3) – the latter being a clear violation of the Directive.

Each of the countries neighbouring the Czech Republic has been declared a "safe third country" by the Czech authorities. Therefore, if an alien is intercepted at the border attempting to irregularly cross the border into the Czech Republic she is returned to the state from which she attempted to enter the Czech Republic (Slovakia or Poland in most cases). In case she has already crossed the border (illegally), she is returned within 24 hours.

As the Czech Republic is not as yet a member of the Schengen Agreement, any person entering the country is subject to border controls. If an individual does not have a valid identity card, passport and visa (for countries requiring one), she is not allowed to enter the country. If a person "voluntarily" addresses an officer at the border expressing her intention to apply for international protection, she is forwarded to one of the reception centres after the Aliens' and Border Police have been informed and the procedure is opened. This holds true for refugees entering from a "safe third country" as well.[316] On successive application, see Q.16. However, in most cases, the Police intercept potential applicants for international protection. As a result, they are either returned to the country from which they entered the Czech Republic or they are brought to a detention facility. Only on rare occasions do they stay longer than 24 hours at the border police station.

An alien travelling illegally from the Czech Republic to Germany or Austria will, pursuant to the effective readmission agreements, most probably be returned by the authorities of these countries automatically and without an examination of the individual case. Upon return to the Czech Republic the individual is detained and may apply for international protection within seven days (see Q.14). Aliens who are already illegally on the Czech territory (and are intercepted by the Police) and express their intention to apply for international protection are generally detained and may submit the application from the detention facility.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

[316] Furthermore, the concept of the "safe third country" is becoming obsolete since the Czech Republic has borders only with the EU Member States.

There are no cases that are not mentioned in the Directive. In the case of the emergency situation, reception conditions in the centres are governed by the quality standards implemented by the RFA, which envisage such a situation (see Q.39 B).

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[1] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

Asylum seekers are not held in detention for the sole reason that they are an applicant for asylum. However, applicants for international protection are obliged to tolerate detention under the conditions laid down in the Aliens Act (Art. 85a § 3 of the Asylum Act).

The conditions for detention and the status of aliens in detention are set forth in the Aliens Act. Pursuant to Art. 124 § 1 of the Aliens Act "the Police is entitled to detain an alien [older than 15 years of age] who was delivered a notice of commencement of proceedings concerning administrative removal if there is a risk that the alien could endanger the state's security, seriously interfere with public order or frustrate or exacerbate the execution of a decision on administrative removal". Asylum seekers are thus detained only if they entered or stayed illegally in the Czech Republic and then applied for asylum at a detention centre (i.e. aliens who were detained before they lodged their application). Asylum seekers who lodged their application elsewhere (i.e. except for detention centres) can not be detained for any reason (except for criminal act).

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

The Czech Republic decided not to implement this measure.

[1] Please specify if article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed).

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

No, there are no such alternatives to detention available in the Czech Republic.

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

The only authority competent to order the detention of an alien is the Police of the Czech Republic.

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

Asylum seekers who have reached the age of majority can be detained for a maximum period of 180 days (Art. 125 § 1 of the Aliens Act), then they are transferred to an accommodation centre. Minors under 18 can be detained for a maximum period of 90 days (Art. 125 § 2 of the Aliens Act). There is no limit in terms of the stage of asylum procedure until which an asylum seeker can be detained as long as the detention does not exceed 180 days for adults and 90 days for minors under 18. If an unaccompanied minor is detained, the Police will appoint him a "residential guardian" (Art. 125 § 3 of the Aliens Act). The residential guardian is appointed by a decision of local police department in accordance with the Administrative Code. Each minor must be informed by the Police of such guardian and its role without delay (ibid.). On guardianship, see also Q.31G.

Throughout the whole duration of detention, the Police are obliged to review if the reasons for an asylum-seeker's stay in a detention facility continue to exist. If the reasons expire, the person must be released without any unnecessary delay. Moreover, pursuant to Art. 124 § 4 of the Aliens Act the asylum seeker has a right to ask at any time a court for judicial review of the legality of her detention (Art. 200o of the Code of Civil Justice) as well as reasons justifying continuation of her detention (Art. 65 and following of the Code of Administrative Justice). As to the "speedy judicial review", see also Q.33H below.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

There are two types of "closed centres" in broader sense. Firstly, if an asylum seeker applies for asylum in a detention centre, she is obliged to stay together with other illegal aliens. There are four detention centres for aliens ("Zařízení pro zajištění cizinců") – Velké Přílepy, Frýdek-Místek, Poštorná a Bělá-Jezová (which temporarily serves at the same time as an accommodation centre; see Q.36).

Secondly, the other form of "closed centres" is the reception centres since an asylum seeker is not allowed to leave these centres before the admission procedure is completed. Asylum seekers are not allowed to leave the reception centre in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport even after the completion of these procedures. However, the DAMP has to release the asylum seeker if it does not issue the decision within 5 days after the application was submitted or the regional court does not decide within 45 days. Another exception applies for Dublin cases. In general, Dublin applicants are not transferred to the accommodation centres, and they are not allowed to leave the reception centre, even after the completion of these procedures.

Except for reception centre in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport there are no special "closed centres" at the border or on the territory. Since January 1, 2006, as result of amendment to the Aliens Act[317] responsibility for operation of detention centres was transferred from the Aliens' and Border Police to the RFA – the authority which is also in charge of reception conditions.

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

Yes, they do have regular access to the detention centres on the same conditions as to the reception and accommodation centres.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

It is not necessary to implement Art. 18 of the Procedures Directive in the Czech Republic since each detainee has a right to make an appeal to the court at any stage of her detention requesting the review of legality of her detention and her release (Art. 200o of the Code of Civil Justice; and Art. 65 and following of the Code of Administrative Justice). The courts are obliged to deal with these cases with a priority and thus the asylum seekers have access to speedy judicial review.

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

NO, upon explicit request to answer this question, the Ministry of the Interior replied that the Directive is NOT considered to be in principle applicable to the detention centres. The Ministry of the Interior based its conclusion on Art. 85a § 2 of the Asylum Act that says that the status of the aliens in the detention centre is not changed by filling application for international protection, i.e. their status is regulated by the Aliens Act. This provision of the Asylum Act is not new but until now, it has been generally assumed that the Directive was applicable to the detention centres since from the very fact that the status of applicants for international protection is regulated by the Aliens Act, it does not necessarily follow that the Directive is not applicable. Furthermore, the material reception conditions for applicants for international protection in the detention centres are roughly on the same level as in the reception centres. It is difficult to asses whether the Czech Republic has changed its position on the applicability of the Directive to the detention centres or merely follows its previous position, since the DAMP avoided answering the relevant question[318] in the Practical Questionnaire for 2006 Report.[319]

On the other hand, the Directive is still applicable to the other form of the "closed centres" - reception centres - and more specifically, also to the special reception centre at the Prague Airport (and also to the new special airport procedure envisaged in the 2007 Amendment).

However, most of the provisions of the Directive are in principle ensured also with regards to the detention centres. The Police are obliged to inform the alien immediately after detention in a language in which she is able to communicate about the availability of judicial review of her detention (Art. 126 letter b) of the Aliens Act). Judicial review is governed by Art. 200o of the Code of Civil Procedure,[320] and Art. 65 and following of the Code of Administrative Justice (see Q.33.E).

As to the access to legal advice, asylum-seekers in detention have the right to contact and communicate without any restriction with organisations and/or private persons providing legal assistance. In practice, all four detention centres established in the CR are regularly visited by the NGO workers who specialize in provision of free-of-charge legal, social and psychological assistance to asylum seekers.

[318] Q.14.E of the 2006 Practical Questionnaire

[319] But it must be acknowledged that there was not explicit question "Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained?" in the 2006 Practical Questionnaire.

[320] Act No. 99/1963 Coll., Code of Civil Procedure, as amended.

In terms of the provision of health care, asylum seekers have access to a free health care in the extent of treatment covered from public health insurance, i.e. under the same conditions as to Czech citizens. Each detainee, including an asylum seeker is required to undergo admission-related, regular and final medical examinations and also vaccination and other preventive measures, if it is deemed necessary.

Furthermore, UNHCR prepared a special leaflet for asylum seekers in the detention centres, which contains information on the possibility to apply for asylum, on the asylum and expulsion proceedings and on access to NGOs assisting asylum seekers. These leaflets are also available in several languages, including Chinese, Arabic, Persian, Russian, French and English.

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

Apart from restrictions on the freedom of movement, the reception conditions are comparable and are in line with the Directive. There are only few divergences: detainees do not have access to some benefits, including a pocket money and financial contribution, there is a limited availability of free-time activities and different courses, and in well-founded cases (aggressive behaviour, violation of the internal rules of the centre) an alien can be placed in the strict regime of detention. Foreigners in detention are also expected to contribute to the costs of reception conditions (food and accommodation) when they have sufficient personal resources as specified in the Decree of the Ministry of the Interior No. 447/2005 Coll.

According to the Ministry of the Interior, measures have also been adopted to prevent self-mutilation and the assault of other detainees. More recently, the NGOs reported a significant increase of free-time activities in the detention centres.

In conclusion, standard of living in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention is met.

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

Asylum seekers with special needs who apply for asylum in a detention centres are usually promptly released to an accommodation centre and are given appropriate care as mentioned above in Q.31 E-G.

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Minor asylum seekers who apply for asylum in a detention centres are accommodated (they are not formally detained since they are not given the expulsion order) together with their parents or relatives. There is a specialised detention centre for families. An unaccompanied illegal alien over the age of 15 is detained in the specialized detention centre (Bělá-Jezová), where she can apply for asylum. After filling application for asylum (now for international protection) she may be released and placed in the specialized residence centre for minors mentioned in Q.31 H.

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

Yes, access to primary education for minors in detention centres is respected. However, the education of children placed in the detention centres improved only recently, since they have been allowed access to primary education only from January 1, 2006, as result of amendment to the Aliens Act[321] and transfer of responsibility for operation of detention centres from Aliens' and Border Police to the RFA.

Pursuant to Art. 142 § 1 of the Aliens Act, the authority responsible for the detention centre must ensure access to compulsory (i.e. primary) education to minors. This education may be provided either in the detention centre or outside the detention centre (if it is not available there); in the latter case the authority responsible for the detention centre must allow minors to temporarily leave the detention centre and secure the transport to the regular primary schools (Art. 142 § 2 of the Aliens Act). All the costs of the education are covered by the State or the authority responsible for the detention centre (Art. 142 § 3 of the Aliens Act).

In practice, minors are currently placed only in one detention centre (Bělá-Jezová; see Q.36) and the education is provided in regular primary schools. According to the NGOs, there was another problem reported, since the access to secondary education in the detention centres proved to be difficult in practice. There has not been any improvement as to the access to secondary education in the detention centres since 2006.

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

[321] Act No. 428/2005 Coll., Amendment to the Aliens Act and several other Acts.

As of July 31, 2006, there were 165 asylum seekers in the detention centres which amounts to approximately 6% of all asylum seekers (2, 662) in the first and second instance. If asylum seekers who have lodged a cassational complaint (and thus have a toleration visa) are included (plus 1746), asylum seekers in detention amount to 4% of the total number of asylum seekers. Furthermore, there are 70 (3%) asylum seekers in prison.

As of July 31, 2006, there are also 215 asylum seekers in the reception centres.[322]

As of December 31, 2006, there were 124 asylum seekers in the detention centres. As of May 25, 2007, number of asylum seekers in the detention centres further decreased to 58.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

The Czech Republic has a centralised system for providing reception conditions. The RFA, which is a special agency of the Ministry of the Interior, is responsible for the management of all asylum facilities in the country.

There are two types of reception facilities: (1) reception centres; and (2) accommodation centres. The reception centres are always operated by the RFA. However, in certain accommodation centres, some services are provided by municipalities or private owners on a contract basis. The detention centres are run jointly by the RFA and the Aliens' and Border Police. More precisely, as of 1 January 2006, the Police does no longer manage detention centres for foreigners. At present, all detention centres are managed by the RFA, while Foreign Police is in charge particularly of security guard and escort activities. The Ministry of Education, Youth and Sports runs two centres for unaccompanied minors. Furthermore, the NGOs run three centres for rejected asylum seekers.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)

All the accommodation centres are public. As mentioned above, in certain accommodation centres there are some services provided by municipalities or private owners. Although the debate on this issue has already started, there are no accommodation centres managed by NGOs in the Czech Republic.

[322] All data rely upon figures at http://www.mvcr.cz/statistiky/2006/uprch07/pobyt_07.html.

Applicants can also opt for private housing, but they are not offered any private housing by the Ministry of the Interior.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?

The RFA is responsible for the management of all asylum facilities in the country; therefore, there are no private centres. There are 12 asylum facilities for applicants for international protection. Five centres are owned by the state and operated by the RFA (Zastávka u Brna, Bělá – Jezová, Havířov, Kostelec nad Orlicí, Vyšní Lhoty), one is operated by the RFA at the premises of the Czech Airports Authority (Praha – Ruzyně) one is temporarily suspended (Červený Újezd) and five are run by other legal entities, mostly municipalities, on a contract basis with the RFA and for a fee (Seč, Stráž pod Ralskem, Bruntál, Zbýšov and Kašava).

There are 2 reception centres (Vyšní Lhoty, with a capacity of 422 beds, and Praha – Ruzyně, with 60 beds, which has been established for aliens who intend to apply for international protection in the transit area of the Prague international airport) and 10 accommodation centres (Zastávka u Brna, Bělá – Jezová, Červený Újezd, Havířov, Kostelec nad Orlicí, Seč, Stráž pod Ralskem, Bruntál, Zbýšov and Kašava). Since 2005, accommodation centre in Červený Újezd has been temporarily suspended. Furthermore, Ministry of the Interior has recently announced that due to the further decline of number of asylum seekers in the Czech Republic it is going to close down three more accommodation centres (i.e. Kašava, Seč and Bruntál) in September 2006.

Since the 2006 Report, two more accommodation centres (Bruntál and Kašava) have been temporarily suspended and further centres will follow soon due to the continuing decrease of the asylum seekers.

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

There is no such legislation in force, but the RFA has an internal plan for dispersing the applicants over the territory of the Czech Republic. According to 2005 Annual Report of the RFA (pp. 8-9) both individual characteristics of asylum seekers (such as family ties, health condition and membership of a vulnerable group) and issues of public interest (ensuring social and ethnic balance in the centres and taking into account free capacity of each centre) are taken into account. As mentioned above, the accommodation centres are spread across the territory of the Czech Republic. Since they are located mostly in rural areas, there is no problem of concentration in some areas like big cities.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?

There is no such centralised body, but major NGOs involved with refugee issues are joined in the Consortium of NGOs Assisting Refugees. This body does not play a consultative role for the State authorities but can be considered as playing a coordination role for the NGOs.

However, all the actors meet together from time to time on an informal basis to consult reception conditions. Furthermore, all the actors are also members of the Committee for the Rights of the Aliens, which operates within the framework of the Government Council for Human Rights. This body has a consultative role, but does not concentrate only on reception conditions of applicants for international protection since its focus is much broader (rights of all groups of aliens in the Czech Republic).

Q.39. Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

In the first instance, the RFA is in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions and in the second instance, both the RFA and DAMP are controlled and monitored by Ministry of Interior.

Furthermore, since January 1, 2006, the Ombudsman is entitled to conduct systematic visits to all facilities where the freedom of persons is or may be restricted, which includes inter alia all the asylum facilities (both accommodation and reception centres, including the reception in the transit zone of the Prague International Airport).

Q.39. B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?

Yes, the Minister of the Interior approved such quality standards for all the asylum facilities (i.e. both the reception and accommodation centres) in August 2005. These standards (currently being implemented by the RFA) no doubt represent good practice.

They are comprehensive (16 pages long) and cover all the important aspects of life in the centres such as the locality and capacity of the centre, the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, access to cultural, sports and other free time activities, the number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, self-catering facilities, showers and washing machines per number of persons, the existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, and computers, the accessibility of telephones, the existence of recreational rooms for children etc. (see also Q.14 D).

Q.39. C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?

The system of guidance, control and monitoring of the quality of reception conditions is facilitated by the fact that the provision of reception conditions is centralized and run by one body. At the first stage, the RFA conducts random visits and at the second stage, both the RFA and DAMP are controlled and monitored by Ministry of Interior. The RFA also has a system of "general" and "financial" internal controls, which are conducted twice per year.

Furthermore, the Ombudsman is entitled to control and monitor the reception conditions (see above Q.39 A).

Q.39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?

The annual reports on the activities of RFA and DAMP are available on the Internet. The reports of random visits conducted by the RFA are not made public. According to Act No. 349/1999 Coll. on the Public Defender of Rights, the Ombudsman informs the Chamber of Deputies of the Czech Republic, on a regular quarterly basis, on the activities of his Office. These reports are available to the public. The Ombudsman also publishes specific topic reports and an annual report of his activities.

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

There were 4,021 asylum seekers in the Czech Republic in 2005 (68% applications lodged in reception centre Vyšní Lhoty, 13% lodged in reception centre at the Prague International Airport, 1% in accommodation centres, and 18% in other facilities such as detention centres, hospitals or prisons) and 1,802 asylum seekers in 2006 (as of 31 July 2006). As of 31 July 2006, there are 2, 662 asylum seekers in the first and second instance and 1,746 asylum seekers who lodged a cassational complaint. There are 566 (21%) asylum seekers in private accommodation, 215 (8%) in reception centres, 70 (3%) asylum seekers in prison, 165 (6%) in detention, 32 (1%) in hospitals and 1,614 in accommodation centres (61%).

The number of asylum seekers in the Czech Republic further decreased in 2006 since there were only 3,016 applicants for international protection.

Q.40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?

Total budget of the RFA for running asylum centres in 2005 was 334,554,000 CZK (€11,665,195).[323] This 9.5 % less than in 2004 (370,085,000 CZK)[324] but expenses per day (of stay in asylum centre) increased by 28 %, i.e. from 444 CZK (€15,5) to 499 CZK (€17.4).

Total budget of the RFA in 2005 consists of: reception conditions stricto sensu (57%; 189,933,623 CZK, €6,622,586); wages (36%; 120,414,000 CZK, €4,198,583); and investment expenses (7%; 24,206,422 CZK, €844,027). Furthermore, the RFA provided financial contribution to the municipalities that consisted of 3,473,000 CZK (€121,096) for expenses related to the running and management of the asylum facilities and 110,000 CZK (€3,836) for expenses related to the education of minor asylum seekers.

Total estimated budget of the RFA in 2006 is 288,057,000 CZK (€) and consists of: reception conditions stricto sensu (46%; 131,083,000 CZK, €4,570,589); wages (47%; 136,595,000 CZK, €4,762,780); and investment expenses (7%; 20,379,000 CZK, €710,573).

The 2006 Annual Report of the RFA has not been released yet and thus more up-to-date data is not available.

Q.40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?

According to the Small Scale Study on Reception Conditions of the European Migration Network (see Q.8), the amount paid for an applicant per residential day is approximately 388 CZK (excepting investments and employee wages), i.e. 11.640 CZK per month (€ 412). According to the information on website of the RFA, it amounts approximately to 350 CZK per day, i.e. 10.050 CZK per month (€ 372). And finally, if we calculate the compulsory financial contribution of the applicants who have sufficient resources, it amounts to 258 CZK per day, i.e. 7.740 CZK per month (€ 274).

[324] This is due to the further decrease of asylum claims in the Czech Republic in 2005.

Q.40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

The Czech Republic is not a federal state, but the State contributes to municipalities to cover the costs expended by them in association with the existence of asylum facility in their territory (see also Q.2).

Q.40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?

Yes, this provision is respected.

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

As of December 31, 2006, the RFA had 436 employees.

Q.41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?

The RFA organises both entry and continual training.[325] It also conducts training sessions within the framework of implementing the quality standards. The specific needs of applicants including unaccompanied minors and women are taken into account during such training sessions (see division on protected zones etc.; Q.30 B).

In March 2006, the Czech Parliament adopted Act. No. 108/2006 Coll.,[326] on Social Services, that stipulates detailed rules on social workers and their qualification (see in particular Arts. 109-110 and 116-117 of this Act), including those who work in asylum and/or detention facilities (see Art. 1 § 2 of this Act), and specifies conditions of their further education and training (see in particular Art. 111 of this Act).

[325] See 2005 Annual Report of the RFA, pp. 6-7.
[326] It was published in issue No. 37/2006 of the Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic (pp. 1257-1289) on March 31, 2006 and entered into force on January 1, 2007.

Q.41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?

Yes, these rules are laid down by the RFA. Act. No. 108/2006 Coll., on Social Services (see Q.41 B) includes rules about the deontology (see in particular Art. 2 § 2 of this Act) and expressly emphasises confidentiality of social workers (see Art. 100 of this Act).

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

No, there are not big problems with the translation of the directive in the Czech language. Translation of subsequent directives, and particularly Directive 2004/83/EC and Directive 2005/85/EC, is much worse.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

Yes, there were precise rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers in the Asylum Act prior to the transposition of the Directive (see above).

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

There was no significant improvement as to their clarity, coherence or coverage. The reception conditions met a high standard even prior to the adoption of Directive 2003/9/EC, and all reception conditions were set forth in one basic act, i.e. the Asylum Act. Therefore the directive was transposed by the insertion of several provisions and by refining existing definitions.

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

To some extent, the transposition of the Directive brought important changes. In particular, it strengthened and improved the position of unaccompanied minors and introduced the obligation to trace family members.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

Transposition of the Directive was not subject to extensive debate since most of the contested issues, such as the restriction of access to the labour market, detention and/or treatment of unaccompanied minors had been already on the table. Indeed, the restriction of access to the Supreme Administrative Court for asylum seekers (Act. No. 350/2005 Coll.; see Q.2) attracted much more attention from the UNHCR, media, NGOs, academics, and judges.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

Most of the new provisions were already observed in practice. On the other hand, the Czech Republic implemented Art. 7(1) of the Directive that permits issuing visas with restricted territorial validity, which is a new phenomenon in the Czech Republic (notwithstanding the fact that they have not been issued so far).

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?

Strengths:

- The treatment of "unaccompanied minors"
- The division of the area of asylum facilities into standard and protected zones
- The cooperation between the MOI, Aliens' and Border Police and NGOs in detention centres.

- Services provided to asylum seekers are generally of professional quality (Quality Standards approved by the Minister of the Interior and implemented by the RFA).
- The system of self-catering has been implemented in more asylum facilities

Weaknesses:

- The lack of beds and certain aspects of the treatment of asylum seekers in the Prague International Airport (see Q.32 C for details).
- The treatment of victims of torture is not as strong as in case of "unaccompanied minors".
- Judicial review of detention and expulsion orders is rather slow and thus often (albeit not always) ineffective.
- Unfortunately, when transposing the Procedures Directive the Czech legislator somehow forgot the obligations flowing from the Reception Conditions Directive. As a result, the 2007 Amendment led to worsening the reception standards and certain provisions are even in violation of the Directive (e.g. no pocket money for the applicants in the airport reception centre).
- The average period of detention is close to the upper limit and is not always "as short as possible"[327] (see Q.33 E).
- Private accommodation should be supported more, as asylum seekers accommodated in centres are often isolated and consequently lose the ability to look after themselves.
- There should be Czech language classes provided to asylum seekers to enable them to integrate into the Czech Republic. The Czech language courses have been so far provided mainly by NGOs.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States

- The treatment of unaccompanied minors.
- The Quality Standards approved by the Minister of the Interior in August 2005 and implemented by the RFA.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answer.

- Financial contribution to the municipalities.

[327] However, this weakness is to a certain extent caused also by a slow issuing of the new travel documents by the foreign embassies.

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

As the Directive on minimum standards for the reception of asylum seekers is subject to the Danish reservation under the 1997 Protocol, it is not binding upon or applicable in Denmark and has therefore not, as such, been transposed into national legislation.

The parliament has adopted very detailed norms on the reception of asylum seekers. Most of the implementation has been delegated to the Immigration Service which is a directorate within the Ministry of Refugee, Immigration and Integration.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

Not applicable as the Directive on minimum standards for the reception of asylum seekers is subject to the Danish reservation under the 1997 Protocol. The directive is therefore not binding upon or applicable in Denmark and has not, as such, been transposed into national legislation.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

N/A as directive is not binding for Denmark

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

N/A as Directive is not binding for Denmark.

According to the government's assessment, however, the Directive would require amendment of domestic legislation, in case Denmark were to participate in this part of the EU harmonisation. Such amendments would, according to the government, concern access to the labour market and educational rights for adolescents. It seems, however, that, in addition to the abovementioned areas of non-compliance, which were acknowledged by the government, further existing Danish norms on this issue does also not fully comply with the minimum standards of the Reception Directive. Of particular concern are current norms relating to special needs (Article 17), access to rehabilitation services for minors who are victims of abuse, etc. (Article 18(2)), treatment of torture victims (Article 20) and appeals (Article 21)

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

Not applicable as Denmark is not party to the Directive

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

N/A

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

N/A

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

The parliament has adopted very detailed norms on the reception of asylum seekers. The responsibility for reception of the majority of asylum seekers has been delegated to the Immigration Service which is a directorate within the Ministry of Refugee, Immigration and Integration.

Responsibility for reception conditions of detained asylum seekers lies with the Department of Prisons and Probation, which is a directorate within the Ministry of Justice.

Responsibility for asylum seekers confined shortly at the border or exceptionally accommodated by the police at a hostel close to the border for a short period of time awaiting a decision on entry or refusal lies with the National Commissioner (under the Ministry of Justice).

The Immigration Service has a contract with Danish Red Cross (NGO), which operates and administers most of the reception conditions of asylum seekers, i.e. housing, basic health care and education in six of the eight asylum centres for asylum seekers in Denmark. Two asylum centres are operated by municipalities in accordance with similar contracts with the Immigration Service.

Under section 42a(1) of the Aliens Act, an alien who is staying in Denmark and submits an application for asylum will normally have the expenses of his stay and necessary healthcare services defrayed by the Danish Immigration Service until the he or she is issued with a residence permit or departs or is returned. There are a few mandatory exceptions to this principle, e.g. in the case of marriage to a person with residence permit in Denmark. In this case the spouse is responsible for the support of the asylum seeker (cf. section 42a(3) of the Aliens Act). Furthermore, the Immigration Service may decide that an asylum seeker, who has sufficient means of his own, will not have his or his family's expenses of the stay and necessary healthcare services defrayed (cf. section 42a(4) of the Aliens Act).

As a rule, asylum seekers must stay at an asylum centre while applying for asylum. During the waiting time they are provided with teaching, activities and health care as well as other material reception conditions.

In certain cases, however, permission to stay outside of the asylum centre can be granted. Such requests will be especially relevant for asylum seekers who have relations living in Denmark or friends with whom they would like to stay during the application process.

There are two types of private accommodations: funded and unfunded.

Funded means that the asylum seeker can still receive cash allowances while staying in Denmark outside of an asylum centre. The asylum seeker also receives payment for the cost of transport to and from meetings with immigration authorities as well as for necessary health treatment.

Unfunded means that the asylum seeker only receives payment for necessary health treatment and for the cost of transportation to and from meetings with immigration authorities.

Permission for funded private accommodations can be given if:

- the asylum seeker's request for asylum is being processed by the immigration authorities, and
- the asylum seeker has a compelling health or psycho-social condition
  Examples of compelling health conditions include:
  asylum seekers who have diabetes or who are on dialysis
    - asylum seekers with serious heart problems
    - asylum seekers who suffer from cancer

  Examples of psycho-social conditions include:
    - older asylum seekers who would have problems taking care of themselves at an asylum centre
    - unaccompanied asylum-seeking children who would like to stay with a relative that lives in Denmark whom the relevant municipality has authorised guardianship or given temporary guardianship in accordance with the Danish service law

Permission for unfunded private accommodations is generally given to asylum seekers whose application is being processed by the immigration authorities.

Q.11.

Q11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

For the purpose of differentiation of reception conditions, the various stages of the asylum procedure are divided into the following three levels (Phase 1, phase 2 and phase 3):

Phase 1:
Admissibility procedures, determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin regulation:
It is the responsibility of the National Commissioner of Police to establish the nationality and identity of the asylum seeker. The police will fingerprint and photograph the asylum seeker, as well as record an official statement from the applicant, including a statement on the route he or she travelled to Denmark. The Immigration Service will use the information to determine if the application for asylum is to be rejected and the asylum seeker referred to have his application for asylum processed in another EU country or in a so-called safe third country.

Eligibility procedures – Immigration Service level:
If the Danish Immigration Service determines that an asylum application is to be examined in Denmark, the Immigration Service itself will decide hereafter whether or not the applicant will be granted asylum (first instance). The asylum seeker must fill out an official application form for asylum, in which he or she can explain in more specific terms why he or she is seeking asylum in Denmark. After that, the Danish Immigration Service will hold an interview with the applicant, assisted by an interpreter. Following the interview, the Danish Immigration Service will deliver a decision

Most cases are decided according to so-called normal procedure. This means that, if the asylum applicant is rejected, the case is referred to the Refugee Board (second instance), which will deliver a final decision in the case.
A minority of cases are considered manifestly unfounded. This occurs when the Immigration Service assesses that the applicant clearly cannot be granted asylum in Denmark. These cases are sent to the Danish Refugee Council (NGO), which will deliver a pronouncement on the case. If, upon an additional and separate interview with the applicant, the Danish Refugee Council agrees with the Immigration Service that the application is manifestly unfounded, the application will be rejected without subsequent right of appeal. If, however, the Danish Refugee Council disagrees, the Immigration Service will generally still reject the application, but the applicant maintain a right of appeal and the case be referred to the Refugee Board for a final decision.
In certain cases, asylum applications are addressed according to an expedited version of the manifestly unfounded procedure. This is when the asylum seeker comes from a country where, according to the most up-to-date information available to the Danish Immigration Service, it is unlikely that the applicant would risk persecution on return. In these cases, the asylum seeker does not fill out an official application form for asylum, and is quickly referred for an interview with the Danish Immigration Service. The Danish Refugee Council will hold an separate interview with the applicant and then deliver a pronouncement on the case: if this is in accordance with the findings of the Immigration Service, the application will be rejected as soon as possible. These cases are decided within a few days. If the Danish Refugee Council disagrees with the Immigration Service, the Immigration Service will generally still reject the application, but the applicant maintain a right of appeal and the case be referred to the Refugee Board for a final decision.

Eligibility procedures – Refugee Board (appeal) level:
If the Danish Immigration Service refuses to grant asylum to an asylum seeker in the first instance and the applicant granted the right of appeal (i.e. not finally rejected under the manifestly unfounded procedure) the files of the case are automatically submitted to the Refugee Board. In cases which throughout the examination in the first instance have been dealt with under the so-called normal procedure, the Board will invite the applicant for an interview and subsequently reach a final decision in the case. If the case have been sought dealt with under the manifestly unfounded procedure, the Chairman of the Board will normally review the case on basis of the written matters alone. The appeal has suspensive effect on the order to leave the country, which will normally be delivered together with the decision to reject the application in the first instance.

Post-final rejection
If an asylum applicant receives a final rejection, he or she must leave Denmark immediately. A final rejection means that an applicant does not have any more avenues available to appeal the decision. Rejections delivered by the Refugee Board or by the Immigration Service in so-called 'manifestly unfounded' cases are regarded as final. If a rejected asylum seeker will not leave Denmark voluntarily, it is the responsibility of the police to ensure the applicant's departure.

SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS:

Reception conditions consist of a combination of: - Board and lodging; - cash allowances and allowances in kind.

Board and lodging
Asylum seekers are normally housed in asylum centres. In most centres the asylum seekers receive cash allowances to cover expenses to food, etc. In one of the reception and departure centres (Sandholm) food is provided in kind (cafeteria) instead of cash allowances.

Cash allowances:
In accordance with section 42b, cash allowances include four different allowances:
Basic allowance
The basic allowance covers expenses for food, personal hygiene items, etc. This is paid to all asylum seekers over the age of 18 who do not receive free food at their asylum centre.
Supplementary allowance
All asylum seekers over the age of 18 can receive extra money if they live up to the contract they enter into with asylum centres governing completing necessary tasks, participation job activation, and participation in courses.
Caregiver supplement and reduced caregiver supplement
All asylum seekers with children receive money to support their children. Only one supplement per child is given. The caregiver supplement is paid for a maximum of two children. If a family has more children, they can receive a reduced amount for the third and fourth children (reduced caregiver supplement). It is not possible to receive payments for more than four children.

Allowances in kind:
In accordance with the Immigration Service Instructions of 7 January 2004 on Provision of benefits in kind, the operator will normally provide the asylum seeker with a parcel containing clothes and a parcel containing sanitary items on arrival to the reception centre.

Phase 1 asylum seekers
Asylum seekers in phase 1 will be accommodated at a reception centre.

Under section 42f(1) all asylum seekers over the age of 18 "who is lodged in a reception centre, cf. section 42a(5), shall, unless particular reasons make it inappropriate, attend tuition intended to give the alien a very introductory knowledge of the Danish language and the Danish culture and society (asylum-seeker course)"

Under section 42d(1) of the Aliens Act, an asylum seeker lodged in one of the asylum centres "has a duty to assist in carrying out the tasks necessary to the running of the accommodation centre."

After 3 months from the date of the applicant's submission of an application for asylum, the asylum seeker shall, unless particular reasons make it inappropriate, attend tuition in the English language or other tuition on the same terms as an asylum seeker in phase 2, cf. section 42f(2).

Within one week of the asylum seeker's submission of his or her application for asylum, a contract is to be concluded between the asylum seeker and the accommodation operator on the basis of the individual alien's skills and qualifications (cf. section 42c). The contract may be revised on a continuous basis. The contract determines the scope and contents of: - (i) the tasks necessary to the running of the accommodation centre which the alien has a duty to assist in carrying out, cf. section 42d(1); (ii) the asylum-seeker course which the alien shall attend, cf. section 42f(1); (iii) tuition that the alien shall attend, cf. section 42f(2) to (4), as agreed or determined, cf. subsection (2); and (iv) activation in which the alien shall participate, cf. section 42e(1) to (3), as agreed or determined, cf. subsection (2). The contract must state what measures may be applied to the alien under the law if the alien does not comply with his contract.

Phase 2 asylum seekers
With the exception of asylum seekers whose cases are being handled in the expedited version of the manifestly unfounded procedure, asylum seekers in phase 2 will normally move to an accommodation centre where they normally will be entitled to stay until their application for asylum has been finally determined.

The asylum seekers shall, unless particular reasons make it inappropriate, attend tuition in the English language or other tuition, cf. section 42f(2).

Furthermore, asylum seekers in this phase also have access to a certain level of vocational training, cf. section 48e(1) – (3).

Phase 2 asylum seekers have the same duties as phase 1 asylum seekers.

Asylum seekers in all phases will have expenses for food and necessary healthcare services covered. The allowances for food and other daily necessities vary however according to the phase. Asylum seekers in phase 2 will normally be granted higher supplementary and caregiver allowances than asylum seekers in phase 1.

Cash allowances for foreigners placed on the food allowance program or whose cases are being handled according to the expedited version of the manifestly unfounded procedure Asylum seekers placed on the food allowance program or whose cases are being handled according to the so-called apparently groundless expedited procedure cannot receive a supplementary allowance, only the basic allowances and a reduced caregiver allowance, if applicable. Applicants living at asylum centres where meals are served receive no cash allowances.

Children of school age (7 to 16) who are staying in Denmark and fall within section 42a(1) or (2), cf. subsection (3), shall participate in separately arranged tuition or in tuition measuring up to the general requirements under the separately arranged tuition, regardless of in which phase their application for asylum is being dealt with, cf. section 42g of the Aliens Act.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

Material conditions are normally provided in a combination of in kind provisions and cash allowances.

Housing
Most asylum seekers are housed in asylum centres at the expense of the authorities

Food and other daily necessities:
At the Sandholm reception and departure centre, food and other daily necessities will be provided in kind. This includes the provision once every two weeks of a parcel with sanitary items (worth appr. 15 Euro). Where the asylum application is not processed in the manifestly unfounded procedure, a caregiver supplement as well as a supplementary allowance will be provided. The latter will only be granted if the asylum seeker fulfils his or her contract with the asylum centre.

At all other asylum centres, asylum seekers are provided with cash allowances to cover costs of food etc.

Clothes and bed-sheets are provided in kind. The clothes packages have a value of around 1.360 DKR (180 Euro). If the application is handled in the procedure for manifestly unfounded cases the clothes will only be granted after 25 days unless the applicant does not have other clothes than what he or she is wearing.

Asylum seekers who give birth to a child after the entry into Denmark will receive a package with baby clothes worth around 2.720 DKR (360 Euro).

Under certain circumstances a package with children's clothes (worth approximately 639 DKR (85 Euro)) will be provided once every six months to asylum seekers with minor children.

Furthermore, a children's package worth 122 DKR (appr. 16 Euro) may also be given to minor asylum applicants who are accommodated with one or both parents.

In practice, the Danish Red Cross will furthermore give families with children 100 DKR (appr. 15 Euro) once every two weeks. This will allow the families to afford buying sweets or ice cream to the children.

Health
Health services are provided in kind. Asylum seekers have no direct access to the Danish health service. But an asylum seeker is entitled to free medical treatment by a doctor or in a hospital in case of urgency.

Shortly after arrival in Denmark all asylum seekers are invited to a meeting with a nurse. The meeting takes place at centre Sandholm – the reception centre for all asylum seekers in Denmark. During the meeting the nurse will ask questions about the person's physical and mental health, if he or she has been living in a refugee camp or is a victim of torture. The nurse also asks about social conditions: former jobs and education, if the person is married and has children. The nurse uses a list of questions and this list later becomes the medical journal of the asylum seeker. The journal follows the person as long as he or she stays at an asylum centre. If the nurse finds signs of a disease or if the person comes from a country with a high incidence of tuberculosis, he or she is offered a medical examination. The meeting with the nurse and an eventual medical examination is called medical screening and the purpose of this medical screening is to secure that asylum seekers who need assistance, receive the necessary help and treatment. Almost all asylum seekers accept this offer of a medical screening. For children this medical screening is obligatory. The meeting lasts approximately 30 minutes and is conducted with help from an interpreter.

All accommodation centres run health clinics with fixed opening hours. Asylum seekers who are ill can contact the nurse when the clinic is open. If an asylum seeker needs to see a doctor, the nurse will make an appointment and if needed the doctor can then refer the asylum seeker to specialists, psychologist/psychiatrist, hospital etc. If an asylum seeker suffers from acute dental problems, he is entitled to treatment. Dentist bills exceeding 3.000 DKK must be accepted by the Immigration Service. Asylum seekers are also informed about the Danish health care system, healthy lifestyle, tuberculosis, birth control, AIDS and reactions to torture and war.

If an asylum seeker needs medical treatment the nurse at the asylum centre will contact a doctor but if an asylum seeker suffers from a disease that need urgent treatment - and the clinic is not open - he or she can contact the emergency unit at the hospital just as a Danish citizen.

Transportation

Transportation is normally provided in kind, i.e. it is either organised and provided by the operator of the asylum centre where the asylum seeker is staying or tickets (and not money) are provided (cf Annex 2.0.9. to the Operator Contract).

Supplementary allowance

In addition to the food in kind or cash allowances for food, all asylum seekers over 17 have a possibility of "earning" a so-called "supplementary allowance." All asylum seekers over 18 must make (and all asylum seekers at 17 of age have normally an option to make) an agreement – a contract – with the asylum centre that is responsible for them. The contract states which courses asylum seekers are to attend and which tasks the individual asylum seeker is to be responsible for at his/her asylum centre. This gives access to the so-called supplementary allowance. If asylum seekers do not live up to their contracts with their asylum centre, the Immigration Service can decide to reduce their cash allowances.

Food allowance programme

On 1 July 2005, the Danish government has implemented new regulations for the payment of cash allowances to asylum seekers who do not live up to the obligations required by immigration laws. The new rules are part of the government's objective of motivating asylum seekers to live up to the obligations required of them by immigration laws.

If asylum seekers do not live up to their obligations, the Immigration Service can decide to place asylum seekers and their families, if applicable, on the allowance for subsistence program.

The program is primarily intended for cases where asylum seekers have received final rejections of their applications for Danish residence permits, have not left the country by the date ordered, and who are not willing to leave the country.

For asylum seekers living at asylum centres where meals are not provided being placed on the program means that supplementary allowances earned through such activities as activation will no longer be paid. The allowance for asylum seekers with children will also be reduced. This means that applicants will only receive allowances for food (basic allowance).

Cash allowances – specific amounts

In accordance with section 42b of the Aliens Act, cash allowances include four different allowances that may be granted to asylum seekers: Basic allowance, supplementary allowance, caregiver supplement and reduced caregiver supplement. The supplementary allowance will only be granted if the asylum seeker fulfils his or her contract with the asylum centre.

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

Reception conditions must be considered sufficient to ensure the health and the subsistence of the applicants. Legislation does however not specify this requirement, but stipulates in broader terms that "[a]n alien who is staying in Denmark and submits an application for a residence permit pursuant to section 7 will have the expenses of his stay and necessary healthcare services defrayed by the Danish Immigration Service until the alien is issued with a residence permit or the alien departs or is returned…", cf. section 42a(1).

It is however important to note that it has large social consequences and restrains the formation of the children and the access of the adults to maintain social skills if, as it is the case for most asylum seekers, for a longer period of time they do not have access to sufficient cash which would for example allow them to buy a bus ticket or a ticket for the swim bath. What is provided for in cash may not be considered to include any amount to be used as pocket money. If, for example, the asylum seeker chooses to use some of the money on, for example, buying a bus ticket enabling him/her to pay visit to friends, relatives or a place of worship, this will mean being forced to buy lower quality or less food for a period of time.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. Q 13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

Yes. Under Section 7 (2), second sentence of the Aliens Act an application for residence permit on basis of risk of death penalty or to be subjected to torture, ill-treatment, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (complementary protection) is also considered an application for a residence permit under Section 7 (1), i.e. residence permit and asylum as Geneva Convention Refugee. It is not possible merely to apply for complementary protection.

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

In accordance with the section 42a(1)The scope of application of reception conditions is equally extended to applicants for residence permit on the basis of refugee status under section 7(1) and to applicants for subsidiary protection under section 7(2) of the Aliens Act.

With regard to applicants for residence permit on basis of humanitarian status under section 9b of the Aliens Act (which is however not a protection status as such), the same conditions apply as for asylum seekers as long as the application for residence permit on basis of humanitarian status is lodged prior to or at the time of the first instance decision of the application for asylum or has been decided upon by the authorities at the time of the delivering of the final decision on asylum at the latest. Applications for residence on basis of humanitarian status may only be submitted by aliens registered in Denmark as asylum seekers. In other cases the applicant will in terms of reception conditions be treated as a rejected asylum seeker.

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

No

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Reception conditions are without any further requirements available from the moment an application for asylum has been lodged.

If the asylum seeker is not detained or temporarily under the responsibility of the police, the responsibility lies with the Immigration Service, cf. section 42a(1), first sentence.

If there is an immediate need therefore, the police may make arrangements for the accommodation and stay of and necessary healthcare services to asylum seekers whose application is still being processed in the admissibility or Dublin Regulation procedures. In those cases, the police defrays the expences, cf. section 43(1) of the Aliens Act.

The Prison and Probation Service, which is a directorate under the Ministry of Justice, has the responsibility for the reception conditions in the cases of detained asylum seekers, cf. section 776 of Administration of Justice Act and section 2 of the Regulation on remand prison.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

In accordance with section 53a(2) of the Aliens Act an appeal against refusal of asylum has suspensive effect.

Subsequent to section 42a(1), all asylum seekers staying in Denmark will have the expenses of his stay and necessary healthcare services defrayed by the Danish Immigration Service until the he or she is issued with a residence permit or, in case of rejection, departs or is returned from Denmark.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

No

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

In accordance with principles of general administrative law that the authorities have an obligation to inform about rights and duties in connection with the submission of applications, the Danish Immigration Service has issued a written guide on "An asylum Seekers Way". This guide is given to the asylum seekers when they, as is normally the case, are requested to fill in an official application form for asylum. In practice this takes place immediately after registration with the police regardless of whether the application is still being processed under the admissibility procedures/Dublin regulation or has been accepted for substantial examination of the claim.

However, the applicants whose applications are (initially) being processed in the "expedited version of the manifestly unfounded procedure" will not fill in an official application form for asylum and will therefore not be given nor informed about the guide at the authorities initiative.

The guide provides detailed information about the rights and obligations relating to reception conditions, including specific information on the established benefits as well as information about the asylum procedure.

Under the instructions contained in Annex 2.1.1 relating to reception at the reception/departure centres of the contract between the Danish Immigration Service and the operator of reception conditions (the so-called "Operator Contract"), "the operator shall inform newly arrived asylum seekers about the reception system, including a basic introduction to the health system, as well as about the accommodation system in general. Likewise, written information about the further stay shall be provided." Just as this obligation to inform is not formulated very specifically on the kind of information that is to be provided, there is also no precise deadline attached to it. The Danish Red Cross has published relatively detailed information, which is handed over to the asylum seeker as soon as she or he arrives at the reception centre and in practice always within 15 days of arrival to the centre (which will normally take place the same day as or the day after the application has been lodged). Simultaneously, the asylum seeker is informed orally. The written material does, however, not contain very specific information about the established benefits.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or/and??, when appropriate, orally?

The guide "An asylum Seekers Way" which is provided by the Immigration police is in writing.

The information provided by the Danish Red Cross is in writing and will be followed-up by oral information both on an individual basis at the centre shortly thereafter and included in a three days "asylum-seeker course", which will be held later.

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

The guide "An Asylum Seekers Way" is available in Arabic, Azerbaijani, Albanian, Armenian, Bahdini, Bengali, Dari, English, Farsi, French, Georgian, Hindi, Kazakh, Kinyarwanda, Macedonian, Mandarin, Mongolian, Nepali, Pashto, Punjabi, Rumanian, Russian, Serbo-Croatian, Somali, Sorani, Spanish, Swahili, Tamil, Turkish, Urdu and Vietnamese.

The written material distributed by the Danish Red Cross is available in Albanian, Arabic, Armenian, Danish, Dari, English, Farsi, French, Russian, Serbo-Croatian, Somali and German.

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Legislation does not state any time-limit within which the information has to be submitted to the asylum seeker.

In practice, however, the information will normally be provided within the 15 days deadline. The Guide issued by the Immigration Service is provided at the filling in of the official asylum application form, which normally takes place within a few days after the registration with the police, the latter of which takes place immediately after the lodging of the asylum application.

The Red Cross provide the written and oral information very soon upon arrival to the reception centre (which will normally take place within 24 hours of the lodging of the asylum application at the most) and always within two weeks.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

The guide issued by the Immigration Service contains references to the relevant organisations.

The information distributed by the Danish Red Cross lists the organisations providing assistance and counselling within this field.

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Yes

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

Yes

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

Six

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

A registration or identification card is issued to all asylum seekers who are not detained or who can not be rejected immediately at the border in accordance with the Dublin Regulation or under other provisions relating to admissibility.

In accordance with the National Commissioner's Circular no. 10473 of 6 January 1998 on the Issuing of new registration/identification cards to asylum seekers, "the card is merely proof of the fact that the person in whose name it has been issued has applied for asylum in Denmark under the identity stated at the card.

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

On the presumption that they have no need for it, no identity documents are issued to asylum seekers who are detained. Furthermore, where rejection at the border can take place immediately without the asylum seeker being accommodated at an asylum centre in the meantime, no document is issued.

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

According to the National Commissioner's Circular no. 10473, the document will be issued with an expiry date, and a new card will be issued if the asylum seeker has not either been granted asylum or left the country upon rejection of his/her asylum application.

In practice, however, the card will not be issued with an expiry date anymore, but be valid as long as the asylum seeker is authorized to remain in the territory

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[328]?

No deadline is fixed for the delivery. In practice, however, the deadline of three days is respected. Thus the card will be issued and delivered at the time of registration with the police. This registration normally takes place immediately after the lodging of the application and within 24 hours at the most.

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

Yes

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers :

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

In accordance with a fundamental internal principle, the right to freedom of movement of asylum seekers (like of citizens and other aliens present at the territory) is not limited to any part of the territory unless the person concerned is detained in accordance with the law,.

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

Asylum seekers are generally not free to choose their place of residence at any stage of the asylum procedure, cf. section 42a(7) of the Aliens Act. The only exceptions are cases where the Immigration Service are not responsible for their maintenance, i.e. asylum seekers who resides lawfully in Denmark on other grounds, - asylum seekers who have contracted marriage with a person living in Denmark (unless particular reasons exist), - cases where the asylum seeker's place of residence is unknown, - and cases where the asylum seeker is entitled to maintenance under certain (but not any) other legislation,.

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

Under section 42a(7) of the Aliens Act, the Danish Immigration Service "may decide" that an asylum seeker who is covered by the Immigration Service's duty to support certain groups of asylum seekers, (cf. subsection (1) or (2), cf. subsection (3) of section 42a) "notwithstanding his possession of sufficient means to pay for his own stay and necessary healthcare services, must stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service."

In practice the Immigration Service will always decide where the group of asylum seekers covered by this provision shall reside.

The only exceptions to this rule are, where (i) the asylum seeker resides lawfully in Denmark on other grounds; (ii) the asylum seeker has contracted marriage with a person living in Denmark, unless particular reasons exist; (iii) the asylum seeker's place of residence is unknown; (iv) or the asylum seeker is entitled to maintenance under certain (but not any) other legislation (section 42a(7) cf. section 42a(3)). In these cases the Immigration Service may normally not decide the place of residence of the asylum seeker. One notable modification to this exists where the case of an asylum seeker who is married to a person legally residing in Denmark is processed in the manifestly unfounded procedure for asylum seekers coming from countries considered to expose a minimal risk of persecution. In those cases the asylum seeker will normally not be allowed to stay with his or her spouse, cf. Immigration Service Internal directions of 25 January 2005 on Private accommodation of asylum seekers and others (Retningslinier for privat indkvartering af asylansøgere m.fl.), section 4.2 and section 5.2.

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)

Capacity problems that couldn't be solved through the opening of new collective centres have never arisen.

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

Under section 42a(7), 1st sentence, the Immigration Service may determine that an asylum seeker must stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service. Pursuant to this provision it will also be the Immigration Service that decides whether or not permission to leave that place temporarily should be granted.

Danish norms do not fully comply with Article 7(5) of the Directive. According to Immigration Service guidelines of 4 October 2005 on "Legal funded absence", temporary permission to leave the place of residence may only be given if the following criteria are all fulfilled:

- The asylum seeker is accommodated at an asylum centre;
- Quite particular reasons speak in favour of granting permission, e.g. the applicant or the family is "tremendously psychologically affected" by a longer stay at the asylum centre and a short stay with for example relatives will relieve the person in question from the problem or sufferings. A longer stay in this context will be more than one year. The assessment of whether the asylum seeker or the asylum seeking family is "tremendously psychologically affected" will be taken by the staff at the centre or by health care personnel attached to the centre;
- The case is processed in Phase 2, i.e. the application is being examined in the eligibility procedure, or, if en phase 3, an application for humanitarian residence permit or for reopening of the asylum case has been given suspensive effect. (the application must thus not be processed under thus neither in admissibility/Dublin procedures or have been rejected and the applicant subject to an order to leave the country);
- The applicant must not be subject to an order to report to the police at specified times (cf.. section 34 of the Aliens Act);
- The applicant must not be subject to the food allowance program (cf. section 42a, (9)-(10));
- The application is not processed in the procedure for manifestly unfounded cases;
- Only short-term (one to two weeks) permissions to leave will be granted;.
- Maximum period of absence in a year is a total of two weeks. In very exceptional situations this period of time may be extended to four weeks;
- Families with children between six and 17 years of age will only in very exceptional situations be granted permission to leave outside the ordinary school holidays;
- Permission will not be granted if the asylum seeker has been summoned for interviews or meetings with the authorities;
- Normally, holidays like Christmas, Easter or Ramadan will not in themselves be valid reasons for the granting of permission to leave the centre temporarily.

Persons who have private accommodation or who live en annexes outside the centre can not be granted permission to leave temporarily. According to the Immigration Service Guidelines persons living outside the centres have no need to go to other places.

The asylum seeker will have to apply by filling in a form for this purpose. It is a fundamental principle of national administrative law that reasons are given in case of negative decisions.

It may be argued that impartiality is not sufficiently ensured under existing national norms, Thus the assessment of the centre as to whether or not particular reasons for granting temporary leave are present need not be documented by for example a medical certificate.
Furthermore, a negative decision can not be appealed.

Q.21. Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

On 1 July 2005, the Danish Government implemented new regulations for the payment of cash allowances to asylum seekers who do not live op to the obligations required by the Aliens Act, the so-called food allowances program, cf. section 42a(9) and (10). These provisions have been followedø-up by Immigration Service Instructions of 25 August 2006 on decisions regarding reduction or withdrawal of cash allowances.
The program is primarily intended for cases where asylum seekers have received final rejections of their applications for Danish residence permits, have not left the country by the date ordered, and who are not willing to leave the country. The food allowance program may also be applied where asylum seekers are still in so-called phase 1 or 2, i.e. in the admissibility/Dublin or eligibility procedure. This, however, only rarely happens.
The specific criteria and conditions for reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions, which are of relevance when comparing with the provisions of the directive - are as follows:

- Under section 42a(9)(iii) of the Aliens Act, the Danish Immigration Service may decide that an asylum seeker who "does not comply with the decision of the Danish Immigration Service to the effect that the alien must stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service" will not receive cash allowances if he is lodged at an accommodation centre with free meals, or that he or she will only receive the basic allowance and the maintenance supplement and the reduced maintenance supplement if he is lodged at an accommodation centre without free meals;
  (cf. article 16(1)(a), first indent of the directive)

- Under section 42a(9)(i) and (iv) of the Aliens Act, the Danish Immigration Service may decide that an asylum seeker who "… without reasonable cause … fails to appear for an interrogation at the Danish Immigration Service or the police, to which the alien has been summoned…" or "… does not comply with the order of the police concerning a measure mentioned in section 34 [reporting, deposit of travel document and ticket, provision of bail, stay at an address determined by the police] …" will not receive cash allowances if he is lodged at an accommodation centre with free meals, or that he or she will only receive the basic allowance and the maintenance supplement [caregiver supplement] and the reduced maintenance supplement [reduced caregiver supplement] if he is lodged at an accommodation centre without free meals;

Under section 42a(10)(i)), of the Aliens Act, The Danish Immigration Service "…shall decide, unless particular reasons make it inappropriate…", that an asylum seeker will not receive cash allowances if he is lodged at an accommodation centre with free meals, or he or she will only receive the basic allowance, the maintenance supplement [caregiver supplement] and the reduced maintenance supplement [reduced caregiver supplement] if lodged at an accommodation centre without free meals, if he or she "…does not assist in procuring information for the case…"
(cf. to a certain degree article 16(1)(a), second indent of the directive)

- Under section 42a(9)(ii) of the Aliens Act, the Danish Immigration Service may decide that an asylum seeker who "… has exhibited violent or threatening behaviour to persons performing duties in relation to the running of an accommodation centre for aliens or to persons otherwise staying at the accommodation centre …" will not receive cash allowances if he is lodged at an accommodation centre with free meals, or that he or she will only receive the basic allowance and the maintenance supplement and the reduced maintenance supplement if lodged at an accommodation centre without free meals.
(cf. article 16(3)a of the directive)

- Under section 42a(9)(v) of the Aliens Act, the Danish Immigration Service may decide that an asylum seeker who "… disregards an order to perform necessary duties in relation to the running of the accommodation centre …" will not receive cash allowances if he is lodged at an accommodation centre with free meals, or that he or she will only receive the basic allowance and the maintenance supplement [caregiver supplement] and the reduced maintenance supplement [reduced caregiver supplement] if lodged at an accommodation centre without free meals.
(cf. article 16(3)b of the directive)

The provisions of section 42a(9) are facultative. According to the Immigration Service Instructions of 25 August 2006, the discretionary powers to omit applying the food allowance program in those cases are limited.
The provision in section 42a(10)(i) is obligatory. According to the preparatory works, the Immigration Service can only set aside the rules of the program in cases with extremely extenuating circumstances. Cases such as those involving unaccompanied minors or individuals with special forms of life-threatening diseases, would qualify for an exemption. Other particular circumstances may also qualify for exemption. Children under school age, pregnancy or food related illness will not qualify for exemption.

For asylum seekers living at asylum centres where meals are not provided being placed on the program means that supplementary allowances earned through such activities as activation will no longer be paid. The allowance for asylum seekers with children will also be reduced. This means that applicants will only receive allowances for food (basic allowance).

Asylum seekers living at centres where meals are provided will receive no allowance. This also applies to families with children. For asylum seekers living at asylum centres where meals are not provided being placed on the program means that supplementary allowances earned through such activities as activation will no longer be paid. The allowance for asylum seekers with children will also be reduced. This means that applicants will only receive allowances for food (basic allowance).

Families with children under the age of 18 will receive a so-called child package every 14 days per child, regardless of age. The child package contains such items as fruit and a few sweets.

The Immigration Service will, on the recommendation of the operator of the asylum centre, remove asylum seekers from the food allowance program if and when they choose to co-operate. Asylum seekers removed from the program by the Service will again receive their supplementary allowances and have their caregiver allowance increased.

As mentioned above, a contract is to be concluded between the asylum seeker and the accommodation operator on the basis of the individual alien's skills and qualifications within a week after the submission of the asylum application, cf. the Aliens Act section 42c. If the asylum seeker does not fulfil his contract, the accommodation operator may decide to withdraw or reduce the supplementary allowance. This is regulated by the Aliens Act section 42b(11), which stipulates: "…. Unless particular reasons make it inappropriate, the accommodation operator shall decide that the supplementary allowance under subsection (8) is not payable if the alien has not complied with his contract, cf. section 42c. If an alien has not complied with his contract for one or more days of the period on which the calculation of the supplementary allowance is based, cf. subsection (8), second and sixth sentences, no supplementary allowance is payable for the number of days in which the alien has not complied with his contract, unless particular reasons make it inappropriate. If an alien has complied with his contract for less than half of the period on which the calculation of the supplementary allowance is based, cf. subsection (8), second and sixth sentences, no supplementary allowance is payable, unless particular reasons make it inappropriate."

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice?

No.

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

A decision on reduction or withdrawal of benefits under section 42a(9) or (10)(i) is taken by the Immigration Service on the recommendation of the Immigration Service itself or of the operator of the asylum centre. The decision is taken in accordance with Immigration Service Instructions of 25 August 2006 on decisions regarding reduction or withdrawal of cash allowances. According to these, a decision on reduction or withdrawal can not be taken unless the proposal has been submitted to the applicant and he has had an opportunity to comment on it. Moreover, the recommendation should make clear whether an interpreter has been used for this or whether it has been possible to find a common language.

Under section 46(2) of the Aliens Act, decisions of the Immigration Service may be appealed to the Ministry of Refugees, Immigration and Integration.

Provisions of the Administrative Act apply to decisions made by the accommodation operator to withdraw or reduce the supplementary allowance under section 42b(11), cf. section 46e, 3rd sentence. A decision of the accommodation operator may be appealed to the Immigration Service, cf. section 46e, 4th sentence.

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the document attached to our sending)?

Q.21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome?

N/A as Denmark is not bound by the Directive.

Q.22. Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

Negative decisions taken by the Danish Immigration Service may with the exceptions mentioned below be appealed to the Minister for Refugee, Immigration and Integration Affairs, cf. section 46 (2) of the Aliens Act. Exceptions to the right of appeal are: - decisions taken under section 42a(7) whereby the Immigration Service decides that an asylum seeker must stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service; - decisions taken under section 42b(1) on which cash allowances a given asylum seeker is entitled to; - decisions taken under section 42b(3) and (7) on number of caregiver allowances that a given asylum seeker is entitled to; - decisions on the granting of supplementary allowances to asylum seekers who fulfil their contract with the accommodation operator, cf. section 42b(8); - decisions on the granting of supplementary allowances to minors, cf. section 42b(9); - orders to assist in carrying out the tasks necessary to the running of the accommodation centre, and orders that asylum seekers who disregards an order shall stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service, cf. section 42d(2).

Negative decisions taken by the accommodation operator can be appealed to the Immigration Service, cf. section 46e of the Aliens Act.

The applicant is informed in writing about the above possibilities to lodge appeals against negative decisions. Appeals do not have suspensive effect.

In principle asylum seekers may, in accordance with section 63(1) of the Constitution, furthermore lodge an appeal within the ordinary judicial court system against a final negative administrative decision. In practice, however, this never (or extremely rarely) happens both because asylum seekers are normally not informed about this possibility and because free legal aid would normally not be granted. An appeal does not have suspensive effect, cf. section 63(2) of the Constitution.

In accordance with section 97 of the Ministry of Justice Regulation on remand prison, decisions taken by the management of the prison towards detained asylum seekers, may be appealed to the Minister of Justice. The appeal does not have suspensive effect unless the authority that has made the decision or the Minister of Justice decides so.

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

In accordance with a fundamental principle of administrative law as well as with section 8 of the Administrative Procedures Act and section 260 of the Administration of Justice Act, the asylum seeker may always let himself be represented by a legal representative. There is no free legal aid in these cases.

Legal counselling may be obtained for free at the Danish Refugee Council.

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

N/A

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

No

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

According to Danish legislation on reception conditions, "… a family includes the alien, his spouse or cohabitant and his or his spouse's or his cohabitant's children under the age of 18. If a child under the age of 18 does not live together with one of or both its parents, if the child lives in marriage or cohabitation with another or if the child is itself subject to a duty of maintenance to a child under the age of 18, such child is considered as not belonging to one of or both its parents' family or families," cf. the Aliens Act section 42b(3), 6th sentence. An adopted child would be included.

Regarding the question of protection of family life and maintaining family unity, it is a principle of internal family law that spouses and minor children have the right to protection of family unity and family life and thus normally being able to live together. This principle also extends to asylum seekers. Most asylum seekers live however in an accommodation centre offering very limited possibility for a private life. They live in small rooms with a bed, a chair and a cupboard for each person. Families often live together in one room, while the asylum seekers who are single share a room with two, three or four other single persons of the same sex.

A small group of asylum seekers are allowed to stay under more private conditions while their application is being processed by the authorities. They can either live with relatives or in an annexe, which is a small and inexpensive house/flat or a room outside the asylum centre. In most cases, this permission is given to asylum seekers who have been waiting for a long time for a decision in their application. The permission can only be given by the Immigration Service.

On basis of a government decision, the Immigration Service, on 2 April 2007, issued Directions for the two-rooms policy" covering all asylum seeking families with children. According to these guidelines an offer of accommodation in two rooms should be submitted to all families with children (defined as containing at least one adult and one child under the age of 18) before the summer of 2007.

Q.24. Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

In accordance with section 42a(5), first sentence of the Aliens Act, "the Danish Immigration Service provides and runs accommodation centres for aliens falling within subsection (1) or (2), cf. subsection (3)".

(Subsection (1) or (2) cf. subsection (3) of the Aliens Act prescribes the duty of support of the Danish Immigration Service towards all asylum seekers with the exception of those who have lawful residence permit in Denmark on other grounds, who have contracted marriage with a person living in Denmark (unless particular reasons exist); - whose place of residence is unknown; or who are entitled to maintenance under certain other legislation (as is for example the case with imprisoned or detained asylum seekers)

The task of running and administering the asylum centres are, in accordance with section 42a(5) second sentence, respectively section 42a(6) subcontracted to the Danish Red Cross and two municipalities.

Under section 42a(7), first sentence: The Danish Immigration Service may decide that an alien mentioned under subsection (1) or (2), cf. subsection (3), notwithstanding his possession of sufficient means to pay for his own stay and necessary healthcare services, must stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service.

In practice the vast majority of asylum seekers are accommodated in asylum centres in accordance with the above mentioned provision of section 42a(7) and will remain at such centres throughout their stay in Denmark as asylum seekers.

Only a small group of asylum seekers are allowed to stay under more private conditions while their application is being processed by the authorities. They can either live with relatives or in an annexe, which is a small and inexpensive house/flat or a room outside the asylum centre. In most cases, this permission is given to asylum seekers who have been waiting for a long time for a decision in their application. The permission can only be given by the Immigration Service and will be granted in accordance with detailed internal Immigration Service directions of 25 January 2005 on private accommodation of asylum seekers and others.

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers? Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

As of 30 April 2007 there were 2.509 available places for asylum seekers at asylum centres run by the Danish Red Cross and two municipalities.

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?

Yes

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

There is – at the moment – available capacity at the asylum centres. Furthermore, the Danish Red Cross has an empty asylum centre, which is prepared for emergency operation.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

Accommodation centres run by the Danish Red Cross and the two local municipalities are divided into the following categories:

- Reception centres for asylum seekers in phase 1 (case dealt with under procedures regarding admissibility and determination of responsible state under the Dublin regulation);
- Residence centres, which are primarily inhabited by asylum seekers whose applications are under examination in the eligibility procedure (phase 2);
- Departure centres which are mainly for finally rejected asylum seekers (phase 3) who do not cooperate in ensuring their return to their countries of origin

- Special care centre: One asylum centre is designated particularly vulnerable asylum seekers with severe physical or psychological problems. They might be physically handicapped or victims of torture.
- Women's centre: Female asylum seekers can choose to live in an asylum centre without men. The women have very different reasons for wishing accommodation without men. Some have been raped or otherwise abused in their native country, other women come from a culture where it is difficult to accept having to share toilet and bath with foreign men. A small group of women has had problems with their husband at another asylum centre. The women's centre offers teaching and internal activation/work experience and the staff support the women in their role as a single parent for the children.
- Children centre: One asylum centre is designated unaccompanied minors.

Accommodation offered by the police:

- According to section 43 of the Aliens Act, the police may "if there is an immediate need therefore" make arrangements for the accommodation and stay of and necessary healthcare services to aliens who have submitted an application for asylum, but whose case is dealt with in entry procedures (Dublin Regulation). The police defrays the expenses therefore. In practice this provision has been applied by the police at the borders to Germany, where asylum seekers sometimes are accommodated at local hostels for a couple of weeks awaiting a decision, which is deemed likely to be rejection of entry and transfer/return to Germany under the Dublin regulation.

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

Regardless of the time span, there are, with a few exceptions, in general no possibilities for accommodation in private houses or apartments during the asylum procedure.

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

Yes. There is a general regulation applicable to both private and public centres. It is part of the so-called Operator Contract ("Operatørkontrakt") which is signed by the Immigration Service on the one side and the Danish Red Cross, respectively the municipalities on the other.

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision? Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

The Immigration Service may decide to reduce or withdraw part of the cash allowances in cases where "the alien has exhibited violent or threatening behaviour to persons performing duties in relation to the running of an accommodation centre for aliens or to persons otherwise staying at the accommodation centre;" (cf. section 42a(9)(ii) of the Aliens Act), or where "the alien disregards an order to perform necessary duties in relation to the running of the accommodation centre;" (cf. section 42a(9)(v) of the Aliens Act). The decision will be taken by the Immigration Service on the recommendation of the operator of the centre. Detailed guidelines are included in the Immigration Service instruction of 25 August 2006, Guidelines on decisions relating to reduction or withdrawal of cash allowances.

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

Under Annex 2.0.2 to the Operator Contract and in accordance with an optional provision of section 28(2) of the Regulation on education and activation of asylum seekers, it is stipulated that "the operator shall assist the asylum seekers in the establishment and the ongoing running of "residents boards", the aim of which are to ensure that the asylum seekers have a contributory influence on the normal everyday life at the individual centres.

In practice all accommodation centres run democratically elected "boards" with various particular focuses (e.g. on children, young people, adults, running of the house, etc.) where the residents of the particular centre have influence on which activities are to be undertaken at the centre.

Furthermore all asylum seekers above the age of 18, lodged in one of the accommodation centres have " … a duty to assist in carrying out the tasks necessary to the running of the accommodation centre …", cf. section 42d(1)of the Aliens Act and will sign a contract with the accommodation operator, inter alia, to this effect, cf. section 42c(3)(i). The tasks may include cleaning, light office work and repairs at building, inventory and shared facilities.

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

Asylum seekers are generally not permitted to undertake paid or unpaid employment.

With regard to the situation inside the asylum centres, section 42d of the Aliens Act stipulates that "(1)..an alien lodged in one of the [asylum] centres … has a duty to assist in carrying out the tasks necessary to the running of the accommodation centre. (2) The Danish Immigration Service or the accommodation operator … may order an alien to carry out the tasks mentioned in subsection (1). The Danish Immigration Service may decide that an alien who disregards an order shall stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service."

Under section 42d of the Aliens Act, all asylum seekers over 18 are obliged to help with required daily tasks at their asylum centre, e.g. cleaning their own rooms, common areas, kitchen areas, and bathrooms. In addition to these tasks, asylum seekers may help with other tasks at the centre (internal activation), e.g. helping personnel with routine office work and the upkeep and reparation of buildings, furnishings, and common areas at their place of lodging. Asylum seekers who are still awaiting a decision whether their applications will be processed in Denmark may only perform internal activation tasks. If asylum seekers do not live up to their contracts with asylum centres, including the duty to undertake the above tasks at the centre, a reduction of allowances equivalent to the number of days' tasks not performed can be made

Thus, the work inside the accommodation centre is unpaid and mandatory.

It is however important to note that a direct consequence of the lack of access to work is that adult asylum seekers who stay at an asylum centre for several years loose their professional skills and their ability to keep going, thereby reducing their possibilities to maintain themselves once this will be required of them again.

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

No legislative norm for asylum seekers not detained or confined at the border. In accordance with practice, legal advisors are free to enter the asylum centres if invited by the asylum seekers. The Danish Refugee Council and UNHCR (in practice represented by the Danish Refugee Council) are always free to enter the asylum centres.

Furthermore the asylum seekers are free to leave the asylum centres and will thus have the possibility of calling on the above persons or organisations outside the centres.

Contact details of the above and similar organisations are included in the written information which is provided to the asylum seekers on arrival.

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

Access is not regulated in legislation. In practice, however, there is free access for legal representatives to the accommodation centres if they are invited by the asylum seekers. The Danish Refugee Council (in its function as legal adviser) and UNHCR (in practice represented by the Danish Refugee Council) are always free to enter the asylum centres.

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

No

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

In accordance with Annexe 2.1.3 of the Operator Contract, medical screening of adults is voluntary, but mandatory for children.

Shortly after arrival in Denmark all asylum seekers are invited to a meeting with a nurse. The meeting takes place at centre Sandholm – the reception centre for all asylum seekers in Denmark. During the meeting the nurse will ask questions about the person's physical and mental health, if he or she has been living in a refugee camp or is a victim of torture. The nurse also asks about social conditions: former jobs and education, if the person is married and has children. The nurse uses a list of questions and this list later becomes the medical journal of the asylum seeker. The journal follows the person as long as he or she stays at an asylum centre. If the nurse finds signs of a disease or if the person comes from a country with a high incidence of tuberculosis, he or she is offered a medical examination. The meeting with the nurse and an eventual medical examination is called medical screening and the purpose of this medical screening is to secure that asylum seekers who need assistance, receive the necessary help and treatment. Almost all asylum seekers accept this offer of a medical screening. For children this medical screening is obligatory. The meeting lasts approximately 30 minutes and is conducted with help from an interpreter. An HIV test is offered but is not obligatory.

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

In accordance with section 42a(1) of the Aliens Act, asylum seekers are entitled to necessary health care services. According to Immigration Service Instructions of 4 May 2005 regarding health care for adult asylum seekers, this cover:

- emergency medical treatment by a medical doctor or at the casualty ward in case of acute or life threatening illness or injury. This may be initiated by the operator of the asylum centre;
- Some non-acute health care may also be initiated by the operator of the centre is case without prior consent of the Immigration Service, for example, consultations at certain specialists, introductory talks with psychologists, pain-stilling dental treatment within a budget of 3.000 DKR (appr.400 Euro) and midwife consultations.
- Other forms of necessary health care, for example hospital treatment or hospitalization, may not be initiated without the prior consent of the Immigration Service.

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?

All asylum seekers either live at an asylum centre or, in case of private accommodation, are linked to an asylum centre. They all have to use the health care system established at the centre. General practitioners are coming to the centres.

Q.28. Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

Asylum seekers do not have access to the labour market in Denmark. In Letter no. 11113 of 30 January 1985 on Accommodation of asylum seekers, the Ministry of Justice refers to this as "… a fundamental principle that asylum seekers are not allowed to have wage-earning or unsalaried employment during the processing of the asylum application. The required title to this is only granted if and when the asylum seeker obtains asylum."
The only exception which may (indirectly) occur in practice is if the asylum seeker either has residence- and work permit on other grounds (e.g. on basis of family reunification) or if s/he has a certain profession which is characterized by a general lack of qualified employees in Denmark and included in a so-called positive list written-up by the government.

Asylum seekers whose applications are to be processed in Denmark may participate in both internal activation as well as unpaid job training programs at a company not affiliated with the asylum centre (external activation). Applicants can also participate in unpaid humanitarian work or any other form of volunteer work.

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

Asylum seekers do not have access to the labour market in Denmark. In Letter no. 11113 of 30 January 1985 on Accommodation of asylum seekers, the Ministry of Justice refers to this as "… a fundamental principle that asylum seekers are not allowed to have wage-earning or unsalaried employment during the processing of the asylum application. The required title to this is only granted if and when the asylum seeker obtains asylum."

The only exception which may (indirectly) occur in practice is if the asylum seeker either has residence- og work permit on other grounds (e.g. on basis of family reunification) or there is a general lack of qualified employees within a certain field of work in Denmark. An asylum seeker possessing the latter specific qualifications may lodge an application for - and be granted - work and residence permit on those grounds if he has been offered a job within this field.

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

Not applicable as no access to labour market merely on basis of being an asylum seeker.

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Not applicable as no access to labour market merely on basis of being an asylum seeker.

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

Asylum seekers over the age of 17 whose applications are still being processed in Denmark may participate in both internal activation as well as unpaid job training programs at a company not affiliated with the asylum centre (external activation).

Applicants can also participate in unpaid humanitarian work or any other form of volunteer work, cf. section 42e of the Aliens Act.

Courses may be designed to maintain and augment both their general skills as well as their trade or professional skills. The courses are held at or in association with the asylum centre.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

No

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

Under section 42a(4) of the Aliens Act, the Danish Immigration Service may decide that an alien who has sufficient means of his own, will not have his or his family's expenses of the stay and necessary healthcare services defrayed. If the alien has sufficient means of his own to pay for the expenses of his or his family's stay and necessary healthcare services, the Danish Immigration Service may order him to do so. In practice this provision is rarely if ever applied.

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30.

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

In addition to section 42a(1) which, inter alia, stipulates the provision of necessary healthcare services to asylum seekers, the Immigration Service has issued internal Instructions for the establishment of social measures for asylum seekers on 11 February 2005. Further instructions/specifications are included in annexes to the Operator Contracts between the Immigration Service and the accommodation operators. According to the Social Services Act of 18 January 2007, the municipality authorities have an obligation to conduct supervisory authority towards and grant assistance to families, children and adolescents in general as well as to children and adults with mental or physical handicaps or particular social problems, who live within the borders of their respective municipalities. The supervisory obligation includes children and adults living at asylum centres. The obligation to provide particular assistance takes effect when the necessary assistance goes beyond what the accommodation operators are able to provide.

Categories of persons with special needs include the categories listed in the directive.

Torture survivors may however not be identified as the asylum authorities are not under an obligation to ensure that information that have come up in this regard during the examination of the claim is forwarded to the relevant health personnel responsible for ensuring adequate reception conditions

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

In addition to section 42a(1) which, inter alia, stipulates the provision of necessary healthcare services to asylum seekers, the Immigration Service has issued internal Instructions for the establishment of social measures for asylum seekers on 11 February 2005. Further instructions/specifications are included in annexes to the Operator Contracts between the Immigration Service and the accommodation operators.

According to the Social Services Act of 18 January 2007, the municipality authorities have an obligation to conduct supervisory authority towards and grant assistance to families, children and adolescents in general as well as to children and adults with mental or physical handicaps or particular social problems, who live within the borders of their respective municipalities, cf. section 11 and 12 as well as chapter 11 and 16 of the Social Service Act. The supervisory obligation includes children and adults living at asylum centres. The obligation to provide particular assistance takes effect when the necessary assistance goes beyond what the accommodation operators are able to provide, cf. Instructions for the establishment of social measures for asylum seekers on 11 February 2005.

Measures to asylum seekers with particular needs, that, according to the Instructions for the establishment of social measures for asylum seekers on 11 February 2005, will normally fall within the duties of the accommodation operators include for example

- personal assistance to asylum seekers who are ill or physical or mentally disabled in relating to the participation in activation activities, shopping etc.;
- Support to and instructions in carrying out the necessary housework to asylum seekers who are not at all capable of carrying out those duties by themselves;
- Support to other necessary tasks like shopping and dressing if the asylum seeker is not at all capable of doing it him- or herself;
- Support to families with children in carrying out practical tasks, like dressing, feeding, cooking, etc.
- Support to children with mentally ill parents;
- Support to parents who need help in bringing up their children

- Day care activities

Measures which, according to the Instructions for the establishment of social measures for asylum seekers on 11 February 2005, will normally fall within the competence of the municipalities, include for example:

- home care or visiting nurse;
- Personal assistance to persons with grave psychiatric disorders who are not able to function without an specially trained assistant within the field of health;
- Family care to children
- Placement of children at institution or boarding school for maladjusted children;
- Support to children with physical or mental disabilities or sufferings in kindergarten and other day care facilities;
- Support to families where children have been subjected to disregard or abuse.

According to Immigration Service Instructions of 4 May 2005 regarding health care for adult asylum seekers, psychologist or psychiatrist treatment as well as treatment by physiotherapist may be provided to torture survivors. Problematic is however that torture victims will not necessarily be identified. When asylum seekers for example during the examination of their asylum application explain to asylum authorities about torture they have experience, there is no system ensuring that this particular situation of the applicant be evaluated by medical doctors and specialists. Normally, the asylum authorities will thus only refer an applicant to a torture examination if they consider it relevant for the examination of the merits of the case.

On arrival all asylum seekers are offered a medical check and, generally, medical or ordinary staff at the reception and accommodation centres, will pay particular attention to the psychological and physical health of vulnerable persons and seek to provide adequate counselling where possible. Rather than healing or rehabilitating, the treatment and counselling is merely sufficient to ease the situation of the particular person.

One accommodation centre is specifically designed for the reception of single women with or without children and, as long as there is still room, those groups of women will be accommodated here.

Furthermore, the two biggest reception/accommodation centres in Denmark (Center Sandholm and Center Avnstrup) have separate wards for families separated from those of single men, where accompanied as well as unaccompanied women will be accommodated. None of the other accommodation centres have similar facilities. Instead staff at those centres is instructed to pay particular attention to the vulnerability and potential exposure to abuse of single women.

Unaccompanied minors are accommodated at a centre specifically established for this purpose. The staff is specifically trained for the reception of this category of asylum seekers.

The annexes to the Operator Contracts detail some of the considerations to take into account with regard to asylum seekers with special needs:

In accordance with Annex 2.1.5 to the Operator Contract, the operator shall ensure an interdisciplinary and coordinated psycho-social approach to asylum seekers with special needs; watch closely the children of detained parents and do reaching-out casework vis-à-vis pregnant women and parents with children at kindergarten age.

In case of serious physical or mental illness or disability, the asylum seeker will either be transferred to the special care centre or alternative solutions will be introduced, cf. Annexe 2.1.3 of the Operator Contract.

According to Annexe 2.0.2 of the Operator Contract, asylum seekers with special needs, e.g. disregarded children, shall be identified and a holistic and coordinated effort be ensured.

Annexes 2.2.1 and 2.2.2 of the Operator Contract stipulate extended health care and counselling of children and extensive care for asylum seekers lodged at a special care centre due to their serious physical or psychological or other problems. Accordingly, the special care centres have more staff than the other asylum centres, including specialists like psychologists and physiotherapists.

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

In connection with the initial medical screening or, later, in connection with changed and alarming behaviour, the situation of an asylum seeker or an asylum seeker family will be taken up and discussed by a specific psycho-social team.

It is however problematic that torture victims will often not be identified (in terms of article 17(2)) even though they may state their situation. When asylum seekers for example during the examination of their asylum application explain to asylum authorities about torture they have experience, there is no system ensuring that this particular situation of the applicant be evaluated by medical doctors and specialists. Normally, the asylum authorities will thus only refer an applicant to a torture examination if they consider it relevant for the examination of the merits of the case. If, for example, convinced without any further evidence that the applicant is a torture survivor he or she will not be sent for examination nor will the Immigration Service necessarily submit this information to the accommodation operator.

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Re. Article 15(2): Yes

Re. Article 20: Counselling easing the symptoms and effects of torture and other serious acts of violence will to a certain - limited extent - be offered to asylum seekers, but real and necessary treatment and rehabilitation for sufferings of this kind will normally not be offered to persons who do not hold a proper residence permit.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

Asylum seekers below the age of 18 are considered to be minors.

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Under section 42g of the Aliens Act (asylum seeking) "children of school age …. shall participate in separately arranged tuition or in tuition measuring up to the general requirements under the separately arranged tuition." (Exempted from this provision are detained children, section 42g, cf. 42a(3)(iv)). School age is considered to be 7 to 16 years of age and this group of children has to participate in tuition similar to that of resident children (nationals and others) in Denmark.

Normally the children start their education by attending one of the six Red Cross schools. As a minimum all schools have 3 different levels. Schools with many pupils have up to ten classes. According to their age, pupils go to school between 20 and 28 hours per week. The children learn Danish, English, mathematics and practical subjects such as physical education, art, woodwork and cooking, depending on the facilities of the school. All schools have computers and it is a goal to integrate IT in all subjects. The teachers make a special effort to ensure that the children learn about the Danish society, Danish culture and the Danish language. If possible the school organizes mother tongue teaching.

In order to meet their need for professional, social and linguistic challenges, a number of the children will, at some point of their schooling, be transferred to a local school run by the municipality, cf. section 14(1)(iv) of the Regulation on education and activation of asylum seekers.

Handicapped children and maladjusted children or children who have difficulties learning are offered special teaching in cooperation with the local municipality, cf. section 7 of the Regulation on education and activation of asylum seekers

In contradiction with the directive, children who have reached the age of 17 are not granted access to the education system under similar conditions as nationals of Denmark. In accordance with section 42e, they may participate in a particular "introduction scheme" for adults and, under certain conditions in Danish or English language tuition as well as introduction to Danish culture and social conditions. Courses may be designed to maintain and augment both their general skills as well as their trade or professional skills. The courses are held at or in association with the asylum centre Asylum seekers over the age of 17 whose applications are still being processed in the Phase 1 or 2 may participate in both internal activation and in unpaid job training programs at a company not affiliated with the asylum centre (external activation). Applicants can also participate in unpaid humanitarian work or any other form of volunteer work, cf. section 42e of the Aliens Act.

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Legislation does not contain a time limit. In practice, schooling will be provided within three months of the submission of the asylum application.

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

Yes, cf. section 5 and 6 of the Regulation on education and activation of asylum seekers.

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Yes – in accordance with a general principle of family law protecting the family unity and the family life.

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Real rehabilitation services are normally not offered to these groups of minors as rehabilitation is normally only offered to persons with a proper residence permit in Denmark.

Unaccompanied minors will however receive relatively much attention and possibly also some treatment/counselling in this regard as they live in a centre specifically designated for minors, where there is both more staff and the staff is specifically trained to deal with children and include a trained psychologist. Minors who are accompanied will, on the other hand, in practice be at risk of relative more neglect and of not being "seen" by staff at the ordinary accommodation centres.

Only in cases of neglect or abuse by the parents, rehabilitation may take place. In those cases the operator of the centre is under an obligation to inform the local municipality and in cooperation with the municipality ensure that all necessary measures are taken to help these children. Some families get the support at home; in other cases it might be necessary to place the child outside the home.

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

When children under 18 years of age come to Denmark and seek asylum without their parents, or other adults travelling in place of parents, they children are handled as 'unaccompanied minor asylum seekers.'

Every unaccompanied child registered as an asylum seeker in Denmark after 1 April 2003 will, in accordance with section 56a (1)-(6) of the Aliens Act, Regulation no. 193 of 20 March 2003 on The dealing with cases concerning representation of unaccompanied minor asylum seekers (Bekendtgørelse om behandling af sager om repræsentanter for uledsagede mindreårige asylansøgere), and Circular no. 9126 of 26 March 2003 to all county authorities regarding appointment of representatives for unaccompanied minor asylum seekers (Cirkulæreskrivelse til samtlige statsamter, herunder Københavns Overpræsidium, om udpegning af repræsentanter for uledsagede mindreårige asylansøgere), be appointed a personal representative to preserve the child's interests. The representative will offer support to the child during the asylum case examination: for example, by accompanying the child during the asylum interview. The representative will also support the child on a more personal level. Once the Danish Immigration Service has established that the applicant is an unaccompanied, underage individual, the Danish Immigration Service will ask the accommodation Operator to recommend a representative to the local county authority (statsamt), which will formally appoint the representative. The representative will not be affiliated with immigration authorities, and can, for example, be a relative or other private citizen.

If a child's asylum case is processed within the manifestly unfounded procedure, the Danish Immigration Service will appoint an attorney to represent the child, cf. section 56a(7) of the Aliens Act.

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

During the processing of the application for an asylum/residence permit, the child will be accommodated in a centre run by the Danish Red Cross, designated specifically for unaccompanied minor asylum seekers and with especially trained staff. It is also possible for the unaccompanied minor to live together with close relatives living in Denmark, e.g. an aunt. It is assessed individually if private housing should be allowed. There are no specific norms stipulating the placement of children in suitable accommodation. There are however several norms regulating the placement in foster families and with relatives, as well as norms regulating the services to be provided by the accommodation operator at special accommodation centre for unaccompanied minors.

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

Provided the minor or the appointed guardian gives their consent, the Danish Immigration Service must initiate a search for the parents as soon as possible after the arrival in Denmark, cf. section 56a(8) of the Aliens Act. It may be the Danish Red Cross or the Ministry of Foreign Affairs who perform the practical work in the search. Confidentiality is stipulated by section 27 or the Administrative Procedures Act, cf. section 152 of the Penal Code.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

No

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

No (not a problem in practice as Denmark is a small country!)

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

No.

Q.32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

Asylum seekers are normally not confined to border posts, but will, if decisions on admissibility/Dublin procedure can not be taken immediately, normally be sent either to an asylum centre, which is under the responsibility of one of the accommodation operators, or to an in-country detention centre, which is under the auspices of the Prisons and Probation Service.

In exceptional cases of border confinement, the police will have the responsibility for securing the reception of the asylum seeker, cf. section 43 of the Aliens Act.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

N/A

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[1] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

Danish legislation and practice is in accordance with the principle contained in Art. 18(1) of the EU Directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005.

In connection with entry and eligibility procedures, detention of asylum seekers may be ordered under the following circumstances:

- Asylum seekers who have applied for asylum may be deprived of their liberty upon arrival in order to ensure enforcement of a potential refusal of entry if another country is responsible for the examination the application for asylum under the Dublin regulation or under the "safe third country" (cf. section 36 (1) 1st sentence of the Danish Aliens Act). This provision may, inter alia, be used when doubts about identity and travel route;

[1] Please specify if article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed).

- Asylum seekers, whose claims are expected to or are processed under the accelerated procedure for manifestly unfounded claims, may be detained after a specific, individual assessment, provided it is required for ensuring their presence during the examination of their case (cf. section 36 (1) 3rd sentence of the Danish Aliens Act);

- Asylum seekers, who fail to comply with a decision of the Danish Immigration Service to stay at a determined place (cf. section 36(2) 1st sentence of the Aliens Act);

- Asylum seekers, who, without reasonable cause, fail to appear for an interrogation at the police or at the Danish Immigration Service to which he or she has been summoned (section 36 (2) 2nd sentence of the Danish Aliens Act);

- Asylum seekers who through their behaviour essentially obstruct the procuring of information for their case (without reasonable cause, repeatedly failing to appear for interrogations at the police or the Immigration Service to which they have been summoned, not giving or obscuring information on identity, nationality or travel route or by giving undoubted misrepresentations thereon, or by otherwise not assisting in procuring information for the case) may be detained in order to ensure efficient examination of the asylum application and return from Denmark (section 36 (4) of the Danish Aliens Act);

- Asylum seekers, who have been expelled on the basis of having committed certain crimes may be deprived of liberty to ensure efficient enforcement of the decision of expulsion (section 36 (3) of the Danish Aliens Act);

Furthermore, order of remand in custody may be decided in cases of

- Asylum seekers who have been expelled by final judgement under for certain criminal activities (cf. sections 22 to 24 of the Aliens Act), if in order to ensure efficient enforcement of the decision of expulsion

Except for those detained on basis of, inter alia, previous criminal activities, asylum seekers may only be detained if the police considers that alternative lesser measures (deposit of the passport or other travel document with the police, stay at an address determined by the police, to report to the police at specified times) are insufficient to ensure their presence.

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

No

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

Except for those where previous criminal activities is part of the criteria for detention, asylum seekers may only be detained if the police considers that alternative lesser measures are insufficient to ensure their presence, cf. section 36 of the Aliens Act.

During entry procedures, the police may order an asylum seeker to adhere to one or more of the following alternatives to detention "provided it is found necessary for ensuring the presence of the alien concerned":

- Deposit passport or other travel documents and ticket, cf. section 34(1)(i) of the Aliens Act (commonly used);
- Provision of bail determined by the police, cf. section 34(1)(ii) of the Aliens Act;
- Stay at a specific address determined by the police, cf. section 34(1)(iii) of the Aliens Act;
- Reporting to the police at specific times , cf. section 34(1)(iv) of the Aliens Act

During eligibility procedures, "if deemed appropriate for ensuring the presence of the alien or his assistance in the examination of his case", the police may order the asylum seeker to:

- Report to the police at specified times, in cases where
    - The asylum seeker does not assist in providing information for the case,
    - without reasonable cause, the asylum seeker fails to appear for an interrogation at the Danish Immigration Service or the police to which he or she has been summoned;
    - the asylum seeker has exhibited violent or threatening behaviour to persons performing duties in relation to the running of an accommodation centre for aliens or to persons otherwise staying at the accommodation centre;
    - the asylum seeker does not comply with the decision of the Danish Immigration Service to the effect that the alien must stay at a place determined by the Danish Immigration Service.

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

Re. detention under section 36 of the Aliens Act:
The police are the competent authority to take the initial decision on detention under section 36 of the Aliens Act.

In case the asylum seeker is not released within 3 days (72 hours) of the enforcement of the deprivation of liberty, he or she will be brought before a court of justice, which will rule on the lawfulness and the continuation of the detention (section 37(1) of the Aliens Act).

In accordance with section 37(2) 1st sentence b, the decision of the lower court may be appealed to the high court, which will rule on the lawfulness and continuation of the detention. Appeal does not have suspensive effect. Legislation provides no time limits, but in practice the ruling of the upper court will be given after a few days.

Re. Custody under section 35(2) of the Aliens Act:
The courts of justice are competent to make decision on the remand of an asylum seeker in custody under section 35(2) of the Aliens Act.

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

Detention of a person on grounds related to the expectation that his or her asylum case is expected to be processed in the expedited manifestly unfounded procedure (cf. section 36 (1) 3rd sentence) is limited to seven (7) days, cf. section 37(3) 4th sentence. Apart from this situation, there are no fixed limits to the duration of detention.

Detention may be applied at all stages of the procedure, however, in casu, under different provisions of the Aliens Act. For example, detention under 36 (1) 1st sentence of the Danish Aliens Act is limited to the phase where the applicant's case is still considered under entry procedures (admissibility and vis-à-vis the Dublin regulation); detention under section 36 (1) 3rd sentence of the Danish Aliens Act may only be applied for as long as the asylum seeker's case is – or is expected to be – examined under the manifestly unfounded procedure. When and if, within the seven days, it is decided to transfer the case to the so-called normal procedure, the asylum seeker shall be released (unless the continued detention can be justified under another provision of the Aliens Act).

If the court of justice in accordance with section 37(1) of the Aliens Act confirms the lawfulness and continuation of the detention decided by the police the court must determine a time-limit for continued detention. The court may extend this time-limit at a later date, but by no more than 4 weeks at a time, cf. section 37(3) 3rd sentence.

In several decisions from the Eastern High Court during 2004/2005, detention of some asylum seekers for a period of more than one year was found to be in violation with the principle of proportionality in article 5, 1, f of the European Convention on Human Rights considering the duration of the detention with the prospect of the asylum seeker eventually co-operating with the police. Following these decisions several detainees, especially Iranians, were released.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

Before 1989 detained asylum seekers were placed in ordinary prisons with criminals. In 1989, a prison solely for asylum seekers detained under the Aliens Act was build next to the asylum centre Sandholm (which mainly functions as a reception and departure centre). The purpose of building the closed centre at Sandholm was to separate asylum seekers from criminals. Quite exceptionally, the Prisons and Probation Service have a few times used one or two departments of the Sandholm prison for the housing of criminals where ordinary prisons have been overcrowded. In these cases, there has however been a structural separation between asylum seekers and criminals.

There is room for 118 asylum seekers at the Sandholm Prison.

Asylum seekers, who have served a prison sentence for criminal activities and are detained under the Aliens Act in prolongation of having served the prison sentence, should normally be kept in Sandholm Prison. If, however, the Sandholm Prison management assesses that this will involve a risk for disturbances in Sandholm Prison (e.g. where the asylum seeker has served a sentence for previous violence in the asylum centres or where the sentence concerned very serious criminal behaviour), the asylum seeker will be kept in an ordinary prison. Detainment will in those cases normally take place at the Western Prison ("Vestre Fængsel") in Copenhagen, which is mainly used for remand prisoners awaiting trial in court or inmates serving a short sentence.

Confinement and detention at the border may be used in connection with entry procedures, notably when a question of returning asylum seekers to either Sweden or Germany under the Dublin regulation. Confinement in police custody will normally only take place for a few hours and for 24 hours at the most. There is no legislation governing this. If an entry decision can not be taken within a few hours and it is deemed necessary to detain the asylum seeker, he or she will be transferred to Sandholm Prison or, in rare cases, to a local prison close to the border.

When detained in police custody, it is the police that are responsible for reception conditions, cf. section 43 of the Aliens Act.

The Danish Prison and Probation Service are responsible for reception conditions for detained asylum seekers in local prisons as well as in Sandholm Prison.

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

The Danish Refugee Council has free access to visit detained asylum seekers. Thus under section 37d(1) a detained asylum seeker "may always receive visits from a representative of the Danish Refugee Council without surveillance".

The Danish Refugee Council is acting on behalf of UNHCR in those cases.

When the police detains an asylum seeker they must always ask whether the asylum seeker wants DRC to pay a visit in the detention centre. If the asylum seeker wants to meet DRC the police send a fax to DRC with information about the detained asylum seeker, cf. section 37(4) of the Aliens Act.

In practice DRC has very good relations with detention staff and nurses, social workers etc working in the detention centre. Often these persons will contact DRC if they become aware of a detained asylum seeker who might need advice from DRC.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

If the asylum seeker is released within 72 hours and thus not have access to a court ruling on the lawfulness of the detention, he or she may lodge a complaint against the lawfulness of the police' decision to detain to the Ministry of Integration. The complaint does not suspend enforcement of any decision to refuse entry, transfer, retransfer or return the asylum seeker.

In case the asylum seeker is not released within 3 days (72 hours) of the enforcement of the deprivation of liberty, he or she will be brought before a court of justice, which will rule on the lawfulness and the continuation of the detention (section 37(1) of the Aliens Act).

In accordance with section 37(2) 1st sentence b, the decision of the lower court may be appealed to the high court who will rule on the lawfulness and continuation of the detention. Legislation does not provide any time limits ensuring a speedy judicial review

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

Regarding non-detained asylum seekers, reception conditions as regulated by the Aliens Act and regulations and instructions issued by the Danish Immigration Service apply.

In case of detention of asylum seekers at prisons, parts of the legislation and regulation, which has been drawn up for remand in custody, apply "correspondingly", cf. section 37a of the Aliens Act. The norms which are thus to be applied correspondingly are section 758(1), first to third sentences, section 758(2), section 759, section 773 to 776 and section 778 of the Administration and Justice Act, and, notably, the Ministry of Justice Regulation No. 897 of 6 November 2003 as amended on 23 January 2007 on Stay in remand prison. With regard to solitary confinement, visits and letter control, sections 37a – 37e apply

With regard to asylum seekers in police custody, section 43 of the Aliens Act apply.

The above norms of the Administration of Justice Act and the Regulation as well as of the Aliens Act have regard to:

- Circumstances surrounding the arrest;
- Solitary confinement. If less radical measures can not satisfy the purpose, the court may, at the request of the police, decide that an alien whose deprivation of liberty has been upheld by the court pursuant to section 37, cf. section 36, is to be partly or wholly excluded from communication with other inmates (solitary confinement), if this is required with a view to procurement of information necessary for deciding whether a permit pursuant to this Act can be issued, or whether the alien is lawfully staying in Denmark;
- Disciplinary punishment. In practice may be used warnings, fines, suspended punishment cell or punishment cell;
- Work. All asylum seekers are offered work within the prison. They can normally earn up to 5-600 DKR;
- Alcohol. Is forbidden;
- Property and money. With the exception of the possession of knives Sandholm Prison is not so restrictive as ordinary remand prisons on what sorts of personal property that can be handed over to the asylum seekers during their stay in detention. The can freely have money sent to them from outside;
- Leisure time. According to the norms inmates are entitled to at least one hour a day in open air (gårdtur – exercise period). In Sandholm Prison, the asylum seekers are normally entitled to be in open hour from early morning to late evening. Organised activities and exercises are scarce;
- Health care. Detainees are entitled to medical treatment and other health care. One general practitioner (15 hors a week) and two nurses (full time) work at Sandholm Prison. Newly arrived detained asylum seekers are offered a talk with a nurse. If they feel that they need a doctor, the asylum seekers may inform the staff of the prison, who will then contact the doctor or nurse. Detained asylum seekers are offered the same “necessary” medical treatment as asylum seekers in general. If deemed necessary by the doctor of the institution, inmates must be treated by a specialist outside the institution. There are no on-site psychiatric or psychological consultations. If necessary patients are transferred to a psychiatrist in Vestre Prison in Copenhagen (30 km away);

- Association with other inmates. In practice asylum seekers associate freely with other asylum seekers accommodated in the same department of the prison;
- Food and drink, e.g. consumables may, according to legislation, not be brought in by relatives or others. In practice, these rules are applied more “liberally” and relatives and others may often bring in some consumables;
- Access to telephone calls is, according to legislation, very limited and should normally be under surveillance of the prison staff. In Sandholm Prison, practice is quite different. The detained asylum seekers can thus buy telephone cards and call to anybody without restrictions and without surveillance;
- Visits. Asylum seekers may receive visitors to an extent consistent with maintenance of order and security at the place where the alien is detained. With a view to procurement of information necessary for deciding whether or not a permit can be issued or whether or not the alien is lawfully staying in Denmark, or necessary for the police to make arrangements for the alien's departure, the police may oppose visits to the person deprived of liberty, or the police may demand that such visits take place under surveillance. The person deprived of liberty always has the right to receive visits from his assigned counsel without surveillance. A person deprived of liberty who has applied for asylum may always receive visits from a representative of the Danish Refugee Council without surveillance. In practice asylum seekers are permitted to receive a little more visits than remand prisoners are;
- Letters. Asylum seekers have a right to receive and mail letters. The police may peruse the letters before receipt or mailing. The police shall hand over or mail the letters at the earliest opportunity, unless the content may interfere with the procurement of information necessary for deciding whether or not a permit pursuant to this Act can be issued or whether or not the alien is lawfully staying in Denmark, or necessary for the police to make arrangements for the alien's departure, or is inconsistent with maintenance of order and security at the place where the alien is detained.

With regard to family life, spouses without children are only accommodated together if there are room for them in the so-called family rooms. If not, they will be accommodated in a male part and a female part respectively. They can meet during the day.

Upon arrival to the closed centre/prison, the asylum seeker will receive ”Guidelines for detainees and remand prisoners” published by the Prison and Probation Service. The guidelines contain detailed information on the reception conditions in the prison as well as on the rights and duties of the detainee. The guidelines are translated into 17 languages (which are not all equally relevant to asylum seekers), namely: Arabic, Czech, Estonian, Farsi, Finnish, French, German, Greenlandic, Italian, Latvian, Lithuanian, Polish, Russian, Serbian, Spanish, Turkish and Urdu.

With regard to legal advice, the Danish Refugee Council as well as assigned counsels have free access to visit detained asylum seekers. Under section 37d(1) a detained asylum seeker "… always has the right to receive visits from his assigned counsel without surveillance…" and "… may always receive visits from a representative of the Danish Refugee Council without surveillance".

Detained asylum seekers do not automatically receive a copy of the guidelines issued by the Immigration Service or the pamphlet with information on the counselling offered by the Danish Refugee Council (DRC). This information is given to the asylum seekers at the discretion of the staff. It is however the clear impression of the DRC that the staff at Sandholm Prison has much focus on providing the latter information to the asylum seekers and often facilitates the establishment of contact with the DRC.

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

Main differences are:

- Access to work: asylum seekers in detention have access to paid jobs, whereas asylum seekers have not. On the other hand detained asylum seekers do not have access to supplementary allowances, which are "earned" by asylum seekers in accommodation centres who fulfil their contract with the operator. Detained asylum seekers may work seven hours (and sometimes more) a day earning 13.12 DKR per hour which equals at least 100 DKR per day. In contrast a supplementary allowance is 7,27 DKR per day in Phase 1 (entry procedures) and 25,43 DKR per day in Phase 2 (eligibility procedures);
- Family life: Detained couples are accommodated separately unless there are available family rooms whereas couples at the asylum centres are guaranteed accommodation together. Access to private and family life for detained asylum seekers is thus much more limited.
- Visits: Access to meet family and friends is very limited in detention whereas it is free in and outside the asylum centres.

With regard to material reception conditions and health care provisions required to ensure their subsistence, the same standards of living are applied to detained as well as to non-detained asylum seekers and must, as such, be considered in line with article 13(2) of the directive.

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

There exist no written instructions concerning decisions to apply detention to asylum seekers with special needs. The police will in every individual case consider whether detention or whether the alternative and less restrictive measures should be applied. The police will make this consideration by including all aspects pertaining to the situation of the asylum seeker and the requirements of the authorities. For example will the health of the asylum seeker be considered. In those cases it will however often be considered that treatment is available in the prison.

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

In principle section of 42g of the Aliens Act which stipulates education for all children who stay in Denmark as asylum seekers. With regard to detained children, this provision has, however, not been implemented. In practice very few minors are detained. In accordance with a parliamentary decision, children below 15 years of age, are only detained if together with parents and only if they are below school age as the latter is deemed less traumatising than being separated from their parents at that age. Minors between 15 and 18 years of age may be detained but this very rarely happens in practice.

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

The general provision in section 42g of the Aliens Act on providing education to asylum seeking children excempts children in detention, cf. section 42a(1) as modified by section 42a(3)(iv). Whereas other reception conditions of detained asylum seekers are regulated either directly in the Aliens Act or by a reference of the Aliens Act to apply relevant provisions of the Administrative Justice Act correspondingly, education of detained minors is not regulated. In practice, no education of, the however few detained minors between 15 and 18 years, is organised in Sandholm Prison.

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

Not available. Available statistics do not discern between detained asylum seekers and other aliens detained in accordance with provisions of the Aliens Act.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

The system is centralised, but shared between:
- The Danish Immigration Service (which is a directorate under the Ministry of Refugees, Immigration and Integration). Regarding the practical reception, the Immigration Service has contracted with the Danish Red Cross and two municipalities;
- The Department of Prisons and Probation (a directorate under the Ministry of Justice) concerning detainees;
- The National Commissioner (under the Ministry of Justice) concerning asylum seekers confined shortly at the border or accommodated at a nearby hostel.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)

The accommodation centres are managed by the Danish Red Cross (NGO) and two local municipalities. They are financed by the State.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?

There are eight (8) accommodation centres. Six (6) are managed by the Danish Red Cross and two (2) are managed by local municipalities.

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

No.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?

Q.39. Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

With regard to the reception provisions for which the Immigration Service under the Ministry of Refugees, Immigration and Integration, legislation does not regulate the question of guidance, monitoring and control of the system of reception conditions. The Immigration Service has a supervisory function towards the accommodation operators to whom the practical implementation of reception conditions is delegated and will in practice inspect the asylum centres regularly.

With regard to the reception conditions provided by the Prison and Probation Service to detained asylum seekers, the Parliamentary Ombudsman shall, in accordance with section 18 of the Ombudsman's Act of 1997, inspect Sandholm prison and other prisons holding asylum seekers systematically and regularly. The inspections are followed-up by reports and follow-up inspections. The Ministry of Justice is the competent ministry.

Q.39. B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?

Q.39. C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?

In accordance with a key principle of administrative procedural law concerning delegation of public duties, the Immigration Service has the responsibility to monitor and control the execution of the tasks, which in accordance with section 42a(5) 2nd sentence have been delegated to the Danish Red Cross and municipalities. The Immigration Service will in practice inspect the asylum centres regularly.

With regard to the reception conditions provided to detained asylum seekers by the Prison and Probation Service (under the Ministry of Justice), the Parliamentary Commissioner for Civil and Military Administration in Denmark (the Ombudsman) shall, in accordance with section 18 of the Ombudsman's Act of 1997, inspect prisons, including Sandholm prison and other prisons holding asylum seekers, systematically. The inspections are followed-up by reports and follow-up inspections.

Q.39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?

The Ombudsman who is charge of monitoring the prisons issue reports about the level of reception conditions based on his inspections. These reports as well as follow-up reports are public and available at the website of the Ombudsman's Office.

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

The average number of asylum seekers in 2005 was 2.950. 2.465 persons were accommodated at the centres by the end of 2005. The total number of asylum seekers who where through the system that year is not available.

Q.40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?

Regarding 2005:
According to the budget for 2005 an average of 3.585 persons were estimated to be accommodated at the centres at a price of 18.215 Euro (138.000 DKR) per person. According to the yearly accounting for 2005 an average of 2.950 persons were accommodated at the centres, and the average costs were 19.451 Euro (147.363 DKR) for each.

Regarding 2007:
The budget for the year 2007 an average of 2.033 persons are estimated at a price of 25.083 Euro (190.040 DKR) per person.

Q.40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?

Regarding 2005:
According to the budget for 2005 an average of 3.585 persons were estimated to be accommodated at the centres at a price of 18.215 Euro (138.000 DKR) per person. According to the yearly accounting for 2005 an average of 2.950 persons were accommodated at the centres, and the average costs were 19.451 Euro (147.363 DKR) for each.

Regarding 2007:
The budget for the year 2007 an average of 2.033 persons are estimated at a price of 25.083 Euro (190.040 DKR) per person.

Q.40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

All costs are paid by the central government.

Q.40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?

N/A as Denmark is not bound by directive.

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

Approximately 650

Q.41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?

No general provisions relating to the training of persons working in accommodation centres are included in the legislation. According to the annexes of the Operator Contract as well as to the internal guidelines of the Immigration Service on reception conditions with regard to persons with special needs it is however presumed that the personnel has received training within various professions. Accordingly, Nurses, teachers, pedagogues, social workers, technicians are large groups of employees.

Q.41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?

Staff is bound by the principle of confidentiality, cf. section 152 of the Penal Code.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

N/A

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

N/A (but, yes there were legislative, regulative as well as administrative norms prior to the adoption and entering into force of the Directive)

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

N/A (In any event it does not seem that the adoption of national norms after the adoption/entering into force of the directive has been influenced by the norms of the Directive)

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

N/A (and probably very little influence of directive in Denmark. At the time of adoption of the directive, it was the view of the government that the main – if not only - differences between Danish legislation and the directive considered the right to work and the right of minors to education between the age 17 and 18. None of these fields of legislation have been amended since the adoption of the Directive.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

N/A (see above comments to Q. 45).

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

N/A (and probably very little influence of directive in Denmark. At the time of adoption of the directive, it was the view of the government that the main – if not only - differences between Danish legislation and the directive considered the right to work and the right of minors to education between the age 17 and 18. None of these fields of legislation have been amended since the adoption of the Directive.

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?

The strengths of the Danish system of reception is that there is a relatively well-developed social safety net and a well organised health care system.

The weaknesses are first and foremost the very long stays at the centres, which seriously affects the mental well-being of the asylum seekers; the lack of rehabilitation of torture survivors and the fact that asylum seekers do not have access to the labour market.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answer.

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

The main legal instrument to transpose the directive on minimum standards in Estonia is Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens, ratified by the parliament 14 December 2005. It was published in the State Gazette RT I 2006, 2, declared by the President of the Republic of Estonia with decision No. 968 of 23 December 2005. The Act became into force 1. July 2006. It is a legislative act. The new amendments to the Act will be in force from 10. March 2007. The Act was introduced to harmonise several EU norms and international obligations of Estonia. According to the explanation note [329] to the draft law the purpose of the draft of the Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens is to harmonise following EU directives; 2001/55/EC, 2003/9/EC, 2003/86/EC, 2004/83/EC and to regulate the temporary protection and adjust the asylum and refugee norms. It is available now in English at the page http://www.legaltext.ee/indexen.htm .

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

Parliament issues Acts, Ministries and State Government issues regulations. Laws, including the Act, are adopted by the parliament and declared by the President of Estonia. Local Governments can issue regulations and rules applicable in the local level. Estonia is not a federal state.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

New legislation was introduced including acts and regulations.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

Estonia tends to copy the provisions from the directive although national circumstances are also taken into account. The minimum standards of reception of asylum seekers are applied since 1st July 2006. The applicants who arrived after that date are benefiting from the new legislation. There is not enough practice to assess the difficulties of the implementation.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

YES.

1) There is a problem of translation of the directive from English to Estonian language. Art 21 of the directive, which is about appeal procedure, is not properly translated and creates misunderstanding in the adoption of the norm.

2) The special conditions for reception of victims of torture and violence or other vulnerable groups except minors, are not mentioned in the law. At the same time it is possible for the asylum seeker to benefit from the Victim Support Act[330] which states that the victims of violence have to be protected. As there is no practice jet, with the new legislation with groups who need special treatment, it is difficult to predict, how the laws will be applied.

3) There is a problem of transposition of art 10§2 of the directive which requires that access to the education system shall not be postponed for more than three months for the date the application for the asylum was lodged by the minor or the minor's parents.

4) The new Act does not have provisions about schooling of asylum seekers, the right and obligation to go to school is regulated by another legislation see answer to the Q 31. There is no time limit how fast the schooling should be granted. Our general school system also applies to the asylum seeker. In practice children will be taken to the school ASAP. According to the Ministry of Interior children get into a school within three months.

Also the children have an obligation to go to school up to the age 16. After that age there is no obligation to go to school and to provide schooling. As we do not have practice with children over the age 16, it is difficult to predict the practice of a requirement of art 10 which says that member states shall not withdraw secondary education for the sole reason that the minor has reached the age of majority. After the age of 16 the schooling is purely voluntary.

The provisions of Article 10 §1 of the directive is translated in the Estonian language directive like that " Member states can give to minor children of asylum seekers and to asylum seekers who are minors access to the educational system under similar conditions as nationals of the host Member State…." Which makes the art 10§1 of the directive as an option not an obligation.

5) Article 17 is not transposed; the specific situation of disabled persons, elderly people, pregnant women, and single parents with minor children, persons who have been subjected to torture, rape or other serious forms of psychological, physical or sexual violence is not regulated. As above mentioned the person can rely on some provisions of the Victims Support Act. But in order to be clear it should be mentioned in the Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens.

6) Article 19 §4 of the directive. The confidentiality clause is generally stated in art 13 of the Act. So the confidentiality must be followed in every step in the procedure. Although is some parts of the new act the confidentiality is not very well regulated a person can usually rely on the art 13 of the Act.

7) The training of persons, working with asylum seekers, is not very well regulated. Art 17 clause 5 of the Act says "If needed a person with relevant knowledge will participate in procedural acts that are preformed with minors." It is not clear who decides when the participation of a professional, who has had a special training, participates during the procedural acts preformed with minors? There is also no general provision which state that people working with minors in the asylum procedures have to have appropriate training. And the person with special training will participate only during procedural acts preformed with minors.

Article 14§5 and Article 24§1 of the directive.

It is not stated in the law that the people working with asylum seekers must have passed a special training. In practice they have had trainings organised by government and non-governmental organisations. Also please look the previous answer.

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

No, there has no preparatory study made. There is an explanation letter explaining why it was important to design the new law.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

Neither scientific book nor article is published about the directive in Estonia.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

There is no decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive as the new Act will be enforced on 1st July 2006.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

The asylum application has to be placed to the Border Guard Administration or the Citizenship and Migration Board. Citizenship and Migration Board is the main office reviewing the asylum applications. An asylum application is an application submitted by an alien in order to be recognized as a refugee or to be recognized as a recipient of subsidiary protection and to get international protection.
The asylum application has to be placed as soon as possible. The Act also introduces new forms of protection additional to the refugee status, which are subsidiary protection and temporary protection.
Asylum applicants and applicants of residence permit on the basis of temporary protection (hereinafter applicant) shall be granted the rights and freedoms arising from the Constitution, laws and other legislation and international treaties of the Republic of Estonia, legal acts of the European Union, generally recognized norms of international law and international customary law.

After submission of an application for asylum, the person conducting the procedure without delay shall perform the following acts:

1) receipt of a formal asylum application;
2) examination of the person and his or her personal belongings;
3) deposition of personal belongings and documents;
4) identification;
5) interviewing concerning the arrival to Estonia or to the border of Estonia and the circumstances which constitute the basis for application for asylum;
6) photographing and fingerprinting of an alien who is at least 14 years of age;
7) forwarding of the data of an applicant at least 14 years of age for comparison to the central unit of Eurodac-system according to the regulation 2725/2000/EC (OJ L 316, 15.12.2000, p. 1-10), and the regulation 407/2002/EC (OJ L 062, 5.03.2002, p. 1-5) for the regulation (EC) 2725/2000
8) medical examination, if necessary;
9) DNA testing and fingerprinting of an alien less than 14 years of age, if there is no other way for identification.

The acts shall be performed even if an applicant withdraws his or her asylum application. The data that is collected within offence procedure can be used in asylum proceedings.
In the decision to fingerprint and DNA testing of an alien less than 14 years of age, the rights and interests of the alien shall be taken into consideration above all. An applicant shall be examined by a person of the same sex.
An applicant will be detained for the time of performance of the acts and he or she is required to stay in the premises assigned to him or her. If the performance of the acts continues for longer than forty-eight hours, the applicant can be detained with the permission of an administrative court. As in practice there is no primary or first reception centre the applicants are not detained.
In the case of the application submitted at the border after performance of the acts, the border guard authority shall send the applicant to the reception centre or initial reception centre and shall forward the application for asylum together with the deposited personal belongings and documents without delay to the Citizenship and Migration Board for the further proceedings.

When the application is submitted in the CMB after performance of the acts, the Citizenship and Migration Board will send the applicant to the reception centre or initial reception centre.

After the application is submitted and the person is inspected the applicant will be based on initial reception centre or reception centre subordinating to the Ministry of Social Affairs. Which is now responsible for the reception conditions like housing, money allowance etc.
The initial reception centre shall, as necessary, arrange for the following assistance to asylum applicants during asylum proceedings and in cases specified in clause 6 of §62 of this Act[331] , to applicants of residence permit on the basis of temporary protection, during temporary protection proceedings:

1) temporary accommodation;
2) food, essential clothing and other necessities and toiletries;
3) emergency care and medical examinations;
4) essential translation services;
5) information regarding their rights and duties;
6) transportation needed for the performance of acts prescribed by law;
7) provision of other essential services.

The reception centre shall, as necessary, arrange accommodation and supply of food assistance (supply of foodstuffs or provision of food), supply of essential clothing, other necessities and toiletries, and supply of money for urgent small expenses) within the limits to aliens residing in the reception centre and to aliens residing outside the reception 331 With the permission of an administrative court judge, an applicant for residence permit may be required to stay at the initial reception centre specified in §12 of the Act in the following cases: 1) the applicant for residence permit has repeatedly or seriously violated the internal procedure rules of the reception centre or the Ministry of Social Affairs; 2) the applicant's stay in the initial reception centre is necessary in the interests of the protection of national security and public order.

centre on the basis of specific clause, to the applicants during asylum procedure or temporary protection procedure.
Additionally is provided:

- emergency care and medical examinations;
- essential translation services and Estonian language instruction;
- information regarding their rights and obligations;
- transportation needed for the performance of acts prescribed by law;
- and other essential services

Person can stay in the Reception Centre until the end of the asylum procedure. When asylum is granted the person has to leave the centre, also when the final rejection decision is made the person has to leave the centre.

Q.11. Q11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

Yes, there are some differences in the reception conditions. There are different categories of protection.

1) application for asylum to get the refugee status under the Geneva Convention
2) application for temporary protection
3) application for subsidiary protection.

The unaccompanied minor has special provisions under the law. (§ 17 of the AGIPA)

Asylum applicants and applicants of residence permit on the basis of temporary protection (hereinafter applicant) shall be granted the rights and freedoms arising from the Constitution, laws and other legislation and international treaties of the Republic of Estonia, legal acts of the European Union, generally recognized norms of international law and international customs.
An alien who files a complaint to the court, regarding the decision made on the asylum application, during the term of complaint has the same rights and duties as an asylum applicant. During the court procedure an alien has the same rights and duties as an asylum applicant, if the court has stopped the compulsory enforcement of removal order.

An applicant has the right to:

1) receive information within fifteen days after the date of submitting asylum application or application for residence permit, orally and in writing in a language which he or she understands, about his or her rights and duties and consequences for not fulfilling the duties in the asylum procedure, the residence permit procedure on the basis of temporary protection and during validity of international protection;

2) be in contact with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

3) victim support services pursuant to the procedure provided in the Victim Support Act, if necessary;

4) state legal aid pursuant to the procedure provided in the State Legal Aid Act;

5) to appeal to the court if their rights and freedoms are violated.

An asylum applicant has a right to have a representative during asylum proceedings, except upon provision of explanations or performance of other procedural acts which, arising from their nature must be carried out personally. This right is not provided for the applicant of the temporary protection. Asylum applicants may contract employment in Estonia if the Citizenship and Migration Board within one year after the date of submitting asylum application has not made a decision, independent of asylum applicants or if an asylum applicant has protested the rejection of asylum application in the court, on the condition that employment does not hinder the asylum proceeding, court proceeding or execution of a decision. This right is not provided for the applicant of the temporary protection. Also the right to work is granted, after one year of application submitted, only to the asylum applicant who applies for the refugee status or for the subsidiary protection.

Border procedure

There is a special procedure at the border.[332] The border guards have to forward the application, the personal belongings to the CMB and take the applicant to the Reception Centre or to the initial reception centre. Border guards have a right to send the applicant back from the border (accelerated procedure) in cases mentioned in § 20 1) and 2) of the Act.

The reasons are following:

1) another country can be considered the initial first country for asylum, i.e. asylum or other protection has been provided to the applicant in another country, and such protection is still accessible to the applicant;

2) the country of origin of the applicant can be considered as a safe country; and in §21 1) subsection 1) and 2) which states the cases for rejection of asylum application.

The cases when the asylum application can be rejected (non admissible) are following:

1) Another country is responsible for the review of the application for asylum. According to an international agreement or regulation 343/2003/EC of the Council of the European Union that specifies the criteria and mechanisms for designating the member state that shall be responsible for the process of reviewing an application for asylum submitted in any member state by a third country national (EC 050, 25.02.2003, p. 1–10);

2) The applicant has arrived to Estonia through a country which can be considered as a safe country. This procedure at the border can be considered as accelerated procedure although it is not named like this.

The decisions made under above mentioned procedure can be appealed to the Administrative Court although appealing to the court will not stop the expulsion automatically.
§21 section 4 says that an alien shall be expelled from Estonia to a safe country on the basis of the decision to reject his or her application for asylum made on the basis of clauses 1) and 2) of §21. Although it is questionable how in practice a person can appeal, if he is outside of Estonia.

The appeal on an asylum decision does not have a suspensive effect. If the application is rejected the person has to submit together with the appeal on the decision another appeal to stop the enforcement of the precept to leave Estonia. If he does not appeal, the precept to leave can be enforced automatically.
§ 27 of the Act regulate the Dublin II cases. If it is clear that another state is responsible for the examination of the asylum claim, the person will be sent out without precept to leave or court order to the country where the asylum application must be examined.
Border guards are involved in the admissibility procedure and it is regulated in §20 and §21of the Act. Clearly ungrounded application is specified in §20 of the AGIPA.
Application for asylum shall be deemed to be clearly unfounded if:
1) another country can be considered the initial country for asylum, i.e. asylum or other protection has been accorded to the applicant in another country, and such protection is still accessible to the applicant;
2) the country of origin of the applicant can be considered as a safe country;
3) the applicant holds a residence permit in Estonia;
4) the applicant has been refused from giving an asylum on the basis of this Act or the application has been rejected on the basis of this Act and the applicant has not produced any new essential evidence of which the applicant was unaware during previous asylum proceedings;
5) the applicant has submitted the application for asylum under a false name or has destroyed, damaged or failed to present a document or other evidence of essential importance to the processing of his or her application for asylum, or has presented, without good reason, falsified documents or other false evidence;
6) the applicant has knowingly provided incorrect information or explanations upon the processing of his or her application for asylum, or has knowingly failed to provide information or explanations of essential importance to the processing of his or her application for asylum;

7) the applicant has submitted the application for asylum in order to avoid the enforcement of return, expulsion or extradition procedure, provided that earlier application for asylum had been possible;
8) the applicant has knowingly ignored the duties provided in this Act, has refused or is refusing from photographing and fingerprinting or DNA-testing or fails to comply with surveillance measures;
9) the applicant's actual objective is to settle in Estonia for other reasons, including to contract employment or improve his or her living conditions;
10) the applicant is unable to provide credible evidence proving that his or her fear of persecution is well-founded;
11) the applicant's explanations are inconsistent, conflicting, improbable or lacking in circumstantial or personal details;
12) clearly the applicant cannot be considered a refugee according to the law;
13) the applicant has submitted a new application for asylum with new personal data;
14) for no good reason the applicant had not submitted an application, provided that earlier application for asylum had been possible;
15) the applicant has not followed, without good reason, the duties specified in clauses (2) 1-3), 10) of section 11 of this Act and / or clause (1) in section 23 of this Act;
16) the applicant has arrived to Estonia illegally and has not contacted the Citizenship and Migration Board and / or has not submitted the application for asylum as soon as possible;
17) the applicant poses a threat to national security or public order or has been deported from Estonia under these circumstances;
18) the application of a parent of a minor applicant has been rejected;
19) the minor applicant independently submits an application for asylum that has already been submitted by his or her legal representative.

Circumstances excluding recognition as refugee or recipient of subsidiary protection are regulated in §22.

An alien shall not be recognized as refugee if:
1) article 1 (D) of the Geneva Convention applies to him or her;
2) he or she holds a permanent residence permit in Estonia;
3) there is good reason to believe that he or she has committed crime against peace or humanity or war crime specified in international legal acts;

4) there is good reason to believe that he or she has committed serious apolitical offence before entry to Estonia;
5) there is good reason to believe that he or she is guilty of committing an act of performance that is contrary to the goals and principles of the United Nations.
A serious apolitical offence specified in clause (1) 4) of this section[333] is among other an especially brutal act of performance, that allegedly proceeded from political reasons. An alien shall not be recognized as a recipient of subsidiary protection if:
1) there is good reason to believe that he or she has committed crime against peace or humanity or war crime specified in international legal acts;
2) there is good reason to believe that he or she has committed serious crime;
3) there is good reason to believe that he or she is guilty of committing an act of performance that is contrary to the goals and principles of the United Nations;
4) there is good reason to believe that he or she poses a threat to national security or public order;
5) he or she has left the country of origin with regard to committing an act other than specified in clauses 1)-4) of this section that result in the punishment of loss of freedom.
The exclusion clauses shall be applied to an alien who in any way took part in the following acts:

- he or she has committed crime against peace or humanity or war crime specified in international legal acts
- he or she has committed serious apolitical offence before entry to Estonia;
- he or she is guilty of committing an act of performance that is contrary to the goals and principles of the United Nations
- he or she has committed serious crime or that he or she poses a threat to national security or public order

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

The applicants have to stay in the reception centre in some cases they can be placed to the initial reception centre. In practice the initial reception centre does not exists so the asylum seekers will be sent to the Illuka Reception Centre. The person can be detained in the initial reception centre for 48 hours. In practice there is no initial reception centre. The Reception Centres are responsible for providing reception conditions.
According to the §32 of the AGIPA:

[333] there is good reason to believe that he or she has committed serious apolitical offence before entry to Estonia.

An applicant may temporarily stay in the office of the Citizenship and Migration Board, if necessary for the performance of acts of the asylum proceedings.
With the permission of an administrative court judge, an applicant may be required to stay at the initial reception centre after 48 hours in following cases:
1) the identity of the applicant has not been not ascertained, including in the case where the applicant does not co-operate in the identification or hinders identification;
2) for establishing circumstances relevant to the asylum proceedings if the applicant does not co-operate in establishment of the circumstances or hinders the establishment thereof;
3) there is good reason to believe that the applicant has committed a serious criminal offence in a foreign state;
4) the applicant has repeatedly or seriously violated the internal procedure rules of the reception centre;
5) the applicant fails to comply with the surveillance measures applied with respect to him or her, or the applicant fails to perform other duties provided by this Act;
6) the applicant's stay in the initial reception centre is necessary in the interests of the protection of national security and public order.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

Monetary benefits are regulated in §36 of the AGIPA. Additionally reception centre provides housing and access to medical treatment for all asylum seekers.
The monetary benefit has to cover the minimum subsistence level of an applicant. The minimum subsistence level in Estonia is in 2007, 900 Estonian kroon (57 EUR) in a month and is not sufficient to manage. The monetary benefit paid to an applicant is the amount of subsistence limit established by the Government on the basis of the minimum consumption. The reception centre can either give food or to pay the money. Usually the money is given.

An asylum seeker who is working or has other means for survival does not get the monetary benefits or other benefits provided by the reception centre, except housing. Every second family member gets 80% of the amount that is provided to the applicant. Additionally the applicant can receive 10% of the money that is the minimum subsistence level in Estonia, for small expenses. It is 6 Euros.

The reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for national or legally residing aliens. When the applicant gets a positive decision he or she also gets the access to the general social aid system, but in the case of and asylum seeker it is complicated, as he or she has to have a registered place of living in order to access the social aid. Social aid is provided by the local municipality. The placement of a refugee to the local municipality is organised by the Ministry of Social Affairs.

For the 57 EUR the asylum seekers have to buy food, as in practice they have to cook by themselves. In practice the hygiene products, other goods of first need are provided additionally to the money. Sometimes second hand clothes are provided by the Reception Centre. If the person is in a real need of some clothes or shoes, the individual decision will be made by the director of the reception centre and new clothes and shoes will be bought. Dishes, washing powder, blankets, sheets, towels are provided by the reception centre. The asylum seekers have to do their laundry and keep the rooms and kitchen tidy by themselves.

According to the Illuka Reception Centre General Regulation[334] art 9
The obligations of the Centre is to:

1. organise accommodation of a foreigner during the initial interview and during the accelerated procedure[335]
2. accommodate the asylum seeker during the asylum procedure
3. organise catering or provide food products of a foreigner during the initial interview and during the accelerated procedure
4. provide essential clothing and other initial necessities and hygiene products
5. provide money for miscellaneous expenses[336] and according to the asylum seekers wish, catering or to provide food products and essential clothing, will be changed to the monetary benefit. [337]
6. organise emergency aid and checking of a health conditions
7. organise necessary translation
8. organise Estonian language courses to the asylum seekers
9. inform asylum seekers about their rights and obligations
10. provide other necessary services

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if

[334] Illuka Varjupaigataotlejate Vastuvõtukeskuse põhimääruse kinnitamine, 1.September, 1998 regulation no 47 RT 1998, 273/274, 1134
[335] As we do not have in practice initial reception centre the persons who does not have a status of asylum seeker yet can be placed also to the reception centre.
[336] The money of missallanious expenses is 90 EEK approx 6 EUR per month.
[337] This moneytary benefit is totally 57 EUR and the practice is that the asylum seekers take money and not the food .

necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

The asylum seekers get the same amount of monetary benefit that the nationals in Estonia. Nevertheless the amount is not sufficient to manage and ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence. Also the fact, that asylum seekers do not have a social network of people who could help them as the local nationals have, should be taken account. The fixed minimum salary in Estonia is 3000 kroons (192 EUR) per month. The unemployment benefit is 64 EUR per month.

In practice there is no initial reception centre in Estonia so there is nothing to assess. Please look also at answers given to the question no 33.

Since 2007 the official minimum level of survival in Estonia is 57 EUR per month. In practice it is not normal. It is difficult to survive with 57 EUR per month in Estonia. At the same time there is no discrimination of asylum seekers in this matter, as Estonian nationals are treated in the same way.

Additionally one can hear claims that asylum seekers have in fact even better treatment as they do not need to pay for housing, they get toothpaste, shampoo, washing powder etc. from the government, which is not a case of a national in the same situation. Nationals can claim for housing benefits if their income is less than 57 EUR, but also not for the full amount to be paid by the local municipality. The amount reimbursed depends from the size of the apartment one lives etc. The application of social benefits is a complicated system and is not directly related to asylum seekers.

The reception conditions does not ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicant, because the provided money is not sufficient, it is not healthy to eat bread and water every day, but it can be claimed that 57 EUR in a month may ensure subsistence.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. Q 13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

There is a distinction between asylum applicant who applies for refugee status and the person in need of other kind of international protection. Special rules apply to the temporary protection. Refugee is the one who satisfies the specific criteria under Geneva Convention. According to the Article 3 AGIPA it is enough to submit asylum application that covers the application for the refugee status and for the subsidiary protection. Article

4 of AGIPA gives a definition of a refugee that is the Geneva Convention definition of a refugee.

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

The scope of application of reception conditions is extended to refugees, people in need of subsidiary protection and temporary protection.
Temporary protection is provided for one year and he or she gets the living permit. The reception conditions are mainly the same. The right for a lawyer is not explicitly written to the law in the case of temporary protection. As there is no practice it cannot be said how the law will be interpreted in that case.

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

Estonia does not accept diplomatic or territorial asylum request.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Yes. The person has to submit the asylum application and this gives him a right for reception conditions. When a person is detained because of previous criminal or administrative offence, he has to carry the punishment to the end, before he or she can be transferred to the reception centre.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

According to the previous practice the status of an asylum seeker is maintained until all means of appeals are used and the expulsion is enforced.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

The person who has received temporary protection has a right to submit an asylum application.[338]
Both options subsidiary protection and asylum is reviewed in the same process, so the person cannot apply for asylum again and again. If there is a negative decision on asylum and on subsidiary protection the person is subject to be returned to his country of origin or legal stay. There is a clause in the law that second asylum application will be rejected.

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Yes, an asylum seeker has a right to receive information on his or her rights and obligations and the consequences for not fulfilling the duties in the asylum procedure, the residence permit procedure on the basis of temporary protection and during validity of international protection, in the asylum procedures within 15 days in writing and in oral in the language he or she understands.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

The information is provided in writing and also orally. There might be problems with exotic languages, as there are not enough translators in Estonia to provide translations. And many languages are not covered. The asylum seeker gets a leaflet where his rights and obligations are shortly explained. For example right to a lawyer, right to contact UNHCR, obligation to stay in the reception centre, tell the truth, and obey the laws of Estonia etc. Giving false information about asylum claim and identity can be a reason for rejecting the asylum claim. There are some languages in which the leaflets are available.

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

Yes. Russian and English are the mostly used languages. Translators form abroad are used in case there are no language speakers in Estonia.

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

[338] §69 of the AGIPA

Yes, usually the deadline is respected. In cases there is no translator available the information might reach the applicant later than 15 days. If the applicant understands Russian or English, the information is available orally and in writing.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

There is a list of NGOs and organizations on the web site of the Citizenship and Migration Board, which can assist asylum applicants. The contact details of appropriate NGOs are also provided during the initial interview and at the reception centre. There is no legal provision that they should get the information about the NGOs working in the field. The right to contact UNHCR is explicitly written in the law.
Because of low number of human rights NGOs working in Estonia in the given field, it is possible to predict that the list is comprehensive. The information concerning health care is insufficient. The health care is organised through the Reception Centre. The information about health care is given only orally. The Reception Centre has contracts with therapists from Jõhvi and Tallinn. The NGO-s do not provide health care.

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Information about healthcare is provided only orally, information about legal assistance possibilities orally and also in written.

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

In general the information is available in English and Russian. If possible the translation to other languages is provided.

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

In Estonia not many NGO-s are active. There is one NGO that provides legal counselling at the moment. There is one NGO designing integration plan for asylum seekers and one organization keeping records on the legislative changes in the field. The free legal counselling of asylum seekers depends if the NGO gets some funding from some projects or not. Sometimes there are periods when no NGO is providing legal counselling.

According to the law it is also possible to get free legal aid but in practice it is not effective as the lawyers do not have training on asylum law.

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

Asylum seeker gets a document called certificate of an asylum seeker.[339] It is not a proof of identity under the law of Identity Documents Act. This creates a major problem. For example to receive post or money sent to them from the post office, to open a bank account etc. it is not possible to use these certificates for these actions. The document has a picture and a name, birthdates and the time until when it is valid. It just certifies the status of an asylum seeker and gives a right to stay in Estonia.

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

Yes, the document is not issued when the procedure of admission to the asylum procedure is going on. Which means that in the case the person is returned from the border as inadmissible case the document of an asylum seeker is not issued and the person does not have an access to the reception conditions.

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

Valid until declared null or void or the forced return realised. AGIPA art 51 (3), art 51 (4)

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[340]?

There have been cases when the deadline of the delivery of the document has been violated and person has received the document only after couple of weeks.[341] The document has to be issued within 3 days. AGIPA article 51.

[339] § 51 of the Act

[341] Arjupin, Andrei, Practical contribution to the comparative study done by the Odysseus network for the European Commission on the implementation of the Directive on reception conditions, 17.05.2006

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

No travel document is provided. As the directive says Member States may provide a travel document, it shows that it is not an mandatory provision and Estonia is not issuing such documents. According to the art 67 of the Act CMB gives temporary travel permission to a person who has to be transported to another EU member state.

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

Yes, there is a separate system of registration of asylum seekers and it is separate from the registration of aliens. The information what is the content of the database is not available for the public.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers :

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Yes, asylum seeker is free to move on the entire territory of Estonia, but they have to stay in the reception centre from 22.00-7.00 during the night. As the centre is in the remote area and there is very limited bus connection from the nearest village it practically makes impossible to go far from the centre.

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

According to the general principle the asylum seekers have to stay in the Reception Centre. If it is because of the health reasons the asylum seeker can get a permission to stay in another place. Or he or she has enough money to live outside the reception centre or Estonian citizen or a person with a residence permit covers his living expenses outside of the Reception Centre.

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

There is only one Reception Centre in Estonia so all asylum seekers will be placed there. In case he or she has enough money to live outside the reception centre or Estonian citizen or a person with a residence permit covers his living outside of the Reception Centre the asylum seeker can ask a permission to live outside of the Reception Centre.

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)

Until now there have been less asylum seekers than the capacity of Estonia to accept is. There are 35 places in the reception centre. The Ministry of Social Affairs has contracts with private accommodation providers in order to place the asylum seekers in other places, in case of emergency.

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

The asylum seeker is required to stay in the initial reception centre around the clock while they are required to stay in the reception centre only during night-time. The applicant has to apply to the CMB with an application to get a permission to stay outside of the reception centre. He or she must have a place to live and must have financial means to cover his expenses. She has to register herself and usually the permission is given.

Q.21. Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Yes, there are provisions where the reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions can happen. They are regulated in §11 and §12 of AGIPA.
Art 11 section 4) of AGIPA says: "If an asylum applicant had at the time when he or she used the services specified in clauses (2) 1-7) of section 12 of the Act, except emergency care, enough financial resources to cover these services, he or she is required to compensate the according costs."
The initial reception centre shall, as necessary, arrange assistance to asylum applicants during asylum proceedings and in cases specified in clause 6) of AGIPA Article 62 to applicants of residence permit on the basis of temporary protection during temporary protection proceedings. The necessity is evaluated by the director of the reception centre.

The services and food that should be reimbursed and that are considered necessary according to art 12 are:
1) accommodation;
2) supply of foodstuffs or provision of food, supply of essential clothing, other necessities and toiletries, and supply of money for urgent small expenditures within the limits;
3) medical examinations;
4) essential translation services and Estonian language instruction;
5) information regarding their rights and duties;
6) transportation needed for the performance of acts prescribed by law;
7) provision of other essential services
When a person has enough financial resources to cover these services, he or she is required to compensate the according costs. The necessity is evaluated by the reception centre.

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice?

The asylum application has to be submitted as soon as possible. There has been no known practice were the asylum claim is rejected because of late application.

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

When the rights of an asylum seeker are violated, the asylum seeker has a possibility to file an administrative claim, under general rules either to the Ministry of Social Affairs or to the Administrative court. It is not specified in the law who will make the decisions of withdrawal of the reception conditions. If it is related to the reception conditions in the Reception Centre the director of the Centre is responsible and can make decisions. The Centre subordinates to the Ministry of Social Affairs, which has to control the situation in the Reception Centre.

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the document attached to our sending)?

Generally it should be respected. The subsidiary protection clause is introduced to the Estonian legislation, which contains the protection under European Convention of Human Rights. Refugee is not sent back to the country where his or her life is under threat.[342] The access to emergency healthcare is organised by the reception centre. There is no practice about how the access to the emergency healthcare is organised for those in the detention centres.

Q.21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome?

No appeals or decisions yet as the law was enforced on 1st July 2006.

Q.22. Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

It will be the Administrative Court or Ministry of Social Affairs in case the reception conditions are violated by the Reception Centre. All the decisions made by the Citizen and Migration Board can be appealed in the Administrative Court. If the Administrative Court agrees with the applicant the court send the case back to the CMB for a review and for making a new decision. The Administrative Court cannot grant asylum or subsidiary protection. Therefore it can be said that the appeal system does not guarantee that a person can get asylum after court decision. The case is before the judge but the judge cannot decide if the person must get international protection or not.

The time for appeal is written in the decision and as the decision is translated orally into the language the person understands. He or she will get the information about appealing possibilities orally at the time the decision is delivered.
On the information leaflets that are given to the asylum seekers it is not mentioned that he or she has a right to appeal also on reception conditions. The right of an appeal is more generally explained. The appeal against the refusal of protection should be placed within 10 days of the reception of the decision.

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

According to The Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens § 10 an asylum seeker has a right to legal aid guaranteed by the state pursuant to the procedure provided for in the State Legal Aid Act. According to the State Legal Aid Act in Estonia its purpose is to ensure the timely and sufficient availability of competent and reliable legal services to all persons.[343] According to the State Legal Aid Act §6 a natural person may receive state legal aid if the person is unable to pay for competent legal services due to his or her financial situation at the time the person is in need of legal aid or is able to pay for legal services only partially or in instalments or whose financial situation does not allow meeting basic subsistence needs after paying for legal services.
§10 of the State Legal Aid Act says: "An application for state legal aid in court proceedings as a party to a proceeding in civil, administrative or misdemeanour matters shall be submitted to the court conducting proceedings in the matter or the court whose jurisdiction would include conducting proceedings in the matter."
If an applicant wishes to receive state legal aid for the preparation of a statement of claim or a petition in proceedings on petition or for the preparation of an appeal in administrative court proceedings or proceedings regarding a misdemeanour matter, he or she shall submit an application to the court whose jurisdiction includes hearing the action or reviewing the petition in proceedings on petition or the appeal.
An application for state legal aid in the form of representation in pre-trial proceedings in a civil matter, in administrative proceedings or extrajudicial proceedings in a misdemeanour matter, preparation of a legal document or other legal counselling or representation shall be submitted to the county or city court of the applicant's residence or seat or of the presumed location of provision of legal services. If an applicant for state legal aid has no residence in Estonia, he or she may submit an application to the county or city court in the territorial jurisdiction of which he or she is staying.
An application for state legal aid in the form of representation in enforcement proceedings shall be submitted to the court competent to process an appeal against the activities of a bailiff conducting enforcement proceedings.

In reality it is very difficult to get the free legal help in order to submit the appeal. The problems are following:
1) the appeal has to be made already in ten days, and

2) the person has to ask for the free legal advice from the court, as the judge can decide if the free legal help is needed or not.
Additionally the person has to present the legal arguments against the decision to the court together with the request for free legal counselling. All this has to be done in Estonian language. Also Estonian practicing lawyers are not trained in refugee law, there are very few who have had a chance to have a law course on refugee law.

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

No, not yet as the new legislation became into force on 1st July 2006. And the number of asylum seekers is very low.

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

Ministry of Social Affairs has to monitor the work of the Reception Centre. It is also possible to appeal to Chancellor of Justice who also acts like Ombudsman in Estonia. Because Illuka reception centre is under the Ministry of Social Affairs, the asylum seekers have the right to submit a complaint regarding reception conditions to the Ministry of Social Affairs. In addition the asylum seekers always have the right to turn to the court or ask for an opinion from the Chancellor of Justice.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

Article 7 of AGIPA regulates who is considered to be a family member of an asylum seeker. It is same as stated in art (2) of the directive. Families can live together. There is one family room in the reception centre.
A family member of an asylum applicant is:

1) a spouse of the applicant;
2) an unmarried and minor child, including adopted child of the applicant;
3) an unmarried and minor child, including adopted child of the applicant and the spouse.

A family member of a refugee and a recipient of subsidiary protection is:

1) a spouse;

2) an unmarried minor child, including adopted child of the applicant and the spouse;
3) a ward and a supported unmarried minor child, including adopted child of the applicant or the spouse. In a case of shared guardianship the approval of a sharing guardian is needed;
4) an unmarried adult child of the applicant or the spouse, if due to the state of health or disability of the child he or she is unable to cope independently;
5) a parent or a grandparent under the support of the applicant or the spouse, if the country of origin does not pay any subsidy related to other family ties.

A family member of an unaccompanied minor refugee and an unaccompanied minor recipient of subsidiary protection is:
1) his or her parent;
2) his or her guardian or other family member if he or she has no parents or they cannot be found, except in case it would be in conflict with the rights and interests of a minor.

A family member of a recipient of temporary protection is:
1) his or her spouse;
2) his/her or his/her spouse's unmarried and minor child, including adopted child;
3) a close relative who is not specified in clauses 1) and 2) of this section and who lived with him and was dependent of him in the country of origin.

The family members who are specified in this act are considered family in case the family existed in the country of origin, including if marriage was contracted before the arrival to Estonia. An unmarried partner is considered not to be a family member.

Q.24. Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

There is only one reception centre for asylum seekers in Estonia – Illuka reception centre for asylum seekers. The centre can accommodate a maximum of 35 persons. No private housing is available at the moment. In case of mass influx the housing may be organised in private houses or apartments.

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers? Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

35 places plus 7 places in the CMB premises.

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?

There have been less applicants than the places available. Until now it is sufficient.

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

In urgent cases the accommodation is rented from private accommodation providers.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

No. According to the law during asylum proceedings the applicant as a rule has to live in the reception centre.

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

No. The limit is connected with the time of examination of the application. The applicant looses the right for accommodation upon receiving the decision on his or her asylum application. In practice, however, the Illuka reception centre permitted the applicant to stay in the reception centre until the final solution of the asylum case. Under the new Act person who gets the positive answer can stay in the Reception Centre until the local municipality is found where he or she can settle. In case the applicant refuses to go to the municipality he can stay in the reception centre only for two months after receiving the positive answer on his application.

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

Illuka Reception Centre for asylum seekers has its internal procedure rules for asylum applicants. There is a Statute of the Illuka Reception Centre adopted by the regulation of the Ministry on Social Affairs of 01 September 1998 nr 47. Also, the director of the Illuka Reception Centre has issued an internal regulation by the decision of 27 December 2002 nr 73. The general rules come from legal acts. There is only one public reception centre in Estonia.

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision*?* Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

The rules for asylum seekers include a provision called "Violation of Rules", which says: „Institutions of legal protection are notified of all violations that are in contradiction to the law or cause substantial property damage. Applicants undertake to comply with these rules by signing the relevant supplementary confirmation." - therefore the rules do not foresee any sanctions.
The rules for asylum seekers also include the following point.
"An Applicant who has been absent from the Centre for more than one day (24 hours) and whose whereabouts are unknown is declared 'wanted' and the relevant notification submitted to the (immigration) authorities. If an Applicant destroys, looses or damages the Centre's property, he/she is obliged to compensate damage caused."
In case of severe disturbance or forbidden objects/substance, the reception centre turns to police who decides the designation of punishment. As a principal rule there is a possibility to appeal to the Ministry of Social Affairs or to the court or to the Legal Chancellor although it is not explicitly written in the legislation.

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

No.

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

The internal procedure rules of Illuka Reception Centre– Rules for Asylum Applicants foresee among others the following:

- Applicants prepare their own meals; applicants are required to clean up after preparing food.
- Applicants are required to: - wash their bed linen and clean their room regularly - help and keep common rooms clean and tidy - comply with the work and time schedules of the Centre - participate in activities organized by the Centre.

There is no possibility to do real work in the reception centre. The applicants are involved in maintenance work in the reception centre on voluntary basis only.
Working is not allowed for the asylum seekers. According to the new Act after the 12 months of application submitted the asylum seeker can get a permission to work. According to Employment Services and Benefits Act § 3 an asylum seeker has the right to employment services and benefits lied down in this Act in the terms of the Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens.

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

The asylum seekers can contact via email or make a call, send a letter. There is internet available in the Reception Centre to asylum seekers. Although there might be a practical problem to be in contact with NGOs, UNHCR etc. As the reception centre situates very far from the cities and there is only 3 times per week the bus connection to the closest village.

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

There are no restrictions to communicate except the financial means. They might have no money to make a call. The uncomfortable location of the Illuka Reception Centre (almost on the border with Russia, in the forest, bad transportation connection, bus is going there three times per week) plays as a certain hindrance for those, who want to visit the centre. There is no UNHCR representative in Estonia. The UNHCR regional Stockholm office covers also Estonia which makes it very difficult for the asylum seeker to contact someone from the UNHCR. There is internet connection in the Illuka reception centre.

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

The director of the reception centre makes a decision to limit access to asylum seekers by taking into account the current situation. Therefore for security reasons access might be limited. It has not happened yet.

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

The new law provides possibility to check the condition of health of an applicant in case it is necessary and to take examples of DNA.[344] No special provisions concerning a HIV test. Medical screening is organised by the reception centre in cases of complaints. It is free to asylum applicants. HIV test is not mandatory.

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Normally, the person that requires a medical aid is transported to the nearest doctor or sometimes the doctor visits the Reception Centre. Also the ambulance can be called. Reception Centre provides the right to medical aid only in emergency cases. The fact, what is an emergency case, is not specified. (AGIPA art 12)

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?

Usually the asylum seekers go to see the doctor. There are agreements with therapists in Jõhvi (Jõhvi is the closest city to the reception centre about 50 km form the Centre) and Tallinn who are contacted in case of emergency. Medical treatment is free for the asylum seeker. The law provides only free emergency help.

Q.28. Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

One year after submitting the asylum application the asylum seeker gets a right to work. Before that he or she is not allowed to work. The permission to work does not grant a chance to work. There is no regulation available that should be according to AGIPA art 10 [1] (5). It is in the legislative process but have not been agreed how it should be proceeded as work permit is inserted to the ID card. Asylum seekers cannot have ID card because their identity is not clear and it is not possible to issue them personal code.

[344] §15 of the Act

Therefore the access to work in not guaranteed as there is no procedure for applying for a work permit for an asylum seeker.

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

No experience yet as the law was enforced on 1st July 2006. The Act §10 section 4 says that the applicant has a right to work if the CMB after one year of submitting the application has not made a decision. Under the Alien Act all foreigners who want to work in Estonia must ask for the work permit so probably this clause will apply also for the asylum seekers who get the right to work.

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

There is a clause in the Aliens Act that EU citizens must be offered first the job and then the third country nationals and asylum seekers can take the position.
No, there are no specific rules designed for the asylum seekers. They will be probably treated as any other third country national who wants to work in Estonia. Under these general rules there are no restrictions on time limit, they are the same for Estonian citizens. Bearing in mind that the Reception Centre is in the remote area 220 km away from the capital and 50 km away from the nearest city and there is bus connection to the nearest village where the Reception Centre situates only tree times per week and the unemployment is the highest in the region it is very unlikely that the asylum seekers who are obliged to live in that Reception Centre can find a job.

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Asylum seekers will be in the same position with the third country nationals. EU and EEA citizens are in priority. Only when there is no Estonian citizen or EU, EEA citizen to take the employment position the asylum seekers and third country nationals have a chance to apply for the position.

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

No access before 12 months as it depends from the right to access the labour market. The access to vocational training is not regulated by the Act. It is of course disputable if vocational training is considered as work or part of education. As it is not clearly regulated and we do not have yet practice in that, it is in fact difficult to answer. It might be reasonable to offer vocational training through NGO-s and then it should be seen as part of education. The Labour Office offers vocational training only to those who have a right to work, and in order to be able to compete in the labour market, need additional training.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

Yes, they are more generous. Before the directive, asylum seekers did not have a possibility to work at all.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

Yes. Asylum seekers have to contribute to their reception when they work. They do not get the financial benefits. Normally, asylum seekers are accommodated at the special reception centre and they receive money allowance only to cover small personal needs. According to the new law § 11 (4), the applicant will be obliged to cover all expenses including for accommodation in case he or she possess enough financial means.
Asylum seekers have to cover the cost of:
1) accommodation;
2) supply of foodstuffs or provision of food, supply of essential clothing, other necessities and toiletries, and supply of money for urgent small expenses within the limits set out in clause 5) of §36 of the Act to aliens residing in the reception centre and to aliens residing outside the reception centre on the basis of § 34 (2) 3) or §62 (2) 3) thereto;
3) medical examinations;
4) essential translation services and Estonian language instruction

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30.

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

Only minors have special provisions in the Act no other categories of persons with special needs are considered in the directive. Art 17 of the directive is not regulated by the Act. It can be disputed if the Victims Support Act regulates also the special needs of asylum seekers.

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

As there are no special provisions regarding different categories of persons with special needs (except unaccompanied minors) the art 13 §2 and 16 §4 and 17 of the directive are not respected.

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

No provisions, which means they are not identified and there are no rules regarding this. § 6 of the Act give a definition of an accompanied minor. During the first interview or at the time of applying for asylum, the age will be identified. When there is a dispute about the age, the medical expertise will be done to the person who claims to be a minor, but the doubt about his or her age has risen. In practice the special needs of asylum applicants are tried to be identified during the first interview among the asylum applicant and social worker.

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

There are no provisions about the persons with special needs. In principal all asylum applicants have access to necessary medical assistance. Victims of torture and violence can seek benefit from the Victim Support Act if they are identified. There is no procedure how to identify the victims.
There have been no cases of persons who are mentally ill. There have been some doubts of some persons being mentally ill, but they were not identified.
Problems that rise from stress are treated by the normal doctor. The director of the reception centre can arrange psychologist to the reception centre or if the doctor prescribes the special treatment, the specialist will be visited. But as there is no practice in this area it is not possible to answer the question about the treatment practice in the area of mental health care.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

Minor is a person under age of 18. An unaccompanied minor alien is an alien under age of 18, who arrives or has arrived in Estonia without a parent or a guardian or who is left without parental care while residing in Estonia.

An unaccompanied minor can independently perform the acts specified in this Act, if he or she shall likely become an adult before the decision of the Citizenship and Migration Board with regard to the asylum application or if the unaccompanied minor is or has been married.

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

All children at the age of 7-17 are obliged to go to school in Estonia. This applies also to asylum seekers. There is no schooling (except Estonian language courses) provided in the accommodation centre. The schooling is similar to the conditions for nationals. Asylum seeker child who is living in the accommodation centre has to go to the closest school which is Illuka primary school. (This is the current practice)

Art 8 from the Education Act (EV Haridusseadus), [345] and also Secondary and Gymnasium Act (Põhikooli ja Gümnaasiumiseadus)states the obligation to go to school for all the children who are between age 7-17. Schooling can be done at home. All foreigners and stateless children are obliged to go to school, except the children of representatives of the foreign states. Art § 36 of the Education Act give a right for foreigners according to the Estonian legislation and the international contracts.

Elementary school is for the forms 1-4 (age 7-10) and primary school forms 4-9. Every child who is under 17 years old is obliged to go to school. This obligation applies to all residents in Estonia including non-citizens and stateless persons and can be extended to asylum seekers. After age of 17 a child can decide if he or she wants to study in the secondary school (10-12 form) or go to work or start to study in technical college, art school, etc. After that time there is no obligation to go to school. But at the same time there is no obligation of the state too to provide schooling. Estonia does not have a practice jet with elder children. The children who went to school were placed in the primary school. Estonia has Russian speaking and Estonian speaking schools.

The obligation to go to school is regulated also by Secondary School and Gymnasium Act (Põhikooli ja Gümnaasiumi seadus) [346]
Article 18 of the Education Act states that parents can choose the school, where to put the child, if there is free space in the school. Article 19 of the Education Act says that a school is obliged to provide learning possibilities to every child who is obliged to go to school and who lives in its service providing territory. The territory will be located by the local municipality.
No there is no bus to Illuka School every day but the usual practice was that the children were taken to the school by the reception centre. The reception centre was responsible for organizing the transportation.
The secondary school is further, in the closest city called Jõhvi, which is about 50 km from the Reception Centre.
There are no specific rules for schooling created for asylum seekers in the relevant laws. The schooling laws talk about foreigners and therefore should be applied also for the asylum seekers.

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

It is difficult to say, there are no special provisions in the law how quickly the schooling should be organised. In practice the children will go to school as soon as possible.

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

The specific education is not regulated by the law. Probably the teachers have to give extra lessons that are decided by the teacher. Under the principle of equal treatment, if a child (national or legally residing) needs extra guidance the guidance should be provided, must apply also to asylum seekers. Estonian language classes are provided also in the Reception Centre if there are enough asylum seekers interested.

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Minors are accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them. According to the law the best interests of the child principle have to be respected. What is the best interest of the child is not specified.

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

[346] RT I 1993, 63, 892

There are no provisions for minors with special needs in the new Act. Minors can also benefit from the Child Protection Act and Victims Support Act.
There have been no cases of minors who are mentally ill. Problems that rise from stress are treated by the normal doctor. The director of the reception centre can arrange psychologist to the reception centre or if the doctor prescribes the special treatment the specialist will be visited. But as there is no practice in this area it is not possible to answer the question about the treatment practice in the area of mental health care.

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Article 17 of AGIPA regulates the representation of an unaccompanied minor. In asylum procedure an applicant, who is an unaccompanied minor with restricted active legal capacity, shall be represented by the guardian, the guardianship authority, the head of the reception centre or a person authorized by the director of reception centre, unless otherwise provided by the law.

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

Article 35 of the Act regulates the placement of an unaccompanied minor. An applicant who is an unaccompanied minor shall be placed in the reception centre or a social welfare institution for the time of the asylum proceedings, and welfare services appropriate to the age of the applicant shall be guaranteed to him or her. An applicant who is an unaccompanied minor may be placed with an adult relative or to social care family, if the host is appropriate for taking care of a minor. While placing an applicant who is an unaccompanied minor in the reception centre, social welfare institution, to an adult relative or social care family, the rights and interests of the minor shall be taken into consideration above all. Unaccompanied minor's sisters and brothers shall not be separated, if possible.
In cases specified in clause (8) of section 17[347] of this Act, the applicant who is an unaccompanied minor may be placed in the initial reception centre (detention) for the time of the examination. There is currently no initial reception centre in Estonia.

347 If the Citizenship and Migration Board has reasoned doubts as to the correctness of the information provided by the applicant in respect of his or her age, with the consent of the applicant or his or her representative the applicant's age can be established by medical examination.

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

The Child Protection Act art 67 is regulating tracing of a family of an accompanied minor who is a fugitive. It is the obligation of a social centre to check and find the possibilities for return.
There are no special provisions about confidentiality of information regarding minors, which is forwarded to the country of origin. But the general rule of the confidentiality[348] regarding the data of the asylum seeker should be followed.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

These provisions are not regulated. Art 14 §8 of the directive is not regulated in Estonia.

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

§35 (1) of the Act prescribes that an accompanied minor can be placed either at the Reception Centre, or to the orphanage. There are no specific detention conditions for persons with special needs.

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

Taking into account the small size of Estonia, it is very unlikely that there can be any problems with transporting asylum seekers from one area to another. All the asylum seekers have to stay in the Illuka Reception Centre as this is the only Centre. There are no special conditions for persons with special needs. There is one family room in the Reception Centre.

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

In the case of mass influx or temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities, alternative accommodation places are rented or bought. No specific rules designed in the law.

Q.32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

[348] §13

No specific rules. According to the §16 of the Act the border guard authority shall inform the corresponding official of the Citizenship and Migration Board without delay of the submission of an application for asylum and where necessary, involve a competent official of the Citizenship and Migration Board in the performance of the acts specified in clause 1) of §15 of the Act. It is possible to detain asylum seeker for 48 hours at the Border point.

If a basis for refusal to deny an application for asylum provided in clauses 1) and 2) of § 20 [349]and clauses 1) and 2) of §21[350] of the Act becomes evident, the alien shall be refused entry with the approval of the Citizenship and Migration Board, and he or she shall be sent back from the border without delay, informing him or her of the reasons for refusal.

The confinement is regulated by the §32 of the Act only in the initial reception centre and in the premises of CMB or Border Point. According to the §32 an applicant who has submitted an application during his or her stay in the country is required to stay in the initial reception centre but not for longer than 48 hours. An applicant may temporarily stay in the office of the Citizenship and Migration Board, if necessary for the performance of acts for the asylum proceedings.

With the permission of an administrative court judge, an applicant may be required to stay at the initial reception centre after the expiry of 48 hours in the following cases:

1) the identity of the applicant has not been not ascertained, including in the case where the applicant does not co-operate in the identification or hinders identification;

2) for establishing circumstances relevant to the asylum proceedings if the applicant does not co-operate in establishment of the circumstances or hinders the establishment thereof;

3) there is good reason to believe that the applicant has committed a serious criminal offence in a foreign state;

4) the applicant has repeatedly or seriously violated the internal procedure rules of the reception centre;

[349] Application for asylum shall be deemed to be clearly unfounded if:
1) another country can be considered the initial country for asylum, i.e. asylum or other protection has been accorded to the applicant in another country, and such protection is still accessible to the applicant;
2) the country of origin of the applicant can be considered as a safe country;

[350] Asylum proceedings are terminated by a decision to reject the application for asylum if:
1) another country is responsible for the review of the application for asylum according to an international agreement or regulation 343/2003/EC of the Council of the European Union that specifies the criteria and mechanisms for designating the member state that shall be responsible for the process of reviewing an application for asylum submitted in any member state by a third country national (EU 050, 25.02.2003, p. 1–10);
2) the applicant has arrived to Estonia through a country which can be considered as a safe country;

5) the applicant fails to comply with the surveillance measures applied with respect to him or her, or the applicant fails to perform other duties provided by this Act;
6) the applicant's stay in the initial reception centre is necessary in the interests of the protection of national security and public order.
The Citizenship and Migration Board shall submit a petition to an administrative court in order to obtain the permission specified in clause (3) of this section. An applicant who is required to stay at the initial reception centre is permitted to leave the centre with the written permission of the Citizenship and Migration Board, or in order to receive emergency medical care.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

In mass influx cases the people can be placed in different accommodation places. Article 62 (1) of AGIPA sets out that the person who has received a temporary protection is obliged to live in the territory of Reception Centre or at the place decided by the Ministry of Social Affairs.

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[1] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

Article 32 and Article 33 of AGIPA regulates the detention of the asylum seeker. The law states that there is an initial reception centre, but in reality it so far does not exist. The new registration centre was opened on 26th April 2006 in the premises of CMB. It is allowed to keep a person there for 48 hours. The registration centre is not an initial reception centre but people can be kept there over weekend until they are transported to Illuka Reception Centre.

[1] Please specify if article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed).

Police, Border Guard and CMB can keep the asylum seeker in their premises for 48 hours. The extension of the detention can be asked from the Administrative Court judge. The judge can give a permission to keep the asylum seeker in detention up to 2 months. After that a new court order can be issued.
Here are the functions of the initial reception centre:
An applicant who has submitted an asylum application can be required to stay in the initial reception centre but not for longer than forty-eight hours after the submission of asylum application.
With the permission of an administrative court judge, an applicant may be required to stay at the initial reception centre in the following cases:
1) the identity of the applicant has not been not ascertained, including in the case where the applicant does not co-operate in the identification or hinders identification;
2) for establishing circumstances relevant to the asylum proceedings;
3) there is good reason to believe that the applicant has committed a serious criminal offence in a foreign state;
4) the applicant has repeatedly or seriously violated the internal procedure rules of the reception centre;
5) the applicant fails to comply with the surveillance measures applied with respect to him or her, or the applicant fails to perform other duties provided by this Act;
6) the applicant's stay in the initial reception centre is necessary in the interests of the protection of national security and public order.
The Citizenship and Migration Board shall submit an appeal to an administrative court to extend the detention of an asylum seeker.
An applicant who is required to stay at the initial reception centre is permitted to leave the centre with the written permission of the Citizenship and Migration Board, or in order to receive emergency medical care.
Article 33 of the AGIPA states that an applicant who has submitted the application for asylum during his or her stay at the expulsion centre, in prison or in jail, or in the course of execution of the expulsion procedure, shall not be placed in the initial reception centre but shall remain at the expulsion centre, in prison or in jail until the termination of the asylum proceedings. If an alien had submitted the application for asylum during his or her stay at the expulsion centre or in prison and was released from prison or jail, he or she shall be sent to the reception centre.
The articles specified in AGIPA shall not apply to an applicant with regard to whom a criminal procedure has been commenced, if it is in conflict with the principles of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The reason that a person applied for asylum is not a reason to keep a person in detention. But there can be other offences like crossing the border illegally, that is punishable.

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Yes, see previous answer. The asylum seekers may be held (there is currently no initial reception centre although the provisions are in the law) at the premises of the Border Guard or Citizenship and Migration Board, Illuka Reception centre, deportation centre, jail, prison. The applicant can be detained in jail or at places mentioned before then he or she is transferred to the Illuka Reception Centre or to the deportation centre (in case of manifestly ill-founded application) if the immediate deportation is not possible to conduct within 48 hours.

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

No. Surveillance measures are prescribed in the Article 29 of AGIPA; however, it seems that these rules are not designed to replace detention of the applicant. There are no financial guarantee provisions regulations. The obligation to report is for every asylum seeker who does not stay in the Reception Centre. Article 29 sets the surveillance measures, which are following:

(1) For the effective and efficient, simple and rapid conduct of asylum proceedings, the Citizenship and Migration Board has the right to apply the following surveillance measures with respect to applicants:

1) residing in a determined place of residence;

2) appearing for registration at the Citizenship and Migration Board at prescribed intervals;

3) notifying the Citizenship and Migration Board of his or her absence from the place of residence for a period longer than three days.

Officials of the Citizenship and Migration Board and police officers have the right to verify the compliance of applicants with the surveillance measures at any time.

An applicant shall be informed in writing of the imposition of surveillance measures. It is difficult to say if these measures replace the detention as there is no practice at the moment the report was drafted.

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

The competent authority is Citizen and Migration Board (CMB), Border Guard Office and in few cases Police. CMB and Border Guards can make a first decision to detain a person for 48 hours after that there should be a court decision.

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

Usually not more that 48 hours, otherwise with the court order the person can be detained longer.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

Asylum seekers can be kept in expulsion centre or in case of criminal offence together with criminals in the prison. There is no initial reception centre in Estonia yet. The law said that the person can be detained at the initial detention centre or at the premises of the CMB or border point upon lodging application for the refugee status on the period of 48 hours.[351]. The 48 hours term can be prolonged by the administrative court. The person who has submitted the asylum application being in the deportation centre, prison or jail is obliged to stay in the same place until the end of asylum proceedings.[352]
The expulsion centre is managed by the CMB (Citizen and Migration Board). Prisons are managed by the Prison Board (Vanglate Amet). Borders are controlled by the Border Guard Authority.

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

Generally yes, the permission from the director of the centre has to be granted to UNHCR or NGOs.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

He can appeal to the court, which is the Administrative Court. As the person can be detained after 48 hours only with the court permission it seems that the provision is respected. The new legislative Act does not cover the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005.

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

There is no practice yet. Article 32 of AGIPA states that asylum seekers who are detained should have similar rights with asylum seekers who are not detained. The Citizenship and

[351] §15(6) and §32(1) of the Act
[352] §33(1) of the Act

Migration Board shall, arrange assistance to an applicant who may temporarily stay in the office of the Citizenship and Migration Board, if necessary for the performance of acts of the asylum proceedings. Following is provided by CMB:

- temporary accommodation;
- emergency care and medical examinations
- information regarding their rights and duties;
- provision of other essential services.
- essential necessities and toiletries, and food allowance.

The translation services have to be provided by the Initial Reception centre and the Reception Centre according to the changes in art 12 of AGIPA enforced 11 March 2007. The Reception Centre has to provide also Estonian language course.

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

The answer depends from the place of detention. In general one can say that the regulations are not in accordance with the requirements of the directive. The law writes about the initial reception centre that is supposed to be a detention centre. In reality this centre does not exist. The asylum seekers can be kept in the CMB or Border Guard premises or in prison, jail, at the border, when the detention is needed. Look at the previous answer to the question 33 I. There was a study[353] done by Estonian Refugee Council in 2007 on the conditions of detention places where asylum seekers can potentially be held.

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

No. There are no provisions for people with special needs in the Act. Unaccompanied minors are an exception.

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

[353] Soon available at http://www.detention-in-europe.org/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=80&Itemid=107 , 08.05.2007

Probably yes. The provisions are not regulated. Asylum seekers who are minors can be detained in the initial reception centre in cases the Citizenship and Migration Board has reasonable doubt to believe that the asylum seeker is lying about his/her age. In that case with the consent of the asylum seeker or his/her representative, medical examining can be done to specify the age of the applicant. The best interests of the child have to be respected during the whole asylum procedure. In reality, there is no initial reception centre.

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

It is not explicitly written in the Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens but the other legislation SSGA art 17 obliges all children from the age 7-16 to study in the school. The same applies to asylum seekers who are about that age.

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

In March 2007 no asylum seeker is detained. There are altogether 6 asylum applications in proceedings in different instances in March 2007.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

Estonian accommodation centre is centralised. Estonia has only one centre that is under supervision of the Ministry of Social Affairs.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)

Estonia has one public accommodation centre which is financed from the state budget. In addition there is a registration centre located in Tallinn which is administered by the Citizenship and Migration Board. It is used for conducting asylum proceedings but if necessary the asylum applicants can be accommodated in the registration centre as well. (As the reception centre is located far from Tallinn).

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?

Estonia has one public accommodation centre, Illuka Reception Centre, http://www.ivv.ee/index.php?sid=SclwQyPePe1nnn2r_&tid=tAkm-Rllr1bcEbeb-TTkTTTTTTTjT4mt1k

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

There is no plan to distribute asylum seekers all over the territory. There is only one reception centre in Estonia, which is quite far from the capital in the remote area near the Russian border with limited access of public transportation.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?

NGOs are not consulted in the coordination of reception conditions; the director of the reception centre participates in development of reception conditions.
When a new law is designed NGO-s are asked to provide their comments. There is no central body representing all the actors involved in reception conditions in Estonia.

Q.39. Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

Ministry of Social Affairs has to control the Reception Centre and Ministry of Interior has to control the CMB. But there are no special provisions in the law, how the control should be done.

Q.39. B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?

General rules for housing are respected when asylum seekers are accommodated no special rules for the Reception Centre. The asylum seekers have an access to internet. There is no creative room for children. There is one TV. The toilet and shower, washing machine, also the kitchen is for public use. The one family room has private shower and toilet. There are no books, newspapers that the asylum seekers could read. The closest library is far. The rooms are designed mostly for 4 persons. There is a phone that can be used by asylum seekers.

Q.39. C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?

Officials from Ministry of Social Affairs and the Chancellor of Justice are making regular checks to the Reception Centre, but it is not specified in the new law but is a general rule. The Chancellor of Justice gives a report, at its yearly report, about the visit and monitoring activities of the reception conditions and reception centre. According to the Ministry of Interior the report of the Ministry of Social Affairs is also public.

Q.39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?

The monitoring by the Ministry of Social Affairs must be done twice per year. Also the Chancellor of Justice [354] is visiting once per year the Reception Centre. The report of the Legal Chancellor is public. According to the Ministry of Interior the reports produced by the Ministry of Social Affairs are also public.
The reports done by the Legal Chancellor are done after the visit and the reports can be found in the year report of the Legal Chancellor. For example Legal Chancellor has approached Estonian Refugee Council (ERC) with letters asking if the Council know some problems with the reception of asylum seekers in the Reception Centres. And ERC has given feedback, when there have been some known infringements. The Ministry of Social Affairs has not mentioned in its answers that they write a report after the monitoring procedure.

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

In 2005 there were 11 asylum applications in Estonia at the end of the year 2005, eight cases were under consideration that means reception conditions applied to 8 persons at the end of the year 2005. In September 2006 only five applications were on the procedure. In March 2006 six applicants lived in the Reception Centre.

[354] www.oiguskantsler.ee

Q.40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?

According to the Estonian European Refugee Fund plan for the years 2005-2007, planned salary of CMB decision makers (five people) in 2005 was 1 076 010 EEK = 68798 EUR . Expenses on translators in 2005 for nine months was 21 600 EEK = 1381 EUR. Costs of the reception centre in 2005 are 1 186 265 EEK = 75848 EUR. There are also projects managed by NGOs and financed by EU funds that support the reception conditions improvements. [355]

Q.40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?

No direct figures available, but if we add above mentions costs and divide them by number of asylum seekers then the amount per asylum seeker is 207 625 EEK or 13 275 EUR. In reality the sum is bigger as also finances that NGOs use should be added.

Q.40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

The costs for the reception of asylum seekers are financed from the state budget and from EU funds.

Q.40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?

At the moment it seems that the resources are sufficient as the number of asylum seekers is very low.

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

In CMB there are 5 persons who make decisions on asylum claims. In the Reception Centre there work 2 persons and in the Ministry of Social Affairs there is one person responsible. Also couple of people in the Ministry of Interior and in the Expulsion Centre are involved.

Q.41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?

[355] http://www.sisemin.gov.ee/atp/failid/2005_2007_a_programm.rtf ; 12.06.2006

People working in the Reception Centre have received training from UNHCR, NGOs and internal training organised by the Ministry. The problem is that the people working for the reception centre have limited language skills including English. The topic of torture victims should get more attention and also the officials must be trained in that.
There are very few cases where gender issue has raised also there has been only one unaccompanied minor case in Estonia. The CMB officials though have received training on separated children.

Q.41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?

Yes, all the people working with asylum seekers are obliged to keep in secret the personal data of the asylum seekers. AGIPA states the confidentiality requirement. Confidentiality has to be respected.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

Yes, there is a problem with translation of the directive. Art 21 of the directive is translated not correctly into Estonian language. The article itself relates to the appeals procedure.

The Estonian version of the directive is following: "Member states shall assure that the negative decisions relating to the granting benefits under this Directive or decisions taken under Article 7 which individually affect asylum seekers can be appealed according to the internal rules of the state. At least in the last instance, the possibility of an appeal to the court or to apply through the court for the reviewing of the case should be granted".

This means that the court will not review the case, but only grants a chance, that the case will be reviewed by the CMB once again. Here is the difference between the Estonian and English translation of the directive. The English version states that the judicial body should review the case and not the same institution that rejected the asylum application.

The English version of the Art 21 of the directive says: "Member states shall ensure that negative decisions relating to the granting of benefits under this Directive or decisions taken under Article 7 which individually affect asylum seekers may be the subject of an appeal within the procedures laid down in the national law. At least in the last instance the possibility of an appeal or a review before a judicial body shall be granted."

In the Estonian system the Citizen and Migration Board has to review once again the negative decision made by itself when the court makes a decision that the CMB first decision was wrong. The Administrative Court, when the cases are brought before it, cannot grant asylum, but can only decide that the asylum decision was incorrect and ask CMB to make a new decision. So, the judicial body under Estonian system does not review the asylum case on the substance. It can be claimed that taking a case to the court does not have suspensive effect. To stop the expulsion separate claim has to be submitted and the court will review it to make a decision on stopping the expulsion.

It is contradictory to the principle of right to appeal before the judicial body and is contradictory to the means of the directive.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

Yes, Estonia had a Refugee Act since 1997 that was based on the Refugee Convention. Only refugees under the convention could get asylum. Before joining EU there were no proper rules for the subsidiary protection or for the temporary protection.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

There was legal act before (Refugees Act) and there is new now (Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens). The legal rules applicable to reception conditions became more precise with the adoption of the transposition norms. Some new elements were also added that were not before, like the possibility for employment after 12 months. At the same time there are still elements missing in the new law, that should be transposed from the directive i.e. conditions for the people with special needs. Also the appeal on the negative decisions does not have suspensive effect and the court can't make a new decision. The new decision has to be made again by CMB.

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

Yes, the directives implied important changes in national law

1. Definitions of safe country and safe third country, country of origin is in the law
2. Asylum seeker can work after 12 months

3. New concept of temporary protection is introduced
4. New concept of subsidiary protection is introduced
5. When the application is placed on the border the border guards have to contact CMB for advice
6. Eurodac system is introduced
7. Dublin system introduced
8. Special provisions when the expulsion is not allowed
9. etc

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

There has been only small debate in the parliament. No debate in the newspapers or media.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

The law became more favourable. Additional protection possibilities were introduced for example subsidiary protection, temporary protection. The asylum seekers can work after one year, they couldn't before. But there are no more favourable provisions than the provisions of the directive.

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?

The weaknesses of the reception conditions are the location of Illuka Reception Centre for asylum seekers (far from the capital, where asylum proceedings are conducted) and that there is no initial reception centre (detention centre) in reality.

The fact that the reception centre is so far increases the costs for transportation, also limits the access to meet the lawyers and integrate them to the society. The strengths are the small size of Estonia and good co-operation between different authorities.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States

The lawyers used to stay with the applicant at the interview with the CMB. Unfortunately the practice is not any more used as there is no capacity of an NGO providing legal counselling.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answer.

The directive in Estonian language is different than the English version. Art 21 of the directive is translated in the way as it would fit to the Estonian system.

Minors

An applicant who is an unaccompanied minor shall be placed in the Reception Centre or a social welfare institution for the time of the asylum proceedings, and welfare services appropriate to the age of the applicant shall be guaranteed to him or her. Article 19 of the Council Directive 2003/9/EC requires also the necessary representation of unaccompanied minors, as far as possible, keeping siblings together, taking into account the best interests of the minor concerned and, in particular, his or her age and degree of maturity. Changes of residence of unaccompanied minors shall be limited to a minimum. Member States, protecting the unaccompanied minor's best interests, shall endeavour to trace the members of his or her family as soon as possible. All of the above mentioned rights of unaccompanied minors are not regulated in Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens, The terms concerning the presentation and accommodation of the unaccompanied minor is regulated in Child Protection Act (§ 63) and in the Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens (§ 17 and § 35). The Act on Granting International Protection § 35 (3) stipulates also the principle of the rights and interests of the minor being taken into consideration above all and an obligation, where possible, not to separate unaccompanied minors who are brothers and sisters. Child Protection Act § 31 stipulates general principle of treatment of child that includes taking into account of his or her character, age and sex. That principle applies also when dealing with minors in asylum procedures. The obligation to trace the member of his or her family is regulated in Child Protection Act § 67.

Another ground that should be reconsidered or should be regulated more precisely is § 20 (18) of Act on Granting International Protection to Aliens, "in case minor's parents' application has been rejected". It can not be forgotten that the best interests of the minor should always come first. In reality the asylum application could be connected to the interests or protection needs of the minor and the parent might lack grounds for asylum, but at the same time the child could be entitled to subsidiary protection. Minor's application can not automatically depend on his or her parents' application. Since the grounds for obviously ungrounded applications are arguable, the accelerated procedure should be as well. Accelerated procedure has been widely criticized in Finland it is said that the legal safeguards are not sufficient considering the interests of asylum seekers.[356]

Ungrounded applications

Article 20 (17) of the Act says that obviously ungrounded application is submitted by a person who threatens security and/or public order or he has expelled from Estonia for the above mentioned reasons. Threat to peace, security and public order is a reason not to give asylum and reject the application but the Aliens Act treats it as basis for obviously ungrounded application.

Appeals

An alien who appeals the decision of the Migration Board has during court procedures the same rights and obligations as an asylum seeker if the court has stopped the compulsory execution of precept to leave.[357] The execution of precept to leave Estonia should be stopped automatically when the application has been appealed, otherwise country loses legal certainty that it doesn't violate the principle of non- refoulment. It is possible that the court satisfies the complaint and protection must be provided. If this person has been deported meantime, Estonia infringes the obligation to provide international protection to certain groups of people.

Part 3 of chapter 2 of Aliens Act is about residence and work permits, according to article 38, a residence permit for a refugee shall be issued with a period of validity for three years and for the person in need of subsidiary protection for one year. In Refugees Act the period was up to two years and subsidiary protection was not regulated at all.[358] The Migration Board may extend a residence permit if the circumstances due to which the residence permit was issued have not ceased to exist and no circumstance exists which constitutes the basis for revocation thereof.[359] The decision to refuse issue of a residence permit and a precept to leave Estonia issued thereby may be contested with an Administrative Court within ten days after the date of adoption of the decision. Ten days is too short period of time to appeal. Unfortunately the authors of the Aliens Act have not taken into account the recommendations made by Estonian NGOs dealing with refugees in legal matters.[360] It was strongly suggested that the time limit would be thirty days, like in Finland which has been an example in creating this particular Act.
In its second and third report on Estonia[361] ECRI expressed its concern on the wide authorities of boarder guards who are authorized to review and reject asylum claims.

Border guards' decisions to reject asylum claims result the asylum seekers' immediate removal from Estonian territory without the possibility of lodging an appeal. Aliens Act provides that border guards only involve the Migration Board in the actual review of the claim when it is "necessary".[362] However, the Act does not determine their powers therefore it would be important to create a regulation to limit and specify the powers of border guards. Migration Board should review all the applications and make sure that the applicant will be heard and he or she would be able to file an appeal before an appeals court. Furthermore, border guards lack special training in this specific field and guidelines i.e. how to determine safe third country.[363]

§ 16 of the Act give specifications of acts when application for asylum is submitted at the border. According to that article the border guard authority shall immediately inform the corresponding official of the Citizenship and Migration Board of the submission of an application for asylum and where necessary, involve a competent official of the Citizenship and Migration Board in the procedure. It is not clearly stated that in case of nonadmission to the asylum procedure at the border, the Border Guards make a decision together with CMB. The grounds for rejecting application on the border are limited with grounds ratified in the article 16 (2) of the new law.

Location of the reception centre

The location of the reception centre in Illuka is about 220 km from Tallinn. The nearest town is located 50 km from the centre where also the nearest school is. The reception centre has problems with finding specially trained teachers, to teach children and Estonian language. The Migration Board, Administrative Court and all the other necessary procedures must be taken care of in Tallinn. Area, where the reception centre is located has mainly Russian speaking population and most probably by staying there and communicating with local people, one learns Russian instead of Estonian language, which might lead to integration problems and possibly not finding work in Estonia. Due to these facts the work of this centre is time demanding, inefficient and expensive and in the future, when building such reception centres, better location should be taken into consideration.

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

Note on the technique on indications of the norms: the date is the date of publication in the offical journal (Suomen säädöskokoelma), and the number is the number of the norm in the official journal

The main norm of transposition is Laki maahanmuuttajien kotouttamisesta ja turvapaikanhakijoiden vastaanotosta (Act on the integration of immigrants and reception of asylum seekers; hereafter, Integration Act) 9.4.1999/493, as amended by Act 27.5.2005/362, and Act 29.12.2005/1215 (also amended by Act 118/2002, 1292/2002 and 649/2004). This is a legislative norm, which was enacted some years before the Directive, but still forms the basis for the transpositions, with the changes introduced in 2005.

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

- Put as an annex to your report a paper copy of each norm in the original language with a reference number to help the reader to find it easily;
- Send us as an electronic version of each norm or a weblink to the text (this will be used for the website we are building);
- Provide the texts of any translation of the above norms into English if they are available.

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

In Finland, which is a unitary state, it is primarily Parliament (eduskunta, riksdagen) which is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions. The Constitution (Section 80) requires that all norms that regulate the principles governing the rights and obligations of individuals (including foreigners) must be enacted at the hierarchical level of an Act of Parliament. The Government and individual ministries, in this case the Ministry of Labour, can issue decrees, which are legal norms, related to the reception conditions.

However, the self-governing Åland Islands exercise legislative authority in respect of matters enumerated in the Act on Self-Governance of Åland (1144/1991 – Självstyrelselag för Åland), section 18.Legislative powers in these areas are held by the Åland Parliament. Legislation can ia. be enacted in the field of education and social security and healthcare. No reception centres for asylum-seekers are located in the Åland Islands.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

In principle, the whole directive has been transposed by a legislative norm (Act of Parliament), although some specifications to the Directive have been made by Government Decree. There are also some specifications in a Ministry of Labour Decree, and in circulars issued by that Ministry.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

Since the main legislation concerning the remit of directive was in place already before, the transposition meant rather an adjustment and to some extent inclusion of new elements into the main instrument of transposition.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

Yes, for the most part. There is, however, a problem concerning the right to education for children, where clear norms on the right of children seeking asylum to access to education should be included, although this right is enshrined in the Constitution concerning primary education (9 years of school).

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

A working group appointed by the Ministry of Labour prepared the Bill for the amendments to the Integration Act. The Government Bill 280/2004 for the amendments to the Integration Act also contains a detailed analysis of the reception conditions in relation to the Directive.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

There are no recent scientific books or articles relating directly to the implementation directive. There is, however, a study on reception conditions: "Muutos on pysyvä olotila. Turvapaikanhakijoiden vastaanottona järjestettävät palvelut ja niiden järjestämisestä aiheutuvat kustannukset" ("Change is a permanent state – Services provided at the reception of asylum seekers and the costs incurred") published in the series Työpoliittinen tutkimus 292/2005 (available at http://www.mol.fi/mol/fi/99_pdf/fi/06_tyoministerio/06_julkaisut/06_tutkimus/tpt292.pdf) .

There is also a Government Report on the implementation of the Integration Act to Parliament from 2003 (Government Report 5/2002; Ministry of Labour publication 317/2003; http://www.mol.fi/mol/en/99_pdf/en/90_publications/thj317.pdf), which covers much of the remit of the Directive.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

There is not yet any jurisprudence.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

Reception of asylum seekers is centrally the responsibility of the Ministry of Labour. It has concluded contracts with administrators of reception centres, which are dispersed all over the country, in 14 municipalities, altogether 14 centres, out of which 2 are in Helsinki. 2 are maintained by the State, 10 by municipalities, and 2 by the Finnish Red Cross.

An asylum-seeker´s right to reception condition starts when an asylum application is lodged. The application is lodged at the border posts to the Frontier Guard or the police, and inside the country at local police stations. The receiving authority will be in contact with the nearest reception centre, which takes initial responsibility for the asylum-seeker. There are a few reception centres which are designated as so-called transit centres, where the intention is that asylum-seekers stay until they have had their asylum-interview. Partly, asylum-seekers are transferred there upon arrival, but also on the basis of availability of places in reception centres.

All asylum-seekers are registered in a reception centre, apart from those who are placed in detention upon arrival. In principle, detainees should within a short period be transferred to a closed reception centre, if the detention continues. He is then registered in the closed centre.

The reception centres provide housing, medical care, the services of a social worker, primary school for children, and language training and activities for the adults, and social assistance.

Housing is provided either in dormitory-like conditions or in municipal rental apartments. All services are free of charge, unless it is deemed that the asylum-seeker has own means to pay. In this case, a reasonable fee can be charged, the rate of which may not exceed the cost of producing the service. The social assistance, provided on the basis of assessed needs, is somewhat lower of the minimum social assistance, and based on a set amount of deductions, inter alia, since housing and other services are provided to asylum-seekers.

Unaccompanied minors applying for asylum are placed in special group homes, and sometimes with adult relatives. Each child is assigned a representative as soon as possible after the arrival.

Q.11. Q 11.A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

The reception conditions are basically uniform for all stages of the asylum procedures. However, in situations of mass influx, there are provisions in the law (Integration Act 493/1999, as amended by Act 118/2002, Section 19b) which allow for the creation of organising centres (järjestelykeskus), where asylum-seekers stay for a brief, initial period. In these, reception conditions may be provided in kind. This possibility has not been resorted to in practice.

The police runs a EURODAC check on all asylum-seekers, and if there is a EURODAC hit, the reception centre is informed. If the asylum-seeker is usually housed in a transit centre, s/he will usually remain there up to the time when it is determined in an admissibility procedure whether s/he will be transferred to another Member State.

Q.11.B Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

The answers below are valid for all the stages of the procedure, unless indicated otherwise. Reception conditions are maintained up to the point when an asylum-seeker gets a residence permit or leaves the country, i.e. also during appeals procedures.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q.12.A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

In national law, the basis for the reception conditions is in Section 19(1) of the Constitution (perustuslaki, 731/1999), which states that everyone who is not able to acquire the security that is necessary for a life in dignity has the right to necessary subsistence and care.

This right is the basis for the reception conditions. In practice, it is considered that a minimum level of subsistence, including food, emergency housing, and emergency health care is the minimum that has to be provided to any person who is in Finland. For more extensive social services and aid, as well as health care and social insurance, the basis is residence in Finland for at least one year.

The contents of reception conditions are specified in Section 19 of the Integration Act (493/1999, amended 362/2005). In this Section, it is stated that reception conditions for asylum seekers contain housing, social assistance, necessary social and health services, interpretation and other means of securing basic needs. In addition, work and study activities may be organized. Housing shall be organized so that family members can reside together. The special needs of asylum seekers due to their age, vulnerable situation or physical or mental condition must be taken into account in arranging housing and other reception conditions. In the reception, the best interest of the child must be taken into account. A child who is in need of special support, must be provided with appropriate counseling and support, and appropriate mental health care.

The reception conditions are provided as a combination of money and in kind. The reception conditions are based on that the asylum-seekers receive social assistance, from which certain deductions are made for reception conditions given in kind, on the basis of the Ministry of Labour Decree 389/2005 (Työministeriön asetus turvapaikanhakijoiden ja tilapäistä suojelua saavien ryhmäkodista, toimeentulotuen jakamisesta rahamääräisestä ja hyödykkeinä annettavaan osaan sekä majoituksesta perittävistä maksuista).

According to the Decree, section 2, asylum seekers receive the basic part of the normal social assistance, but with a deduction of 5 % as for housing in a reception centre. According to information from the Ministry of Labour, this deduction is no longer made as of September 2006.

In addition, a deduction by 10 % for adults and 15 % for children is made for other reception conditions offered in kind.

The same deductions are made for persons who do not live in a reception centre as compensation for that they have the possibility to housing and the other reception conditions in a reception centre.

The allowance is to cover the normal living expenditures, apart from housing, that is, clothing, food, and other miscellaneous costs. Housing is provided in a reception centre. Services, which are usually made available by municipalities free of cost or at very low cost to residents are organised free of charge also for asylum-seekers, i.e. mainly social counselling and emergency health care, and mandatory activity programmes. There is usually one or two nurses and a social worker hired by the reception centre. Education is provided to children through the public school system, and language and other courses for adult asylum seekers are arranged by the reception centres.

The subsistence allowance is granted separately for each person in a household, and there is a calculated amount for different categories, i.e. adults, spouses, adult children living with parents, children aged 10-17 and children aged 0-10. A chart of the level of social assistance for asylum-seekers compared to the general social assistance is found below (table 1). Social assistance also varies slightly depending on if an asylum-seeker is housed in a municipality which by the State is designated as a category I municipality, where living costs are slightly higher, or a category II municipality, usually outside the larger cities, where living costs are slightly lower.

Q.12.B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

The reception conditions can be said to be at a minimum level to sufficiently ensure the subsistence of asylum-seekers, given that they take benefit of the housing provided in kind.

Q.13.

Q. 13.A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

According to the Integration Act, section 2, para. 1, point 3, and asylum seeker is a person who has applied for international protection in accordance with the Aliens Act (ulkomaalaislaki, 301/2004). Applications for international protection under the Aliens Act include:

1. applications for asylum in accordance with Section 87 of the Aliens ´ Act;
2. applications for a residence permit due to need of protection in accordance with Article 88 of the Aliens´ Act .

In the Aliens Act, section 94, an asylum application and its scope are defined, including the presumption of an asylum application:

Section 94 – Asylum procedure
(1) An application based on a need for international protection which is filed with the authorities at the Finnish border or on Finnish territory is processed in the asylum procedure.
(2) An alien who refers to his or her endangered human rights is considered to be applying for asylum unless he or she specifically states otherwise.

(3) Granting the right of residence is also investigated and decided on other emerging grounds in conjunction with the asylum procedures

In principle, an application for protection is possible to lodge also only on the basis of Article 88 of the Aliens´ Act. However, the presumption in the practice of the authorities is that an application covers both an application for asylum according to Article 87 of the Aliens´ Act and an application for a residence permit due to need of protection in accordance with Article 88 of the Aliens´ Act. Applications for both statuses are dealt with uniformly in the same procedure, and reception conditions are uniform.

Q. 13.B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

Yes, reception conditions would also cover persons seeking international protection, more specifically, for those seeking a residence permit due to need of protection under Article 88 of the Aliens Act.

Q.13.C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

No. The presumption in Sections 87, 88 and 94 in the Aliens Act is that international protection can only be sought at the Finnish border on Finnish territory.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Reception conditions are available from the moment an asylum application is lodged. In some exceptional situations, it may have happened that asylum-seekers have received reception conditions, basically housing, even before their asylum application has been formally registered. This was the case in the early 1990s in some situations, when numbers of asylum-seekers unexpectedly rose quickly (although Finland has never had more than 4000 asylum-seekers in one year).

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

According to the Integration Act, section 3, an asylum-seeker is within the scope of reception conditions until he is granted a residence permit or he has left the country. This means that reception conditions continue also after a final refusal of an asylum application, up to the point of departure from the country. Finland has adopted a system of single procedure, which means that all grounds for an applicant's claim for international protection and other grounds for his or her residence in the country are examined in the same procedure. Under section 94(3) of the Aliens Act, the granting of the right of residence is also investigated and decided on other emerging grounds in conjunction with the asylum procedure. This means that a final refusal of an asylum application should be understood to include also the refusal of the applicant's residence in the country on other grounds. However, if it is clear that departure may be forthcoming soon, the social assistance may be paid out in amounts covering shorter periods of time, e.g. one week at a time.

Asylum seekers may also after they have been granted a residence permit receive reception conditions for asylum-seekers for a reasonable amount of time. It can take from some weeks up to some months before persons granted a status can be referred to a municipality to receive the conditions for the integration of refugees.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

No. The Aliens Act foresees the possibility of successive applications, and reception conditions are applicable also to asylum seekers who have lodged successive applications.

Q.17 Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17.A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

According to the Integration Act, section 19f, asylum seekers are to be informed as soon as possible and no later than 15 days after lodging an asylum application about the rights and obligations within the reception conditions, and about social and health services, in writing, and where appropriate, orally. The asylum seeker shall be informed as soon as possible about organisations and groups who provide legal assistance concerning reception conditions and the asylum procedures.

Q. 17.B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

There is a brochure concerning the reception conditions, which is available to the asylum seekers. Mainly, however, information is provided orally. The asylum seeker usually has an initial information meeting and interview with a social worker or other staff member in the reception centre within a few days after registration, where information is provided orally.

The asylum-seeker receives in writing the rules of the reception centre and is expected to sign on the rules.

Q.17.C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

The brochure is currently available in English, French, Arabic, Russian and Finnish. The rules for the reception centres are provided in most languages of asylum-seekers. Orally, information is as a rule presented via interpreters in a language understood by asylum seekers.

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Yes.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

Brochures of the Refugee Advice Centre, the NGO providing legal assistance concerning the asylum procedure is also distributed at border posts, police stations and reception centres. Information about the Refugee Advice Centre, and the contact information of the Finnish Red Cross are also included in the brochure with general information to asylum-seekers.

There is not a comprehensive list of NGOs. Often, there are local NGOs working with asylum-seekers, for which the reception centre would give contact information. These may include local Red Cross branches, local religious communities, or cultural organisations.

Q.18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Concerning the local NGOs, information would mostly be oral.

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

The oral information is provided via interpretation.

Q.18.D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

There are some 5-10 organisations active nationally in this field, and locally, usually some 5-10 local organisations or branches of national organisations cooperate with reception centres.

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q. 19.A.What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

When an asylum application is lodged, the receiving authority usually seizes the travel documents of the applicant for the duration of the procedures. At this time, the applicant is issued with a certificate of the seizure of the document. However, this is not to be considered an identity document.

Section 96 (Card for an application process initiated in Finland) states as follows:

1. An alien who applies for international or temporary protection or who has entered Finland under the refugee quota may be issued with a card that shows that an application process concerning him or her has been initiated in Finland. The police or the Frontier Guard issue the card.
2. The card bears the applicant's name, date of birth, citizenship and photograph. If the applicant's identity has not been established, an entry about this is made in the card. The card is valid for a fixed term in Finland, but no longer than until a final decision on the matter has been made or the person has left the country or obtained a travel document.
3. An alien shall return the card when a final decision has been issued on his or her application or when he or she leaves the country or has obtained a travel document. When the validity of the card has expired, border check authorities, the police or the Directorate of Immigration may take possession of the card.

This provision would cover the document foreseen by the Art. 6 of the Directive. However, the issuance of such a card has not yet been put into practice.

The reception centre issues a resident card to its residents. This card has a picture of the card holder, and information about that s/he is a resident of a given reception centre. This is not, however, to be considered a proof of identity, or of the asylum seeker´s legal stay in Finland

Q.19.B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

The resident card is issued to all asylum-seekers who are registered in reception centres, but not those who are in the detention centre.

Q.19.C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

The card is usually issued for 6 months at a time. The card is renewed by the reception centre, if the asylum seeker is still eligible for reception conditions at the time of expiry of the card.

Q. 19.D.What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[364]?

Yes. The asylum-seeker needs the residence card in order to obtain his/her social assistance, and therefore, the card has to be issued quickly.

Q.19.E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

The Aliens Act, section 134 , regulates the issuance of an alien´s passport. It can be issued to an alien who is in Finland and is unable to obtain a passport from his country of origin; the law does not require that the alien has a residence permit here. In practice, however, it is extremely rare that asylum seekers would be able to receive a travel document.

[364] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.19.F Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

Yes, there are two central systems for the registration of asylum seekers. Asylum seekers are registered in the Register on Aliens by the Directorate of Immigration, for the purposes of processing the asylum application. The Act on the Register of Aliens (1270/1997) includes provisions on the registration of foreigners (including asylum seekers) in Finland. Section 7 contains all the information which can be recorded in the Register of Aliens.

Section 3 of the Act provides that in addition to the Directorate of Immigration, the Frontier Guard and the local police, certain other authorities have access to the register (e.g. Ministry for Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Labour, Ombudsman for Minorities).

This system contains data on the asylum seeker´s identity, date of arrival, date of asylum application, family members, address in Finland and in home country, and information on the processing of the application, and other data, including eg. pending criminal cases. The border guards and local police also have access to this database.

For the purposes of the reception system, there is a special electronic database for the residents in reception centres. According to the Integration Act, section 37, the following information may be recorded and stored about asylum seekers and their family members:
1) information about identity, the client number given by the Directorate of Immigration, and information on place of birth and nationality;
2) information about language skills, training, professional capacity and work experience;
3) information about asylum applications and expulsion, necessary for the organising of reception;

1. 4) with the consent of the asylum seeker, information about his religious background and religious convictions.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers:

Q.20.A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

In principle, an asylum seeker is free to move within the entire territory of the State. Under section 9 (Freedom of movement) of the Finnish Constitution, Finnish citizens and foreigners legally resident in Finland have the right to freely move within the country and to choose their place of residence.

Only persons with the right of permanent domicile (hembygdsrätt, based on Självstyrelselag för Åland – Act on self-governance of Åland, 1144/1991, Sections 6-13) in the Åland Islands have the right to land ownership, and a free right to trading and enterprise. Permanent domicile can be acquired by Finnish citizens after five years residence in the Åland Islands.

Under section 41 of the Aliens Act, an alien residing legally in the country has the right to move freely in the country and choose his or her place of residence. Under section 40(3), an alien may reside legally in the country while his or her application is being processed until there is a final decision on the matter or an enforceable decision on his or her removal from the country.

However, an asylum seeker is obliged to inform the reception centre of changes of address and longer journeys in case the asylum-seeker is housed in and in need of reception conditions

Q.20.B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

Asylum seekers are assigned a place in a reception centre, and have limited possibilities to influence their place of reception. Initially, asylum seekers are ideally lodged fairly near one of the three offices of the Directorate of Immigration where asylum interviews are carried out (Helsinki, Lappeenranta, Kuhmo). However, they are free also to choose another place of residence, but will then have to make their own housing arrangements and cover the costs from their social assistance.

All asylum-seekers are, however, registered in a reception centre.

Q.20.C.About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extent are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extent the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

The place of reception is determined primarily on the basis of availability. According to the Integration Act Section 19 c, an asylum- seeker may be transferred from one reception centre to another on the basis of his or her own motivated wish, or because a transfer is needed because of the functioning of the reception centre or for the processing of an application.

Such a decision cannot, according to section 44 of the Integration Act, be appealed.

An asylum-seeker is registered in a reception centre, which is basically responsible according to the Integration Act section 19 c, subsection 2, for providing reception conditions. An asylum seeker may, according to subsection 3, arrange their own accommodation, but must inform the reception centre about his/her address in writing and show proof of the accommodation provided either by the person providing the accommodation, or through a written lease of accommodation.

Q.20.D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)[365]

When an asylum-applicant lodges an application, the police or Border Guard refers her/him to the closest reception centre. If accommodation is not available there, the reception centre will transfer the applicant to another reception centre, firstly, on the basis of availability of space. Special considerations, e.g. family members already present in Finland, relatives, and special needs, will be taken into account also at this stage.

Q.20.E.How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

N/A. However, since asylum-seekers are obliged to participate in the work/study programmes of the reception centres, leaving the reception centre may de facto cause a reduction in the social assistance. Therefore, the asylum-seeker must obtain permission to be absent from the work/study programme for a certain period, in order for reception conditions not to be reduced (see Q. 21.A)

Q.21.

Q.21.A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Yes. Rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in the Integration Act, section 22, subsection 4. It is basically only possible to withdraw a certain part of the social assistance, not other reception conditions.

There are two situations where the social assistance could be reduced: first, if an asylum seeker neglects to participate in work/study activities, and second, on the grounds of a needs assessment.

The grounds related to negligence are that a resident has repeatedly neglected to participate in the work and study programme of the reception centre. The withdrawal can be up to 20 %.

This provision is based on the Act on Social Assistance (laki toimeentulotuesta 1412/1997), section 10, subsections 1-3 where general grounds for a partial withdrawal of subsistence allowance up to 20 % are enumerated. These are related to an unjustified refusal either to accept work offered, or to participate in integration measures for immigrants, or rehabilitative work or activities. For asylum-seekers, this provisions relate to the work-study programme in the reception centre, for approximately ten hours per week. Asylum-seekers are not offered integration measures or rehabilitative work or activities.

The reductions can be made only if they do not jeopardize subsistence necessary for a dignified life and the reduction cannot otherwise be considered unreasonable. The reduction can be made at the most for two months at a time.

Also, the social assistance can be increased, reduced or withdrawn altogether on the basis of a needs assessment, in accordance with section 22.

Q.21.B.Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice[366]?

No, it has not been transposed.

Q.21.C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

The decision concerning withdrawal must be made in accordance with the Act on Social Assistance, ie. the decision would be made by a qualified social worker, usually the person normally taking the decisions on the social assistance.

Q.21.D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the documentation pack you received at our meeting in Brussels in April)?

Yes.

Q.21.E.Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome[367]?

According to Administrative Courts, appeals have not been lodged.

Q.22. Q.22.A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

Decisions concerning the social assistance can appealed in accordance with section 24 of the Integration Act, to the local Administrative Court within whose jurisdiction the asylum seeker´s reception centre is located.

Q.22.B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

An asylum seeker may receive legal assistance for such an appeal on the basis of the general rules on legal aid laid down in the Act on Legal Aid (oikeusapulaki) 5.4.2002/257. Legal aid covered by the State can be granted to persons who need legal expertise and who due to their economic situation cannot cover the costs themselves (section 1, subsection 1). According to section 2, legal aid can be provided to any person who has a case pending in a Finnish court, or for other special reasons.

Hence, asylum-seekers would also be covered by this provision in the case of an appeal on the social assistance.

Q.22.C.Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones[368]? -No.

Q.22.D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

Asylum-seekers may in principle launch complaints about reception conditions to the Employment and Economic Development Centres (Työvoima- ja elinkeinokeskus or TE-keskus), which make the contract for reception centres for the State. Also, complaints to the Ombudsman for Minorities are available to asylum-seekers, as well as the general system for complaints to the Ombudsman of the Parliament.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

[368] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

Family members are defined in the Aliens´ Act, section 37, as:

(1) the spouse of a person residing in Finland, and unmarried children under 18 years of age whose parent or guardian the person residing in Finland is, are considered family members. If a person residing in Finland is a minor, his or her parent or guardian is considered a family member. A person of the same sex in a nationally registered partnership is also considered a family member.

(2) Persons living continuously in a marriage-like relationship within the same household regardless of their sex are comparable to a married couple. The requirement is that they have lived together for at least two years. This is not required if the persons have a child in their joint custody or if there is some other weighty reason for it.

However, for the purposes of reception conditions, persons living in a marriage-like relationship would not be required to formally show the length of their cohabitation in order to be counted as family members.

In the Integration Act (by Amendment Act 362/2005), Section 19, Subsection 2, it is stated that "Housing shall be organised so that family members can live together."

Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

In general, asylum-seekers are housed in reception centres, located in different parts of the country. Some of these centres are designated as transit centres for accommodation upon arrival, and located close to the offices of the Directorate of Immigration, where asylum interviews are held. Reception centres usually offer housing for single persons in double accommodation, and own rooms for families.

Q.24.B.What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers?[369] Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

The total number of places is 1774 (figure checked on 15 May, 2007). They are divided as follows: 40 places in the closed reception centre/detention centre, 1579 in open reception centres, and 155 places in group homes for unaccompanied child asylum seekers.

Q.24.C.Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?[370]

The number of places is generally sufficient.

Q.24.D.Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

Yes, there are emergency provisions in the Integration Law, and also a contingency plan for reception conditions in the case of a mass influx. The Ministry of Labour has a nation-wide contingency plan, the regional Employment and Economic Development Centres (Työvoima- ja elinkeinokeskus or TE-keskus)have a plan for their own region, and every reception centre has a local plan.

[369] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[370] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

The aim of the Ministry of Labour is that reception centres have a flexible amount of places that can be increased at short notice.

The Ministry of Labour seeks to have preparedness for emergency accommodation for 100.000 persons in cases of mass influx, and presently, some 50.000 places are identified.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25.A.Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

There are basically two different types of reception centres. Centres located near major ports of entry and/or near the offices of the Directorate of Immigration, which interviews asylum-seekers and takes the first-instance decisions, are designated as transfer centres, where asylum seekers may stay for the initial part of the procedure. This would usually cover the police interview concerning identity and travel route, and also sometimes the asylum interview carried out by the Directorate of Immigration.

Q.25.B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

There is no general rule concerning access to private houses or apartments. This possibility is subject to availability in the municipality of the reception centre. Access to apartments has been available mainly in the reception centre in Oravainen.

Q.25.C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

All reception centres have rules, which are based upon a template developed by the Ministry of Labour. All asylum seekers receive these rules in writing when they are registered in a reception centre.

Q.25.D.Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision? Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones? [371]

There is a possibility for sanctions, namely the reduction of the social assistance, but this can only take place in the situation of neglect of participation in work/activity programmes..

Q.25.E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

There is no general rule concerning the involvement of asylum seekers in the management of the centres. However, in many reception centres, there are regular meetings between the staffs and the residents.

Q.25.F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

Yes. Asylum seekers generally are obliged to participate in educational and working programmes in the reception centres, which vary considerably in content and subject matters. Elementary language courses, workshops, computer workshops and various maintenance duties in the reception centres usually form the core of the programmes. One reception centre reported having 4 hours of mandatory work or physical activities per week, and 6 hours of language and other courses per week.

[371] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

Asylum seekers basically enjoy freedom of movement, and their right to private life is protected by the Constitution. Legal advisers have free access to reception centres, and in the system currently in place, the Refugee Advice Centre, an NGO, has the main responsibility to provide asylum-seekers with legal advice and assistance. However, the system for legal assistance for asylum seekers is in flux at the moment. Since 1991, the Refugee Advice Centre has been providing legal assistance to asylum-seekers on a contract basis with the Ministry of Labour. In 2004, the Ministry placed out a call for tenders for the legal services, but the process has been delayed, and presently, the Refugee Advice Centre is taking care of legal advice and assistance on the basis of hourly billing. A working group dealing with the legal advise also concluded its work in 2007, and the system for legal advise and assistance is hence under review.

Asylum seekers are allowed to travel to meet their legal adviser, and lawyers also visit reception centres.

Q.26.B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

There is no clear legal provision providing for the access of UNHCR or legal advisers and NGOs, altough the practice is that the possibility to receive visitors is within the ambit of asylum-seekers´ right to private life, and their right according to the Aliens Act to have a legal adviser in the asylum procedure.

Most reception centres have a system of visitors announcing themselves, and this would also mean that legal advisers or NGOs would report their arrival to the staff. Otherwise, access of legal advisers UNHCR or NGOs would not be limited.

Q.26.C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

There is no legal basis for any such restrictions. According to reception centres, it is difficult to foresee a situation where a legal adviser or UNCHR could be limited. For instance concerning religious communities, their entry to public areas or residents´ rooms is subject to the residents´ own wishes.

Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

Yes, a medical screening is organized, and it includes an interview with a nurse, HIV testing and tests for some other communicable diseases, namely tuberculosis and hepatitis. The medical screening is voluntary, unless special national health concerns would warrant testing.

Mandatory testing can be introduced on the basis of the Communicable Diseases Act (tartuntatautilaki, 25.7.1986/583), Section 13. Decisions about such mandatory testing is taken by the State Provincial Office (lääninhallitus) in a particular municipality, The relevant State Provincial Office may order persons in a specific locality or workplace, institution, vehicle or other such location within the province to undergo a compulsory physical examination if necessary to prevent the spread of a generally hazardous communicable disease.

Generally hazardous communicable diseases are to be decided by Government Decree, according to Section 4, subsection 4 of the Communicable Diseases Act, as amended by Act 14.11.2003/935.

Q.27.B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Asylum seekers are entitled to emergency care and essential treatment of illness according to Section 19 of the Act on Integration and Section 19.1 of the Constitution. The constitutional clause creates a constitutional right of everyone to necessary care. The wording of the Act on Integration is that necessary health care shall be organized as part of the reception conditions. The exact content of the necessary health care is in part determined on a case-by-case basis, but always includes a health screening, emergency care including acute surgery, maternal health care, deliveries, and infant health care including innoculations.

Q.27.C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?[372]

The usual way of organising health care is that there is 1-2 nurses employed by the reception centres, and a doctor is hired on a consultation basis and comes in to examine patients at regular intervals. In emergency situations and sudden illness, asylum-seekers are entitled to use the emergency rooms of local health care stations or hospitals.

Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

3 months after lodging of the asylum claim.

Q.28.B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

According to the Aliens´ Act, section 81, subsection 1, point 5, persons who have sought international protection in Finland have the right to work after 3 months´ stay in Finland. This right to work is valid until the asylum seeker has reached a final decision for his application. No specific decision concerning the right to work is issued.

Q.28.C.After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

Asylum seekers are subject to the normal limitations in labour law eg. on working hours, regulations concerning overtime, etc. The general limitations for professions where a particular examination or competency is required, eg. particularly in the field of social welfare and health care, are also applicable to asylum-seekers.

Q.28.D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

[372] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Asylum seekers are not subject to any prioritisation.

Q.28.E.Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

Asylum seekers may have access to vocational training, but there is local variation, and access is dependant upon the discretion of the school.

Q.28.F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

They are the same as before.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

All asylum-seekers are entitled to the services included in the reception conditions, but the social assistance is based on needs assessment. Decree 389/2005 also provides for the possibility to charge an asylum-seeker who is not in need of social assistance a fee for housing of a maximum of 5 euros/day, and 0,70 euros/day for other reception conditions.

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30. Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

According to section 19, subsection 3 of the Integration Act, special needs on account of age, a vulnerable situation, the physical or mental condition of the asylum seeker shall be taken into account in the housing and other provision of reception conditions.
In practical terms, this would mean that the situation of single caretakers, pregnant women, families, disabled persons, and victims of torture and ill-treatment would be taken specially into account.
For reception of unaccompanied minors, there are special provisions and procedures (see below).

Q.30.B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

For vulnerable groups, special care would be taken eg. in providing suitable housing for disabled persons or pregnant women, providing mental health care services to victims of torture, and also some special services eg. for disabled persons.

Q.30.C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

The individual determination of special needs is done in the initial interview carried out by a social worker in the reception centre, and in the health screening.

Q.30.D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

There is a Centre for the rehabilitation of torture victims (Kidutettujen kuntoutuskeskus), which has clinics in Helsinki and Oulu, which provides therapy and rehabilitation also for asylum-seekers who are victims of torture. These centres are funded mainly through the income from the national slot-machine association (Raha-automaattiyhdistys), which has a gambling monopoly in Finland, and the procedes of which are managed by the Ministry of Social Welfare and Health. The procedes are distributed by decision of the Government. It is, hence, funding totally in the control of the Government, and is provided to a large number of organisations in the field of social welfare and health. Asylum-seekers can and are referred to this centre by reception centre nurses or doctors, but due to limits in capacity, waiting periods can be long.

In many cases, victims of torture will be referred to local mental health care services, the availability of which, however, varies in different parts of the country. In some cases, asylum-seekers may also be referred to private psychiatrists or therapists.

Concerning other categories of asylum-seekers with special needs, necessary medical and other assistance, on the basis of an assessment of the acute situation, is provided. However, the issue of what is necessary health care is to a large extent made as a medical assessment by the medical staff (nurses, doctors) at the reception centres, and no detailed guidelines in this respect exist. Concerning pregnant women, access to health care, also preventive maternity care, is on an equal basis as for women residing in Finland. Similarly, natal and postnatal care for women and for their children is given equally as to residents.

For other categories, eg. elderly persons and persons with disabilities or chronic diseases, placement in reception centres is carried out so as to allow for necessary treatment and care. However, more longterm rehabilitation will often not be available.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31.A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

Until they turn 18 years.

Q.31.B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Asylum seeker children in principle have access to education on the same basis as nationals. Access to free primary education (9 years) is granted in the Constitution, section 16, subsection 1. However, there have in the past been some problems relating to the access to education. The legislation is unclear on this point, since according to the Act on Primary Education (perusopetuslaki, 21.8.1998/628), Section 4, municipalities are under the obligation to provide primary education to children who are of the age for which attending schooling is compulsory, residing in the municipality. This would normally mean persons who have residence in a municipality based on a residence permit of at least one year.

Further, in Section 25 of the Act on Primary Education it is stipulated that:

1. Children permanently residing in Finland shall attend compulsory schooling. Compulsory schooling shall start in the year during which the child turns seven.Compulsory schooling shall end when the basic education syllabus has been completed or ten years after the beginning of compulsory schooling.
2. If, owing to the child's disability or illness, the objectives set for basic education cannot be achieved in nine years, compulsory schooling shall begin one year earlier than provided in subsection 1 and be 11 years in duration.

Since asylum-seeker children are not considered to be residing permanently in a municipality, they are not either considered to fall under the obligation of compulsory attendance in schooling, and therefore, the municipality´s obligation to provide schooling is not clear in the law. Nor is there a clearly stipulated time in the law for when asylum-seeker children´s schooling should begin, as stipulated in Article 10(1) of the Directive.

However, in practice and in most cases, asylum seeker children have access to municipal primary schools. In most cases, asylum seeker children also continue their education in secondary education, although the unclear legislative situation also pertains to them.

The same problem pertains to primary education in the self-governing Åland Islands. The Act on Primary Education of Åland contains the same problematic provisions as the national law. However, since there are no reception centres in Åland, this issue has not materialized in this area.

Q.31.C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Yes, in practice in most cases, although there is not clear time limit in the law for when schooling of asylum-seeker children should begin. However, in detention, there is no access to education, so if a child were to be detained for more than three months, this would raise a problem with respect to Article 10 § 2.

The issue of school for asylum-seeker children has been raised by the Ombudsman on Minorities with the European Commission.

Q.31.D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

Children with immigrant backgrounds are usually placed in special preparatory groups when they start in Finnish schools, where they receive intense language training, and tutelage partly in their own language. Children are then moved as quickly as possible to normal classes.

Q.31.E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Yes.

Q.31.F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Reception centres seek to refer children with special needs appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling. Mental health care services for children in Finland are scarce in many parts of the country, so access may be limited. The Integration Act , section 19, subsection 3, also clearly places an obligation to identify and address the mental health care needs of asylum seeker children

Q.31.G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

When an unaccompanied minor applies for asylum, s/he is directed to a special reception unit, a group home, for unaccompanied minors. The reception unit initiates a process with the local court for the appointment of a representative in accordance with sections 26-27 of the Integration Act, and the decision is usually taken by the court in a matter of weeks. No police hearings or interviews shall take place before a representative has been appointed.

There has, however, been instances when asylum seeker children travelling eg. with their grandparents and whose applications have is police before the appointment of a representative.

Q. 31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

As a rule, unaccompanied minors are placed in special accomodation centres, group homes, which usually function as parts of some other reception centre, although usually physically separated. According to the Ministry of Labour Decree 389/2005, Section 1, the provisions in the Child Welfare Decree 583/1983, section 8, concerning the size of groups and the number of staff in child care units, is applicable to the reception of unaccompanied minors in group homes.

Section 8 of the Child Welfare Decree states that a child care unit may at the most house 8 children, and that in a group of buildings, no more than 24 children may be housed. For every unit, there should be a sufficent number of staff, but no less than 5 persons.

Q. 31.I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

According to a recently adopted change in the Aliens Act, tracing of the family members of unaccompanied minors is to be carried out by the Directorate of Immigration, ie. the decision-making body (Aliens´ Act, amended by Amendment Act 1158/2006, Section 105 b). According to the provision, the Directorate shall as far as possible, in order to further the best interest of a minor asylum-seeker, trace his or her parents or other custodians without delay (subsection 1). Information concerning the persons to be traced shall be collected, treated and communicated as secret (subsection 2). This means that the information is subject to confidentiality rules, so that they can only be used by the authority in question and cannot be made public.

However, the new legislation has raised concerns, since eg. tracing is not subject to the approval of the child or his or her legal representative. It places no obligation on the authorities eg. to subject the tracing to an assessment of the security circumstances for the persons concerned.

The practical implementation of the new provisions is still being developed.

The Aliens Act was also amended to include a provision on the right for the Directorate of Immigration, the police and the Border Guard to receive information from reception centres concerning minor asylum-seekers (Section 105a §). This circumscribes the rules of confidentiality in the reception centres, and the Bill received extensive criticism for not taking due account of unaccompanied asylum-seekers ´ need for confidential relations with their caretakers in reception centres. In practice, the new legislation has ia. meant that social workers in reception centres operated by the Finnish Red Cross no longer assist unaccompanied minors in preparing tracing requests for the International Red Cross, but this is done by the representatives of the asylum-seekers.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?
Q.32.A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

Generally, unless there is a need for hospital care, housing would still be in the reception centres.

Q.32.A.Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

Temporarily, asylum-seekers would probably be placed for a night in a hostel or hotel, but if an asylum-application is lodged in a place where there is no reception centre, s/he would normally be transferred to a reception centre immediately.

Q.32.B.Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

Each reception has contingency plans which allow for fairly flexible and rapid enlargement of the reception capacity.

Q.32.C.The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

If an asylum-seeker is confined to a border post, this would entail that a detention decision has to be made. For a limited period of time, detainees may be held in police arrest premises.

Q.32.D. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

In situations of mass influx, organising centres would be opened, where reception conditions could be provided in kind for a limited period of time.

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6

§2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33.A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[373] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

According to section 121 of the Aliens´ Act, an alien may be ordered to be held in detention if:

1) taking account of the alien's personal and other circumstances, there are reasonable grounds to believe that the alien will prevent or considerably hinder the issue of a decision concerning him or her or the enforcement of a decision on removing him or her from the country by hiding or in some other way;
2) holding an alien in detention is necessary for establishing his or her identity; or
3) taking account of the alien's personal and other circumstances, there are reasonable grounds to believe that he or she will commit an offence in Finland.

Holding an alien in detention on grounds that his or her identity is unclear requires that the alien gave unreliable information when the matter was processed or refused to give the required information, or that it otherwise appears that his or her identity cannot be considered established.

This list of criteria for detention is an exhaustive list. Hence, an asylum-seeker may not be detained solely on the ground that s/he is an asylum-seeker. Article 18 § 1 can therefore, on the basis of the law, be said to be respected.

[373] Please specify it article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 which specifies that "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if has not yet to be transposed).

Q.33.B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

No.

Q.33.C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

There are legal alternatives in the Aliens´ Act.
According to section 118, an alien may be required to report regularly to the police or the border guards.
Section 119 enables the police or border guards to seize the travel documents of an asylum-seeker for the duration of the asylum procedure. This is done regularly.
Section 120 includes the possibility for placing a financial guarantee.

Q.33.D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

The initial decision on detention is taken by a senior police officer (Aliens´ Act, section 125). The local court is to be informed within 24 hours of the detention. Within 4 days from the detention decision, the asylum-seeker must be brought before a Court for a hearing on the continuation of detention.

Detention must be dealt with again by the local court every 14 days.

Q.33.E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

There is no maximum period for detention in the law. In principle, detention could be prolonged for the duration of the asylum procedure, but this would only happen exceptionally in some admissibility cases or cases dealt with under accelerated procedures. However, the Aliens´ Act, sections 127-128 contain provisions concerning the release of detained aliens, stating that a detained alien shall be released immediately when the grounds for detention stipulated in Article 121 of the Aliens Act seize to exist:

Section 127 – Releasing detained aliens
(1) The authorities handling the matter shall order a detained alien to be released immediately once the requirements for detention cease to exist.
(2) If the District Court has decided that the detention of the alien be continued, the authorities shall immediately notify the District Court of the place of detention of the alien's release. The notification may be made by telephone or electronically. A notification made by telephone shall be submitted without delay to the District Court in writing.

Section 128 - Rehearing at a District Court
If the release of an alien who has been held in detention has not been ordered, the District Court of the place of detention shall, on its own initiative, always rehear the matter concerning the detention or exceptional placement of an alien referred to in section 123 (3) no later than two weeks after the decision under which the District Court ordered continuation of the detention of the alien at the facility concerned.

Q. 33.F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

There is one closed reception centre, or detention centre, in Finland, placed in Helsinki. Both detained asylum seekers and other detained aliens are detained in the same facility. The Act on the treatment of detained aliens and on detention facilities (Detention Act) 116/2002, regulates the treatment of detained aliens, including asylum seekers. According to the Aliens´ Act, section 123, subsection 2,detained asylum seekers shall as quickly as possible be transferred to a detention centre. There are 34 places in the detention centre, and if that was reached other detained asylum seekers would be placed in prisons.

Q. 33.G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

Yes. According to the Detention Act, section 6, a detained alien is allowed to be in contact with his receiver in Finland, his close relative or other person near to him, the diplomatic or consular mission of his country of origin, the authority supervising the functioning of the detention centre, the Ombudsman for Minorities, a public legal adviser, an attorney or other person who has a legal degree, who is providing legal assistance to the alien, the supervisory bodies for human rights treaties, and the United Nations High Commissioner for refugees or the representative of UNHCR, and to NGOs, who give professional legal assistance and advice to asylum seekers, refugees and other aliens.

These contacts may not be supervised or limited. Visits by relatives or other private persons may be subject to security controls.

Q. 33.H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

The asylum seeker has the right to a judicial review of the detention decision, which is mandatory every 14 days. The review is carried out by the local civil Court (Aliens Act, section 128).

Q.33.I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

According to the Detention Act section 1, the provisions of the Integration Act are applicable in principle. However, in the detention centre, asylum seekers receive the reception conditions in kind, eg. the food is prepared and served.

Q.33.J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

Reception conditions are in principle the same as for normal reception conditions. However, the social assistance is given in kind, including prepared meals and asylum seekers are only given pocket money, 2 euros/day. Social counselling and emergency health care is organised. Work and activity programmes are not organised in the detention centre.

Q.33.K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

According to the Detention Act section 11, para. 2, the special needs of minors or victims of torture, rape or other physical or sexual violence or otherwise of persons in a more vulnerable situation, shall be taken into account when organising the care of them.

Q.33.L.Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Yes, children can be detained, both with their relatives and if they are unaccompanied. Before they are detained, a representative of the social authorities must be heard. The place of detention is the same closed reception centre also for unaccompanied children. There are no separate or designated areas for unaccompanied children or families in the closed reception centre/detention centre.

Q.33.M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

The same legal problem applies for detained minors as for other asylum seeker children. In addition, in practical terms, no education is provided for in the closed detention centre, which for detention periods of more than 3 months would raise an issue under Article 10 § 2.

The longest detention periods have been three months during the present legislation.

Q. 33.N.How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

The closed reception unit in Metsälä reception centre has 40 places, and it is usually full. In addition there may be asylum-seekers detained for shorter periods in police stations. A figure often cited is that approximately 10 percent of asylum-seekers in Finland get detained.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

The system is decentralised.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)

The reception centres are maintained on the basis of contracts, which also provide for full payment of the maintenance of the services. The contracting parties are the regional Labour and Enterprising Centres (Työ- ja elinkeinoelämän keskus; TE-keskus) which are the regional centres of the labour market authorities, and the entity maintaining the reception centre.

In principle, it is possible for any entity deemed appropriate to maintain a reception centre, given that the contents of reception conditions can be adequately provided.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?

There are fourteen reception centres: 2 state-run centres, 2 run by the Finnish Red Cross, and 10 run by municipalities.

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

There is no legal norm concerning dispersal. However, there is a general policy of dispersal, mainly governed by the wish to disperse asylum seekers in order to find them accommodation more easily if they are allowed to stay. This is judged to be easier if not all asylum-seekers are concentrated to the larger cities. All the costs of the reception are basically covered from State budget means.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?

There is a consultative body, the Advisory Board on Integration and Reception of Asylum Seekers (Kotouttamisen ja turvapaikanhakijoiden vastaanoton neuvottelukunta)
, which works in connection with the Ministry of Labour, and whose mandate and working modalities are drawn up in the Integration Regulation (vastaanottoasetus).

Q.39. Q.39.A.Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

The competent ministry for the system of reception conditions is the Ministry of Labour. In addition, the Ministry of Education (opetusministeriö) and the Central Board of Education oversees all educational matters. The Ministry of Social Welfare and Health is the ministry competent in issues on social welfare, social services and healthcare.

Regionally, the oversight is in the hands of the Employment and Economic Development Centres (Työvoima- ja elinkeinokeskus or TE-keskus.

Q. 39.B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?

The standards accepted for the reception centres are drawn up in the contracts with the maintainer of a reception centre, although detailed criteria are not written into the contracts. There has been work ongoing concerning the quality of reception conditions, and a handbook on quality work in reception centres has now been published.

Q. 39.C.How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?

The regional Employment and Economic Development Centres (Työvoima- ja elinkeinokeskus or TE-keskus)draw up the contacts with the reception centres and also regionally have the responsibility for guiding, controlling and monitoring there reception conditions. When it comes to the social assistance, the responsibility is with the municipal social authorities to monitor, and for the Administrative Courts to act as appellate bodies. On the central level, the Ministry of Labour is responsible for guidance, control and monitoring. On education, it is the local boards of education who are responsible for the monitoring of the quality and resources of the schools, which are almost solely run by municipalities in Finland.

Q. 39.D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?

Yes, the Employment and Economic Development Centres and the Ministry of Labour produce annual reports, which also cover the reception conditions.

Q.40. Q. 40.A.What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

2006: Altogether 4 638 persons were covered by reception conditions. 2324 persons applied for asylum during 2006.

Q.40.B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?

The total figure in 2006 was 34 362 355 euros.

Q.40.C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?

The average cost in 2006 per client in a reception centre was 15 043 euros, and for unaccompanied children 47 976 euros per client.

Q.40.D. Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

The costs of the reception conditions are covered by the Government, on the basis of Decree 512/1999 (Valtioneuvoston päätös pakolaisten ja turvapaikanhakijoiden vastaanotosta aiheutuvien kustannusten korvaamisesta) as amended by Decree 1108/1999, 940/2001, 196/2002, 664/2004, 373/2005

Q.40.E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?[374]
Yes, the provision is respected.

Q.41. Q.41.A.What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

There are roughly 300 persons. Usually one reception centre has a staff of about 12 persons, whereas the reception units for unaccompanied children have a staff around 20 persons.

Q.41.B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?[375]

[374] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[375] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Training of staff is primarily organised as in-house training. Important parts of the staff, particularly the health care staff and social workers, have special professional training requirements.

Q.41.C: Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?

The Integration Act, sections 41-43, deals with the possibilities for the staff of reception centres to receive information from other authorities about asylum seekers, about the possibility to provide information to other authorities (police, border guard, Directorate of Immigration) from the register of residents, and about the general rules of confidentiality of the staff. In addition, the health care and social staff are covered by confidentiality rules of their own professions.

The Aliens Act was recently amended to include a provision on the right for the Directorate of Immigration, the police and the Border Guard to receive information from reception centres concerning minor asylum-seekers (Section 105a). This circumscribes the rules of confidentiality in the reception centres, and the Bill received extensive criticism for not taking due account of unaccompanied asylum-seekers ´ need for confidential relations with their caretakers in reception centres. In practice, the new legislation has ia. meant that social workers in reception centres operated by the Finnish Red Cross no longer assist unaccompanied minors in preparing tracing requests for the International Red Cross, but this is done by the representatives of the asylum-seekers.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

No.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

Yes, there were. The Integration Act has been in force since 1998. With the Directive, some of the rules were specified more.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

To some extent, rules became clearer and more detailed.

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

The basic principles of reception have remained the same. However, the contents of reception conditions and provisions concerning information to asylum seekers were made more clear. Rules concerning charging for reception conditions were also included.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

During the debate on the amendments to the Integration Act, there was debate in Parliament in certain Committees, and some critical issues were brought up such as the education of asylum-seeker children.

Unrelated to the transposition of the directive, there is an ongoing argument as to whether the responsibility for reception conditions should be transferred to the Directorate of Immigration, the central authority competent concerning the asylum procedure.

The issue of confidentiality of information obtained from uanoccompanied minor asylum seekers by staff in reception centres and the right of asylum-seekers to private life was at the centre of the debate over a Bill (31/2006) in Parliament for the amendment of the Aliens Act and the Act on the Aliens Register. The amendments, which were passed as the Amendment Act to the Aliens Act 1158/21.12.2006 and the Amendment Act to the Act on the Aliens Register 1159/21.12.2006, obliges reception centre staff to provide information deemed relevant concerning unaccompanied minors seeking asylum to the the Directorate of Immigration, the police and the Border Guard (see above, Q 31.I).

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

There was no particular thrust to make reception conditions less favourable than previously. On the whole, the Finnish reception conditions are closely in line with the Directive. However, the pace has been very slow to address problematic issues in terms of the implementation of the Directive, namely the legal problems related to the right to education for asylum-seeker children.

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?[376]

The main weakness of the system is that it is designed for shorter residence, and asylum seekers may sometimes reside in reception centres for up to 3-4 years. This is passivating and difficult.

Housing conditions are also fairly uneven, ranging from own rental apartments to dormitory-like residence with several residents in a room.

Access to mental health care services is uneven.

A major strength is that the reception conditions are closely grounded in the Constitution and general legislation on health care, education and social assistance, and reception centres usually work at good professional level. It is also a strength that municipal schools are accessible to asylum seeker children, and the size of the reception centres is fairly managable, usually 50-150 places.

The system for the reception of unaccompanied minors has been developed significantly over the last year. However, the weakness of the reception of unaccompanied children is the lack of a uniform, special training system for the representatives of the children.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States[377]

- Access to labour market after 3 months.

[376] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[377] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

- Equal access to maternity and infant health care services as for residents.

- Access to municipal schools for children
- There is also an ESF/Equal project involving asylum seekers, Becoming More Visible (http://www.becomingmorevisible.net/www/english/). The Becoming More Visible Project's goals are to create new possibilities for work and study for asylum seekers in Finland. Cooperative models have been set up between the Reception Centres and adult education facilities, organisations, and businesses. These models can be adapted to rural or urban locations throughout Europe.

  The reception centers of Kajaani, Tampere and Turku form the partnership with the Finnish Association of Adult Education Centres. The project is administrated by Red Cross Finland, Southwest District.

  The BMV- Project is a partner in the ASAP - Asylum Seekers´ Active Partnership, with ATLAS from Scotland, INTEGRA 2004 from Italy, IN CORPORE from Lithuania, InPower from Austria and MUR from Poland.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answers.

It can be mentioned that in the Programme of the new Government, which took seat in April 2007, a reform of immigration administration is foreseen, so that the reception of asylum seekers and refugees, and integration of refugees and immigrants, is to be transferred from the Ministry of Labour to the Ministry of the Interior, which has previously been responsible for the decision-making procedures under the Aliens Act. The new Government also has a special portfolio for immigration, a Minister seated in the Ministry of the Interior.

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

La directive 2003/9 n'a pas fait l'objet d'une transposition organisée de manière spécifique en droit français, par exemple au moyen d'une norme générale et unique. On notera que, pour sa partie législative, la transposition du texte est effectuée de manière implicite puisque aucun des textes législatifs procédant à cette transposition ne se réclame explicitement d'une obligation tirée de la directive 2003/9. Par ailleurs, on notera que seuls trois textes à caractère réglementaire mentionnent expressément la directive dans leurs visas et que les travaux parlementaires font rarement référence à cette directive et à ses implications. On peut donc s'interroger sur la conformité de cette pratique au regard des exigences posées par l'article 26 §2 de la directive, malgré la latitude d'action laissée aux Etats membres par cette disposition.

La vérification du respect des dispositions de la directive résulte à la fois de la superposition de textes anciens déjà existants et de l'adoption de textes plus spécifiques, parmi lesquels on soulignera l'importance de la loi relative à l'immigration et à l'intégration votée le 30 juin 2006 dont le titre V porte "dispositions relatives à l'asile" et contient des dispositions particulières à l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile.

Plusieurs lois récentes constituent donc le corpus juridique destiné spécifiquement à assurer la transposition de la directive 2003/9. Ces textes ont été codifiés par l'ordonnance 2004-1248 du 24 novembre 2004 (JO 25 novembre 2004) portant création de Code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile (CESEDA) et plus particulièrement par son Livre VII "Le droit d'asile", dans ses articles L-711-1 et suivants.

Ce dispositif du CESEDA est composé de :

- la loi 2003-1119 du 26 novembre 2003 relative à la maîtrise de l'immigration (JO du 27 novembre 2003);
- la loi 2003-1176 du 10 décembre 2003 modifiant la loi 52-893 du 25 juillet 1952 relative au droit d'asile (JO du 11 décembre 2003)
- la loi n° 2006-911 du 24 juillet 2006dont le titre V contient des "dispositions relatives à l'asile" (JO du 25 juillet 2006)
- la loi n° 2007-1631 du 20 novembre 2007 relative à la maîtrise de l'immigration, à l'intégration et à l'asile (JO 21 novembre 2007)

Par ailleurs, le Code de l'Action sociale et des familles réglemente le régime légal des données sociales de l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile. Cette réglementation est effectuée soit de manière générale au titre du principe de non discrimination devant la protection sociale, soit de manière particulière pour telle ou telle catégorie précise de demandeurs, tels que les mineurs par exemple.

Enfin, au titre de la Cohésion sociale, la loi du 18 janvier 2005 comporte un chapitre intitulé "accueil et intégration des personnes immigrées ou issues de l'immigration" qui modifie le Code du travail et le code de l'action sociale et des familles. Elle répond en cela au programme 19 "Rénover l'accueil et l'intégration des populations immigrées" du plan de cohésion sociale de septembre 2004. Ce chapitre est bâti autour des quatre axes du programme :

- créer l'Agence nationale pour l'accueil des étrangers et les migrations (ANAEM) par fusion de l'Office des migrations internationales (OMI) et du Service social d'aide aux émigrants (SSAE);
- généraliser dès le 1er janvier 2006 le contrat d'accueil et d'intégration (CAI)
- mieux coordonner au plan local les instruments de la politique d'intégration en élaborant dans toutes les régions, sous l'autorité du représentant de l'Etat, un programme régional d'insertion des populations immigrées (PRIPI) qui acquiert un statut législatif;
- actualiser les missions du Fonds d'action et de soutien pour l'intégration et la lutte contre les discriminations (FASILD).

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

- Put as an annex to your report a paper copy of each norm in the original language with a reference number to help the reader to find it easily;
- Send us as an electronic version of each norm or a weblink to the text (this will be used for the website we are building);
- Provide the texts of any translation of the above norms into English if they are available.

La définition légale des conditions d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile en vertu de la directive 2003/9 est effectuée par la voie législative, en vertu d'une obligation constitutionnelle (Conseil Constitutionnel, décision 2004-496 DC, 10 juin 2004) qui oblige le législateur à intervenir en matière de transposition des règles de droit communautaire dérivé (1). De manière classique, le pouvoir réglementaire met ensuite en application ces dispositions législatives soit par voie de décrets ou d'arrêtés (2), soit par voie de circulaires et d'instructions administratives (3).

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

L'organisation administrative française distingue le traitement normatif de l'asile et son traitement administratif. Pour ce qui est du traitement normatif, la compétence normative relève des autorités centrales, selon le triple niveau (législatif, réglementaire, administratif) indiqué plus haut. Pour ce qui est du traitement administratif, susceptible de donner matière à des règles de mise en application les différents niveaux d'intervention sont :

- le ministère de l'Intérieur, qui intervient en amont (entrée sur le territoire, procédure d'admission au séjour) et en aval (éloignement des déboutés) de la procédure d'asile
- le ministère des Affaires étrangères, dont dépend l'OFPRA
- le ministère de la Justice, avec la CRR ;
- le ministère de l'Emploi et de la solidarité, à travers notamment sa direction de la population et des migrations (DPM) et l'ANAEM, agence en charge du service public d'accueil des étrangers. Ce ministère finance l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile et gère du point de vue économique et social l'immigration légale.

Depuis 2007, une réorganisation administrative est intervenue portant la création d'un nouveau ministère de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement. Le Ministre de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement est désormais compétent. Au titre de ses attributions, il prépare et met en œuvre la politique du gouvernement en matière d'immigration, d'asile, d'intégration des populations immigrées, de promotion de l'identité nationale et de codéveloppement. En application d'un décret n° 2007-999 du 31 mai 2007 (JO 1er juin 2007) relatif aux attributions du Ministre, il est compétent en matière d'exercice du droit d'asile et de protection subsidiaire et de prise en charge sociale des personnes intéressées. L'article 1er du décret n° 2007-1891 du 26 décembre 2007 (JO 30 décembre 2007) prévoit que l'administration centrale du ministère de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement comprend le service de l'asile. Un arrêté du 26 décembre 2007 (JO du 30 décembre 2007) porte organisation interne de l'administration centrale du ministère de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement. Le service chargé de l'asile comprend le département du droit d'asile et de la protection, le département de l'asile à la frontière et de l'admission au séjour et le département des réfugiés et de l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile.

Au titre de leurs compétences légales, et notamment en matière de financement de l'aide sociale, les collectivités territoriales sont susceptibles de participer à l'application de ces règles.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

Voir supra. La technique française de transposition des directives relève d'une obligation constitutionnelle pesant sur le législateur en vertu d'une jurisprudence constitutionnelle constante depuis le 10 juin 2004. Cette transposition donne matière à des mesures d'application relevant des techniques normatives ordinaires (actes réglementaires d'exécution de la loi, instructions administratives) et elle appelle des mesures d'exécution administratives.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

Comme indiqué précédemment, la banalisation de l'opération de transposition sans passer par l'adoption spécifique d'un texte particulier et le faible degré de contraintes découlant de la directive 2003/9 expliquent que le législateur ne se réfère quasiment jamais à la lettre de la directive sans qu'il semble, à ce stade en résulter de problèmes généraux de compatibilité au fond. En revanche, comme indiqué plus haut, la compatibilité de cette pratique avec l'article 26 de la directive est douteuse.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

Le caractère partiel et encore incomplet de l'opération de transposition explique que nombre de textes d'exécution soient encore en passe d'adoption, en particulier en raison de l'adoption très récente de la loi du 24 juillet 2006.

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

Sans objet. La transposition "éclatée" de la directive 2003/9 ajoutée au fait qu'un certain nombre de ses prescriptions étaient déjà inscrites en droit français l'explique. Ce n'est que de manière accessoire que les débats parlementaires font allusion à la nécessité de transposer la directive 2003/9 lors des travaux législatifs de 2003, le texte de la directive 2003/9 étant aggloméré avec celui des autres directives.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions ?)

L'organisation constitutionnelle française distingue un domaine de la loi, réservé au législateur, et un domaine du règlement, ouvert à l'intervention du pouvoir gouvernemental d'exécution des lois, précisé par l'intervention administrative à des fins de coordination et d'interprétation. Sur cette base, le système français de réception est composé de normes législatives, de normes réglementaires et de circulaires administratives, tant en ce qui relève des compétences d'ordre public que du point de vue social.

Q.11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

Il existe en droit français plusieurs types de protection : la protection principale des réfugiés est établie en vertu de l'article L-711-1 du CESEDA au titre de la Convention de Genève ou au titre du Préambule constitutionnel qui accorde l'asile à toute personne "persécutée pour son action en faveur de la liberté". La protection subsidiaire est accordée en vertu de l'article L-712-1 du CESEDA.

Ces deux régimes protecteurs sont reconnus par l'Office français de protection des Réfugiés et des Apatrides (OFPRA). Pour obtenir ce statut, un formulaire de demande d'asile doit être déposé dans le mois auprès de la préfecture, même en cas d'entrée irrégulière, et une admission provisoire au séjour (APS) est prononcée dans l'attente de la décision de l'OFPRA En cas de refus de l'OFPRA, la Commission de Recours des Réfugiés (CRR, devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile) peut être saisie par le demandeur soit du refus d'accorder le statut soit du type de protection reconnue. Si la CRR confirme la décision de l'OFPRA, obligation est faite de quitter le territoire national dans un délai nouveau, sauf nouvelle saisine de l'OFPRA faisant état d'un "élément nouveau". En cas de rejet, le Conseil d'Etat peut être saisi par la voie contentieuse mais ce recours ne suspend pas l'obligation de quitter le territoire sous délai d'un mois.

Dans le cas d'une procédure "Dublin", l'accès au territoire est refusé.

B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

Pour l'ensemble.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)?
Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

L'accueil des demandeurs d'asile recouvre deux formes principales. Le demandeur bénéficie de prestations en nature, à savoir un hébergement dans un centre d'accueil pour les demandeurs d'asile ou une structure d'hébergement gérée à cette fin. Si le demandeur d'asile ne peut bénéficier d'un hébergement pris en charge au titre de l'aide sociale, faute de places disponibles, une allocation temporaire d'attente (créée par la loi de finances de 2006 en remplacement de l'allocation d'insertion versée jusqu'alors) lui est versée. En revanche, depuis la loi du 24 juillet 2006 modifiant l'article L 351-9-1 du code du travail, si le demandeur d'asile refuse une offre de prise en charge, il ne pourra bénéficier de l'allocation temporaire d'attente. Une circulaire interministérielle du 24 novembre 2006 relative à l'allocation temporaire d'attente (DPM/ACI3/2006/495) explicite ce dispositif. Ainsi, les objectifs du gouvernement visent à "favoriser l'hébergement accompagné des demandeurs d'asile dans les centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile (CADA), l'allocation financière n'étant versée qu'à titre résiduel aux personnes auxquelles une offre d'hébergement n'aura pu être proposée. Ainsi, les personnes hébergées en CADA comme celles qui auront refusé une telle offre d'hébergement ne pourront bénéficier de cette allocation".
L'article L. 351-9 du Code du travail (modifié par l'article 154 de la loi de finance pour 2006) fixe les conditions d'attribution de cette allocation. Cette allocation est versée mensuellement, à terme échu, aux personnes dont la demande d'asile n'a pas fait l'objet d'une décision définitive (Art. L. 351-9-2. du Code du travail). Un décret du 13 novembre 2006 relatif à l'allocation temporaire d'attente précise notamment les conditions d'obtention de l'aide financière. Ce dispositif constitue une transposition de la directive 2003/9 dans la mesure où l'allocation d'insertion n'était préalablement versée que pour une période de 365 jours. Son montant est fixé par le décret n° 2006-1381 du 13 novembre 2006 et s'élève à 10,04 euros journaliers..

En outre, l'accès aux soins de santé est ouvert aux demandeurs d'asile.

Ces conditions matérielles d'accueil sont ouvertes aux demandeurs d'asile autorisés à entrer sur le territoire. Le problème se pose en revanche pour les demandeurs d'asile soumis à une procédure Dublin car dans ce cas l'admission sur le territoire est refusée (article L. 741-4 du CESEDA) et l'administration ne leur délivre pas d'autorisation provisoire de séjour (article 15 du décret 46-1574). A défaut d'obtention de ce document, ils ne peuvent solliciter l'allocation temporaire d'attente conformément aux règles posées par l'article L. 351-9 du Code du travail : "Peuvent bénéficier d'une allocation temporaire d'attente les ressortissants étrangers ayant atteint l'âge de dix-huit ans révolu dont le titre de séjour ou le récépissé de demande de titre de séjour mentionne qu'ils ont sollicité l'asile en France et qui ont présenté une demande tendant à bénéficier du statut de réfugié, s'ils satisfont à une condition de ressources.
"Ne peuvent prétendre à cette allocation les personnes qui proviennent soit d'un pays pour lequel le conseil d'administration de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides a décidé la mise en œuvre des stipulations du 5 du C de l'article 1er de la convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951 relative au statut des réfugiés, soit d'un pays considéré comme un pays d'origine sûr, au sens du 2o de l'article L. 741-4 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile".
En outre, cette catégorie de demandeurs d'asile rencontre des difficultés en pratique pour pouvoir accéder aux prestations médicales dans la mesure où certaines Caisses n'ouvrent le bénéfice des prestations médicales qu'aux demandeurs détenteurs d'une APS ou d'un récépissé de demande d'asile.

En dehors de l'accès aux soins de santé au travers de la Couverture Maladie Universelle, les demandeurs d'asile ne bénéficient pas d'un système d'aide sociale identique à celui des nationaux. Ces derniers sont notamment éligibles au Revenu Minimum d'Insertion (Revenu Minimum d'Insertion) et bénéficient d'un accès à différentes aides sociales telles que l'accès aux Habitations à Loyer Modérés (HLM) auxquelles les demandeurs d'asile ne peuvent prétendre. L'accès au système général d'aide sociale de l'Etat est ouvert aux réfugiés statutaires.

B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

De manière générale, les demandeurs d'asile hébergés dans des centres d'accueil bénéficient de conditions d'accueil suffisantes. Concernant les demandeurs d'asile exclus du dispositif national d'accueil, la réponse doit être négative. Un décret n° 2006-1381 du 13 novembre 2006 fixe le montant de l'allocation temporaire d'attente à 10,04 euros par jour. Ramenée au mois, cette allocation atteint approximativement 300 euros. Comparativement, le montant du Revenu Minimum d'Insertion versé aux ressortissants français s'élève au 1er janvier 2006 à 433, 06 euros pour une personne seule et 649, 59 euros pour un couple. Ce montant est du reste majoré si la personne seule ou le couple ont un ou plusieurs enfants. Il existe donc un décalage très important entre le montant de l'allocation d'insertion et le Revenu Minimum d'Insertion. En conséquence, le caractère suffisant des conditions d'accueil au sens de l'article 13 de la directive est douteux. La situation a connu néanmoins une légère amélioration du fait de la substitution de l'allocation d'insertion par l'allocation temporaire d'attente qui est désormais délivrée tout au long de la procédure d'examen de la demande et non plus pour la seule période d'un an.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

Le CESEDA reconnaît le principe du guichet unique, quel que soit le fondement sur lequel la protection est accordée. L'article L-713-1 du CESDA résultant du vote de la loi du 10 décembre 2003 indique que "la qualité de réfugié est reconnue et le bénéfice de la protection subsidiaire est accordé par l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides" (OFPRA) dans les conditions prévues au chapitre III du titre II du présent livre.

B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

La création du guichet unique et les missions confiées à l'OFPRA par les articles L-721-2 et L-721-3 du CESEDA indiquent qu'il n'est pas fait de distinction entre les différents types de protection. Il n'est donc pas fait usage de l'article 3 §4 de la directive 2003/9.

C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision) ?

L'asile territorial avait été reconnu en France principalement après sa formalisation par l'article 36 de la loi 98-349 du 11 mai 1998 et l'article 7 du décret 98-503 du 23 juin 1998 lui donnait une portée subsidiaire au regard de l'application de la Convention de Genève.

Le CESEDA a reconnu depuis l'existence de la protection subsidiaire en reprenant expressément les termes de la réglementation communautaire. La protection subsidiaire découlant du droit français a donc vocation à jouer sous deux conditions : le demandeur de protection ne peut pas prétendre à la qualité de réfugié politique et il satisfait aux exigences de l'article L. 712-1 du CESEDA

L'article L-712-1 du CESEDA indique que le bénéfice de la protection subsidiaire est accordé à toute personne qui ne remplit pas les conditions pour se voir reconnaître la qualité de réfugié mentionnées à l'article L. 711-1 et qui établit qu'elle est exposée dans son pays à l'une des menaces graves suivantes :
a) La peine de mort ;

b) La torture ou des peines ou traitements inhumains ou dégradants ;
c) S'agissant d'un civil, une menace grave, directe et individuelle contre sa vie ou sa personne en raison d'une violence généralisée résultant d'une situation de conflit armé interne ou international.

Cette protection est un droit que l'OFPRA est tenu de reconnaître au demandeur dès lors qu'il remplit les conditions exigées.

Les clauses de refus sont fixées à l'article L-712-2 et reprennent les termes de la directive 2004/83 et de l'article 1F de la Convention de Genève.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood ? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Les demandeurs de protection sont pleinement admis à bénéficier des conditions matérielles d'accueil dès le dépôt de leur demande et le "Guide du demandeur d'asile" qui leur est délivré ne contient aucune restriction à ce sujet.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

La circulaire portant application de la loi 2003-1176 du 10 décembre 2003 modifiant la loi n° 52-893 du 25 juillet 1952 relative au droit d'asile du 22 avril 2005 (NOR: INT/D/05/00051/C) règle la question : lorsque la décision de l'OFPRA refusant l'octroi d'une protection internationale est devenue définitive, et après recours devant la CRR (devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile) comme indiqué plus haut (Q.11), le demandeur d'asile débouté se voit notifier une décision de refus de séjour accompagnée d'une invitation à quitter le territoire dans le délai d'un mois. Toutefois une telle notification doit être précédée d'un examen de la situation personnelle de l'intéressé visant à apprécier si ce dernier peut prétendre à la délivrance d'un titre de séjour sur un autre fondement que l'asile. Si tel est le cas, l'intervention d'une décision définitive en matière d'asile ne fait pas obstacle à la délivrance d'une carte de séjour temporaire, voire d'une carte de résident.

Concernant les conditions matérielles d'accueil, il faut distinguer entre les personnes bénéficiant d'un hébergement en CADA et celles bénéficiaires de l'allocation temporaire d'attente.
Concernant l'hébergement en CADA, une circulaire interministérielle DPM/ACI3 n° 2007-184 relative aux modalités d'admission dans les centres d'accueil pour les demandeurs d'asile et de sortie de ces centres règle la situation de la manière suivante : "La personne ayant fait l'objet d'une décision définitive de rejet de sa demande d'asile peut se maintenir en CADA si elle en fait la demande, pour une durée maximale d'un mois à compter de la date à laquelle lui a été notifiée la décision définitive de l'OFPRA ou de la commission des recours des réfugiés. Ce délai d'un mois correspond au délai dont dispose l'intéressé pour quitter le territoire lorsque vous avez pris à son encontre une décision de refus de renouvellement ou de retrait de son récépissé assortie d'une obligation de quitter le territoire français (OQTF).

Concernant les bénéficiaires de l'allocation temporaire d'attente, l'article L 351-9-1 du Code du travail prévoit que le versement de l'allocation prend fin au terme du mois qui suit celui de la notification de la décision définitive concernant la demande d'asile.

L'objectif affiché par la réglementation française est de réduire les délais de séjour des déboutés de l'asile et d'en assurer un traitement prioritaire. La note d'instruction interministérielle DPM/AC13 n° 2006-31 du 20 janvier 2006 relative aux procédures d'admission et aux délais de séjour dans le dispositif national d'accueil était annonciatrice à ce sujet : "le maintien en CADA, sans droit ni titre, à l'expiration de la période de prise en charge prévue par leur contrat de séjour, des personnes définitivement déboutées de leur demande d'asile constitue une cause importante de l'engorgement des CADA qui doit être vigoureusement combattue. Dès lors qu'un demandeur d'asile a été définitivement débouté, il n'a plus vocation à se maintenir en CADA. Sa sortie du centre doit donc être organisée".

De plus, il est possible de mettre fin au versement de l'allocation sociale globale (ASG) aux personnes qui resteraient indûment hébergées en CADA à l'issue du délai autorisé de maintien dans les lieux qui est de quatre semaines.

Le caractère définitif de la procédure fait désormais l'objet d'une définition réglementaire au titre de l'article R 351-6 du Code du travail qui prévoit que doit être regardée comme définitive la décision notifiée par l'OFPRA qui n'a pas été contestée dans le délai d'un mois devant la CRR (devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile), et, en cas de recours, la décision de la Commission de Recours des Réfugiés.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Le principe de l'admission au séjour préalable au dépôt d'une demande de réexamen auprès de l'OFPRA a été maintenu par les nouvelles dispositions réglementaires en matière d'asile. L'article R 723-3 du CESEDA indique "Lorsque, à la suite d'une décision de rejet devenue définitive, la personne intéressée entend soumettre à l'office des éléments, sa demande d'examen doit être précédée d'une nouvelle demande d'admission au séjour et être présentée selon la procédure prévue à l'article R 723-1 [délai de dépôt de la demande d'asile après obtention de l'autorisation provisoire de séjour]. Le délai prévu au premier alinéa de cet article est alors limité à huit jours. Dans un délai de 96 heures suivant l'enregistrement de la demande, le directeur général de l'office décide, au vu des éléments produits, s'il y a lieu de procéder à un nouvel examen de la situation de l'intéressé. Le silence gardé par le directeur au terme de ce délai vaut rejet de la demande".

Toutefois, des modifications de fond ont été apportées à la procédure de réexamen afin d'en éviter un usage abusif dans le but exclusif du maintien sur le territoire français. La procédure de réexamen ne s'applique pas au demandeur d'asile débouté dont il est établi avec certitude qu'il a résidé dans son pays d'origine depuis l'intervention d'une décision définitive sur une précédente demande et elle ne s'applique pas non plus à l'étranger précédemment débouté d'une demande d'asile territorial et qui souhaiterait déposer pour la première fois une demande d'asile auprès de l'OFPRA sur le fondement des nouvelles dispositions législatives introduites par la loi du 10 décembre 2003 relative à l'asile.

La procédure de réexamen concerne donc exclusivement le demandeur d'asile conventionnel débouté qui entend soumettre des éléments nouveaux à l'OFPRA. Son instruction est assurée comme celle d'une première demande d'asile. L'administration ne peut refuser de prendre en compte une demande au motif qu'elle apparaît dénuée, même manifestement, de tout fondement. En effet, l'appréciation du bien fondé de la demande de réexamen, l'existence de faits nouveaux et l'appréciation le cas échéant de la pertinence de ces éléments nouveaux relèvent de la compétence exclusive de l'OFPRA.

Le cas des demandes de réexamen est spécifiquement prévu par circulaire interministérielle DPM/ACI3 n° 2007-184 relative aux modalités d'admission dans les centres d'accueil pour les demandeurs d'asile et de sortie de ces centres : " La prise en charge en CADA est limitée à la durée de la première procédure devant l'OFPRA et, le cas échéant, devant la CRR. En conséquence, le demandeur d'asile ayant sollicité le réexamen de sa demande d'asile a vocation à quitter le CADA à l'expiration du délai précisément défini à l'article R. 348-3-I-2°, sauf si vous décidez de renouveler son titre de séjour dans les conditions définies à l'article R. 742-1 du CESEDA.".

Q.17[378]. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

L'article R 741-2, 4), 2nd alinéa du CESEDA dispose que : " l'indication des pièces à fournir par l'étranger qui sollicite son admission au séjour au titre de l'asile en application du présent article est portée à sa connaissance par les services de la préfecture. Ces derniers remettent alors à l'étranger un document d'information sur ses droits et sur les obligations qu'il doit respecter eu égard aux conditions d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile, ainsi que sur les organisations qui assurent une assistance juridique spécifique et celles susceptibles de l'aider ou de l'informer sur les conditions d'accueil dont il peut bénéficier, y compris les soins médicaux".

B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?
Le document précité qui est délivré par la préfecture est le "guide du demandeur d'asile".

B. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available
Le document précité est disponible dans les langues suivantes : français, anglais, russe, arabe, albanais, et serbo-croate. Le site du ministère de l'intérieur ne propose que trois versions (français, anglais, russe) de ce document.

C. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?
Les informations délivrées au demandeur d'asile sont données au moment du dépôt de la demande d'asile auprès des services de la préfecture.

Q.18[379]. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

L'article R 741-2 du CESEDA prévoit que les services de la préfecture remettent au demandeur les informations sur les organisations qui assurent une assistance juridique spécifiques et celles susceptibles de l'aider ou de l'informer sur les conditions d'accueil dont il peut bénéficier.
Le Guide du demandeur d'asile précité qui est élaboré sous l'égide du ministère de l'Intérieur fournit une liste d'organisations et associations. Aucune précision spécifique n'est en revanche donnée dans ce document quant à la nature juridique ou médicale du soutien offert par ces organismes.

B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?
L'information est écrite. Elle est également disponible sur Internet (www.interieur.gouv.fr).

C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

[379] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or to be completed on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Le guide du demandeur d'asile est disponible dans les langues suivantes : français, anglais, russe, arabe, albanais, et serbo-croate. Le site du ministère de l'intérieur ne propose que trois versions (français, anglais, russe) de ce document.

D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State ?
Pas de recensement

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

Il existe deux types de documents délivrés aux demandeurs d'asile. En premier lieu, l'article R 742-1 du CESEDA indique que dans un délai de quinze jours après avoir présenté sa demande et fourni les documents exigés par l'article R 741-2 du CESEDA, le demandeur d'asile est mis en possession d'une autorisation provisoire de séjour portant la mention : "en vue de démarches auprès de l'OFPRA", d'une validité d'un mois, pour autant qu'il ne soit pas fait application du 1° au 4° de l'article L. 741-4 du CESEDA sans préjudice du 1er alinéa de l'article L 742-6.

Ensuite, et en application de l'article R 742-2 du CESEDA : Le demandeur d'asile auquel une autorisation provisoire de séjour a été délivrée en application de l'article R. 742-1 est mis en possession d'un récépissé de la demande d'asile valant autorisation provisoire de séjour dans un délai maximal de trois jours à compter de l'expiration de la validité de l'autorisation provisoire de séjour mentionnée à l'article R. 742-1, sur présentation de la lettre de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides l'informant de l'enregistrement de sa demande d'asile ou de la décision de procéder à un nouvel examen de cette demande. Ce récépissé porte la mention « récépissé constatant le dépôt d'une demande d'asile » et a une durée de validité de trois mois renouvelable jusqu'à la notification de la décision de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides.

La circulaire du 22 avril 2005 (NOR: INT/D/05/00051/C) détaille précisément le jeu de ces différents documents :

- L'autorisation provisoire de séjour (APS), d'une validité d'un mois, permet au demandeur de séjourner régulièrement pendant le temps de transmission et d'enregistrement de son dossier à l'OFPRA. Ce document est délivré à partir du moment où le demandeur d'asile se présente dans les services administratifs muni d'un dossier complet au sens de l'article 14 du décret du 30 juin 1946 (informations relatives à l'état-civil, de photographies d'identité, éléments permettant d'apprécier l'opportunité de mettre en oeuvre la procédure Dublin, adresse permettant de faire parvenir au demandeur le courrier administratif relatif à la procédure et de confirmer la compétence territoriale de l'administration). Ce document n'est pas renouvelable, ce qui oblige le demandeur à faire diligence pour déposer sa demande auprès de l'OFPRA. A l'issue de l'expiration de ce délai de un mois, une décision de refus de séjour et l'invitant à quitter le territoire au motif qu'il ne remplit pas les conditions prévues par l'article 16 du décret du 30 juin 1946 ni aucune autre condition prévue par le Code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile pour être admis au séjour peut être signifiée au demandeur, après examen de sa situation individuelle.

Si l'intéressé maintient sa demande d'asile ou se présente ultérieurement pour déposer une nouvelle demande d'asile, il appartient à l'administration de refuser de l'admettre provisoirement au séjour sur le fondement de l'article L-741-4-4° du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile et de transmettre cette demande à l'OFPRA, accompagnée de la fiche de saisine en procédure prioritaire.

- Le récépissé de demande d'asile permet au demandeur de résider régulièrement sur le territoire pendant le temps nécessaire à l'instruction de sa demande. Il doit donc en principe être renouvelé jusqu'à ce que la décision de l'OFPRA, et le cas échéant celle de la CRR, interviennent. Il est délivré sur présentation par le demandeur de la lettre de l'OFPRA l'informant de l'enregistrement de sa demande ou sur consultation de la base de données de l'OFPRA.

- Le récépissé de la Commission des recours permet au demandeur de voir prolonger le récépissé de demande d'asile, lorsqu'un demandeur d'asile débouté par l'OFPRA forme un recours auprès de la CRR (devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile). Le courrier de la Commission des recours des réfugiés informant l'intéressé de l'enregistrement de son recours est le seul document probant. En l'absence de présentation de ce document par le demandeur d'asile, et si après consultation de la base de données de l'OFPRA, il apparaît qu'il n'est pas fait mention de l'enregistrement d'un recours par la CRR, une notification de décision de refus de séjour assortie d'une invitation à quitter le territoire peut être adressée, si le délai de recours a expiré et après examen de sa situation individuelle.

B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

En application de l'article 742-1 du CESEDA, l'autorisation provisoire de séjour n'est pas délivrée lorsque le demandeur entre dans les situations relevant de l'article L. 741-4 CESEDA (ancien art. 8, 1° à 4° Loi de 1952). Dans ce cas, l'entrée en France est refusée.

L'article L-741-4 du CESEDA dispose que ;

"Sous réserve du respect des stipulations de l'article 33 de la convention de Genève du 28 juillet 1951 relative au statut des réfugiés, l'admission en France d'un étranger qui demande à bénéficier de l'asile ne peut être refusée que si :

1° - L'examen de la demande d'asile relève de la compétence d'un autre Etat en application des dispositions du règlement (CE) n° 343/2003 du Conseil du 18 février 2003 établissant les critères et mécanismes de détermination de l'Etat membre responsable de l'examen d'une demande d'asile présentée dans l'un des Etats membres par un ressortissant d'un pays tiers, ou d'engagements identiques à ceux prévus par ledit règlement avec d'autres Etats ;

2° - L'étranger qui demande à bénéficier de l'asile a la nationalité d'un pays pour lequel ont été mises en œuvre les stipulations du 5 du C de l'article 1er de la convention de Genève susmentionnée ou d'un pays considéré comme un pays d'origine sûr. Un pays est considéré comme tel s'il veille au respect des principes de la liberté, de la démocratie et de l'état de droit, ainsi que des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales.

La prise en compte du caractère sûr du pays d'origine ne peut faire obstacle à l'examen individuel de chaque demande ;

3° - La présence en France de l'étranger constitue une menace grave pour l'ordre public, la sécurité publique ou la sûreté de l'Etat ;

4° - La demande d'asile repose sur une fraude délibérée ou constitue un recours abusif aux procédures d'asile ou n'est présentée qu'en vue de faire échec à une mesure d'éloignement prononcée ou imminente. Constitue, en particulier, un recours abusif aux procédures d'asile la présentation frauduleuse de plusieurs demandes d'admission au séjour au titre de l'asile sous des identités différentes. Constitue également un recours abusif aux procédures d'asile la demande d'asile présentée dans une collectivité d'outre-mer s'il apparaît qu'une même demande est en cours d'instruction dans un autre Etat membre de l'Union européenne.

Les dispositions du présent article ne font pas obstacle au droit souverain de l'Etat d'accorder l'asile à toute personne qui se trouverait néanmoins dans l'un des cas mentionnés aux 1° à 4°.

C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

L'article R 742-2 du CESEDA, 2ème alinéa indique que le récépissée portant la mention "récépissé constatant le dépôt d'une demande d'asile" a une durée de validité de trois mois renouvelable jusqu'à la notification de la décision de l'OFPRA.

D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[380]?

La réglementation française encadre strictement les délais accompagnant chaque pièce du dossier :
- L'autorisation provisoire de séjour (APS) doit être délivrée dans un délai maximal de quinze jours à compter de la production par le demandeur d'asile d'un dossier complet au sens de l'article R 742-1 du CESEDA.
- Le récépissé de demande d'asile doit être délivré au plus tard à l'expiration d'un délai de trois jours à compter de l'expiration de l'APS. Cette mesure constitue du point de vue de l'administration française une mesure de transposition de l'article 6 de la directive 2003/9/CE. Elle est censée être aménagée de manière à permettre une planification des rendez-vous si le fonctionnement propre au service administratif d'accueil le nécessite. Ce délai de trois jours ne peut être invoqué utilement à l'encontre de l'administration par un étranger qui souhaiterait se voir délivrer un récépissé sans être en mesure de justifier de l'enregistrement de sa demande d'asile par l'OFPRA. (circulaire du 22 avril 2005 N° NOR: INT/D/05/00051/C, p. 8).

Le délai de trois jours posé par la directive n'est cependant pas respecté en réalité. La combinaison des articles R 742-1 et R 742-2 conduit en pratique à additionner deux délais (quinze jours pour l'autorisation provisoire de séjour à l'expiration de laquelle le récépissé de demande d'asile valant autorisation provisoire de séjour est délivré dans les trois jours). L'article R 742-2 du CESEDA n'est donc pas conforme à l'article 6-1 de a directive car il joue sur la confusion entre demandes d'asile et autorisation provisoire de demeurer sur le territoire.

- Le récépissé auquel peut prétendre le demandeur d'asile qui dépose un recours devant la CRR (devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile) doit être délivré sans délai sur présentation du document intitulé "reçu du recours" attestant de l'enregistrement du recours au greffe de la commission.

- Le récépissé de demande de carte de séjour délivré à l'étranger qui a obtenu le statut de réfugié ou le bénéfice de la protection subsidiaire doit être délivré au plus tard dans les huit jours qui suivent la présentation de l'étranger au guichet pour demander son titre de séjour, muni d'un document attestant du sens positif de la décision de l'OFPRA ou de la CRR (devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile). Si l'intéressé présente ce document, mais que le sens de la décision n'a pas encore été communiqué, il appartient à l'administration de s'assurer par la consultation de la base de données de l'OFPRA de la réalité de la protection accordée (au regard du cadre du rapport et des instructions aux rapporteurs, cette dernière précision ne semble pas nécessaire).

E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

La réglementation française ne prévoit pas cette possibilité.

F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

L'article L 741-2 du CESEDA indique que "lorsqu'un étranger se trouvant à l'intérieur du territoire français demande à bénéficier de l'asile, l'examen de sa demande d'admission au séjour relève de l'autorité administrative compétente". Ainsi, la demande d'admission au séjour du demandeur d'asile relève de la compétence du préfet du département de résidence du candidat à l'asile. Une fois admis au séjour, la demande d'asile est envoyée à l'OFPRA qui est le seul organe compétent pour examiner les demandes d'asile et centralise donc toutes les demandes (art. L 713-1 CESEDA).

A titre expérimental et pour une durée de un an, quatre arrêtés du 30 décembre 2006 et du 19 avril 2007 organisent, une expérimentation de l'admission au séjour des demandeurs d'asile dans quatre régions françaises (Bretagne, Haute – Normandie, Aquitaine, Champagne-Ardenne). Selon ce schéma, les demandeurs d'asile séjournant dans ces régions devront déposer leur demande de séjour auprès des préfectures de régions et non plus des préfectures de département. Ces dernières conservant toutefois leur compétence en matière de réexamen, de renouvellement du récépissé de titre de séjour ou de demande de délivrance du titre de séjour définitif.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers[381]:

A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

La détention d'un récépissé d'une demande de délivrance ou de renouvellement d'un titre de séjour, d'un récépissé d'une demande d'asile ou d'une autorisation provisoire de séjour autorise la présence de l'étranger en France sans préjuger de la décision définitive qui sera prise au regard de son droit au séjour. Sauf dans les cas expressément prévus par la loi ou les règlements, ces documents n'autorisent pas leurs titulaires à exercer une activité professionnelle (article L-311-4. alinéa 1er du CESEDA)

B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

[381] Nota bene: the case of detention is covered by other questions and should be ignored under this question.

Le principe est que les demandeurs d'asile qui sollicitent la délivrance d'une Autorisation Provisoire de Séjour (APS) ont pour seule obligation de faire connaître l'adresse à laquelle il est possible de leur faire parvenir toute correspondance.

L'article L 741-2, 4°) du CESEDA prévoit que lorsque le demandeur choisit de se faire domicilier auprès d'une association, celle-ci doit être agréée par les soins de l'administration. La circulaire NOR/INT/D/05/00014/C en date du 21 janvier 2005 relative aux conditions d'examen des demandes d'agrément émanant des associations assurant la domiciliation des demandeurs d'asile organise ces dernières.

Cette mesure contraint les demandeurs d'asile à produire une domiciliation associative. Ils sont libres de se faire domicilier auprès d'un parent ou d'un tiers par exemple, cette domiciliation ne faisant pas obstacle à la délivrance de l'APS.

Les demandeurs d'asile sont donc libres de choisir leur lieu de résidence (sauf cas de placement en centres de rétention administrative et zone d'attente). La condition de domiciliation pose néanmoins problème au regard de l'article 7 de la directive. La réglementation française sanctionne en effet l'absence de domiciliation du demandeur telle que l'article R 742-4 (ancien art. 17-1 du décret 46-1574) la définit : "l'étranger déjà admis à séjourner en France qui sollicite la délivrance d'un récépissé de demande d'asile au titre des dispositions du premier alinéa de l'article R 742-2 (ancien article 16 du décret 46-1574) communique, à l'appui de sa demande, l'adresse où il est possible de lui faire parvenir toute correspondance dans les conditions prévues au 4° de l'article R 741-2 (ancien article 14 du décret 46-1574)".

Du point de vue du ministère de l'Intérieur, à travers la circulaire INT/D/05/00051/C du 22 avril 2005 précitée, " le nouvel article 17-1 du décret du 30 juin 1946 modifié prévoit que le renouvellement du récépissé de demande d'asile est subordonné à la justification par le demandeur du lieu où il a sa résidence". "J'attire votre attention sur le fait que cette nouvelle disposition ne doit en aucun cas être interprétée comme une obligation créée à la charge du demandeur d'asile de justifier d'un domicile personnel pour obtenir le renouvellement de son récépissé. Le demandeur pourra donc vous fournir utilement une attestation d'hébergement en CADA portant l'adresse administrative de l'établissement hébergeant (sans qu'il soit besoin d'exiger l'adresse exacte du logement occupé au sein de cet établissement), un contrat de location établi en son nom, un certificat d'hébergement chez un tiers, ou toute autre pièce qui paraîtrait recevable aux fins de justificatif de résidence. Sur ce point, je vous invite à vous reporter aux dispositions contenues dans ma circulaire NOR/INT/D/00/00277/C en date du 6 décembre 2000 relative aux pièces justificatives pour la délivrance des titres de séjour. Il résulte de ces nouvelles dispositions que vous devrez désormais notifier au demandeur d'asile qui ne remplira pas la condition de domiciliation prévue à l'article 17-1 du décret, une décision de refus de renouvellement de son récépissé. Cette décision n'interrompt pas l'examen au fond de sa demande par l'OFPRA ou la CRR (devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile) et n'implique pas la mise en oeuvre de la procédure prioritaire. Le nouvel article 17-1 du décret du 30 juin 1946 modifié prévoit que le renouvellement du récépissé de demande d'asile est subordonné à la justification par le demandeur du lieu où il a sa résidence.

Sauf situation d'extrême précarité autorisant une domiciliation auprès du secteur associatif, la condition de domiciliation effective apparaît donc comme une condition supplémentaire ajoutée par la réglementation française. Il pose la question de sa compatibilité avec le principe de libre circulation de l'article 7 de la directive 2003/9.

C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

Il n'existe pas en France d'affectation autoritaire du demandeur dans un lieu donné. Ce dernier conserve le libre choix de son lieu de résidence mais l'évolution du système tend à contraindre progressivement cette liberté de choix visant à lier lieu de résidence et obtention des prestations sociales. Comme le démontre le nouvel article L. 351-9-1 du Code du travail, les personnes mentionnées à l'article L. 351-9 dont le séjour dans un centre d'hébergement est pris en charge au titre de l'aide sociale ne peuvent bénéficier de l'allocation temporaire d'attente : "il en va de même pour les personnes mentionnées à l'article L. 351-9 qui refusent une offre de prise en charge répondant aux conditions fixées au premier alinéa du même article. Si ce refus est manifesté après que l'allocation a été préalablement accordée, le bénéfice de l'allocation est perdu au terme du mois qui suit l'expression de ce refus".

Le système d'accueil français s'organise sur une démarche dirigiste. Si le demandeur d'asile refuse l'offre de prise en charge, il ne pourra bénéficier de l'allocation temporaire d'attente. Cette dernière est seulement délivrée aux demandeurs pour lesquels l'administration n'est pas en mesure de proposer un hébergement en centre d'accueil. Cette démarche est clairement explicitée par une circulaire interministérielle du 24 novembre 2006 relative à l'allocation temporaire d'attente (DPM/ACI3/2006/495) qui indique que les objectifs du gouvernement visent à "favoriser l'hébergement accompagné des demandeurs d'asile dans les centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile (CADA), l'allocation financière n'étant versée qu'à titre résiduel aux personnes auxquelles une offre d'hébergement n'aura pu être proposée. Ainsi, les personnes hébergées en CADA comme celles qui auront refusé une telle offre d'hébergement ne pourront bénéficier de cette allocation".

Cette logique est renforcée par la consécration, par la loi du 24 juillet 2006, dans le Code de l'action sociale et des familles (CASF) de l'existence légale des centres d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile. Les nouveaux articles L 348-1 à L 348-4 du CASF organisent l'existence et les missions des CADA. Désormais, les demandeurs d'asile devront uniquement être hébergés dans les CADA, sauf décision du demandeur d'avoir recours à l'initiative privée, Ce dispositif ayant pour objet de rationaliser l'organisation de l'hébergement de cette catégorie spécifique de ressortissants de pays tiers qui était auparavant hébergée en fonction des ressources à savoir dans des centres d'hébergement et de réinsertion sociale (CHRS) voire des structures d'urgence telles que les AUDA (structures d'Accueil d'Urgence des Demandeurs d'Asile) voire même dans des hôtels. Ces structures ont été mises en place à partir de novembre 2002, à la demande de la Direction de la population et des migrations (DPM) pour désengorger temporairement les structures parisiennes d'hébergement d'urgence. Ces centres d'hébergement sont gérés par la Sonacotra.

La loi du 24 juillet 2006 participe d'une refonte de la politique française de l'hébergement des demandeurs d'asile au travers, d'une part, d'une incitation forte à recourir à ces structures et, d'autre part, de l'augmentation du nombre de places disponibles dans les CADA.

Mis à part le recours à l'initiative privée, la réforme du dispositif national d'accueil de droit commun a profondément remanié les conditions de cet accueil. Les préfets de région exercent désormais l'autorité de l'Etat sur le dispositif national d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile dans leur région pour les capacités des Centres d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile (CADA) et il a vocation à jouer un rôle essentiel dans la péréquation interdépartementale pour la répartition des places.

Une coordination générale du dispositif a été instituée à partir de 2003, consistant à gérer au mieux la répartition des demandeurs d'asile entre tous les CADA du territoire en raison de la crise du dispositif et du nombre très insuffisant de places, notamment en région parisienne. Cette mission de répartition, d'abord confiée à l'association France - Terre d'asile, a été transférée à l'Agence nationale d'accueil des étrangers et des migrations (ANAEM), lors de sa création en 2005, par la fusion de l'Office des migrations internationales et de l'organisme associatif qu'était le Service social d'aide aux émigrants. Dans le cadre de cette coordination, les demandeurs peuvent être amenés à résider en un endroit précis pour bénéficier du dispositif.

Les critères d'éligibilité et de maintien en CADA sont définis par voie administrative par le biais d'une circulaire interministérielle DPM/ACI3 n° 2007-184 du 3 mai 2007 relative aux modalités d'admission dans les centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile et de sortie de ces centres.

D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)[382]

Cette question n'est pas réglée directement en droit positif. Comme décrit plus haut, le système d'accueil français repose soit sur un hébergement direct, soit sur un hébergement alternatif d'urgence, voire en hôtel, dans la mesure où les capacités matérielles et financières le permettent. Les différents rapports parlementaires critiquent cette situation d'engorgement : "la réalité de l'hébergement des demandeurs est très complexe, car les différentes catégories de population aidées sont totalement mélangées dans les dispositifs d'accueil. Dans un rapport consacré aux familles déboutées du droit d'asile, l'IGAS a essayé en 2004 d'estimer par des sondages locaux l'importance des populations concernées. D'après les éléments recueillis, on compterait 23.850 demandeurs d'asile hébergés dont 10.350 dans le dispositif dédié – CADA et accueil d'urgence des demandeurs d'asile –, le reste se répartissant dans le dispositif généraliste. S'y ajoutaient 5.400 réfugiés statutaires, dont 1.800 dans les structures dédiées, et 5.950 déboutés ou sans papiers, dont 850 dans le dispositif dédié. La situation est d'autant plus complexe et difficile à évaluer que l'on trouve dans le dispositif dédié des personnes qui ne devraient plus y être, et dans le dispositif généraliste des personnes qui pourraient avoir droit au dispositif dédié. Selon d'autres évaluations, on trouve dans les CADA 17 % de réfugiés statutaires et 7 à 8 % de déboutés. Lorsqu'un demandeur se voit accorder le statut de réfugié, il reçoit, dans les trois mois en moyenne, une carte de résident et bénéficie, s'il le souhaite, des droits sociaux communs, RMI notamment, dans un délai d'environ deux mois. S'il se trouve en CADA, il doit quitter cette structure. Néanmoins, de nombreux réfugiés statutaires demeurent dans les centres jusqu'à six mois, d'une part à cause des délais évoqués plus haut, et d'autre part, car ils se heurtent aux difficultés de l'insertion dans le monde du travail et plus encore, aux difficultés de l'accès au logement, aidé ou non".

Afin de réorganiser et de rationaliser l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile, l'accueil et l'hébergement "bénéficient aujourd'hui non seulement d'un encadrement juridique plus clair mais aussi d'un effort matériel conséquent. Entre 2004 et 2006, le nombre de places disponibles en CADA est passé de 15 470 à 19 470, un objectif de 21 000 places ayant été fixé pour l'année 2007"[383]. De sorte que selon cet objectif, les demandeurs d'asile pourront tous être hébergés dans des CADA évitant par conséquent leur placement dans des structures d'urgence ou des hôtels.

E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

Le droit français ne régit pas cette situation en ce qui concerne une résidence normale.

Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Le nouvel article L. 351-9-1 du Code du travail prévoit le retrait de l'allocation temporaire d'attente si le demandeur d'asile refuse une offre de prise en charge dans un centre d'hébergement. Ce dispositif a pour but d'inciter les demandeurs d'asile à intégrer les structures d'accueil dédiées.

Il indique que "les personnes mentionnées à l'article L. 351-9 dont le séjour dans un centre d'hébergement est pris en charge au titre de l'aide sociale ne peuvent bénéficier de l'allocation temporaire d'attente.

"Il en va de même pour les personnes mentionnées à l'article L. 351-9 qui refusent une offre de prise en charge répondant aux conditions fixées au premier alinéa du même article. Si ce refus est manifesté après que l'allocation a été préalablement accordée, le bénéfice de l'allocation est perdu au terme du mois qui suit l'expression de ce refus"

Un article R 351-16 du Code du travail précise que le préfet communique chaque mois, à l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations communique, et aux institutions gestionnaires chargées du service de l'allocation les listes nominatives des demandeurs d'asile ayant refusé l'offre de prise en charge.

Par ailleurs, le contrôle visant à s'assurer que la personne bénéficiaire continue à remplir les conditions d'octroi de l'allocation est régi par l'article R 351-9-1, intégré dans le Code du travail par le décret n° 2006-1380 du 15 novembre 2006. Cet article prévoit que " Pour procéder aux vérifications rendues nécessaires par la gestion de l'allocation temporaire d'attente, les organismes gestionnaires peuvent consulter, par voie électronique, les données à caractère personnel strictement nécessaires détenues par l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides. Si les conditions d'ouverture des droits à l'allocation temporaire d'attente sont réunies, les organismes gestionnaires peuvent procéder à l'extraction de ces données et à leur enregistrement dans le système de gestion de l'allocation. L'office enregistre les extractions de données précitées, afin de limiter aux seuls dossiers concernés la transmission ultérieure des informations nécessaires aux décisions de maintien ou de suppression de l'allocation.".

Une circulaire interministérielle du 24 novembre 2006 portant sur l'allocation temporaire d'attente précise que le versement de cette dernière peut être suspendu lorsque les vérifications ne peuvent être effectuées faute de production par le demandeur des documents nécessaires ou lorsque l'allocataire cesse temporairement de remplir les conditions d'attributions. En outre, la restitution des allocations indûment perçues peut être effectuée selon une procédure amiable par un accord entre l'organisme gestionnaire (Assedic) et l'allocataire.

Concernant les CADA, une circulaire du 3 mai 2007 (DPM/CI3/2007) relative aux missions des centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile, aux modalités d'amission dans ces centres et de sortie de ces centres et au pilotage du dispositif national d'accueil prévoit les cas d'exclusion des demandeurs d'asile des CADA. Ainsi, l'exclusion d'un demandeur d'asile peut être prononcée par le gestionnaire d'un CADA pour les motifs suivants :
- non respect du règlement de fonctionnement
- actes de violence à l'encontre des autres résidents ou de l'équipe du centre,
- comportements délictueux et infraction à la législation française entraînant des poursuites judiciaires,
- fausses déclarations concernant l'identité, ou la situation personnelle notamment relativement aux critères d'accès à l'aide sociale de l'Etat.
- Refus de transfert dans un autre centre
- refus par une personne ayant obtenu le statut de réfugié d'une proposition d'hébergement ou de logement.

Le retrait de certaines conditions matérielles d'accueil dans les centres d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile se déduit également du dispositif réglementaire. Cela résulte en particulier de l'article R 311-37 du Code de l'action sociale et des familles. Ce dernier indique : Dans le respect des dispositions de la charte arrêtée en application des dispositions de l'article L. 311-4, le règlement de fonctionnement énumère les règles essentielles de vie collective. A cet effet, il fixe les obligations faites aux personnes accueillies ou prises en charge pour permettre la réalisation des prestations qui leur sont nécessaires, y compris lorsqu'elles sont délivrées hors de l'établissement. Ces obligations concernent, notamment, le respect des décisions de prise en charge, des termes du contrat ou du document individuel de prise en charge, le respect des rythmes de vie collectifs, le comportement civil à l'égard des autres personnes accueillies ou prises en charge, comme des membres du personnel, le respect des biens et équipements collectifs. Elles concernent également les prescriptions d'hygiène de vie nécessaires.

Il rappelle que les faits de violence sur autrui sont susceptibles d'entraîner des procédures administratives et judiciaires.
Il rappelle également, et, en tant que de besoin, précise les obligations de l'organisme gestionnaire de l'établissement ou du service ou du lieu de vie et d'accueil en matière de protection des mineurs, les temps de sorties autorisées, ainsi que les procédures de signalement déclenchées en cas de sortie non autorisée.

Les articles 65 et 66 de la loi impliquent la sortie des CADA en fin de procédure.

B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice[384]?

Conformément à l'article R 723-1 1er alinéa du CESEDA (introduit par le décret 2004-814), l'encadrement des délais de dépôt de la demande est strict : "à compter de la remise de l'autorisation provisoire de séjour prévue à l'article L 742-1, l'étranger demandeur d'asile dispose d'un délai de vingt et un jours pour présenter sa demande d'asile complète à l'office". Le texte conserve le silence sur les conditions d'accueil à proprement parler mais dans la mesure où celles-ci sont liées à la régularité d'une demande, il semble que la France fasse usage implicitement de l'article 16 §2.

C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

Deux réponses sont possibles. La première concerne le retrait de l'allocation temporaire d'attente. L'article R 351-9-1, intégré dans le Code du travail par le décret n° 2006-1380 du 15 novembre 2006 prévoit que " Pour procéder aux vérifications rendues nécessaires par la gestion de l'allocation temporaire d'attente, les organismes gestionnaires peuvent consulter, par voie électronique, les données à caractère personnel strictement nécessaires détenues par l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides. Si les conditions d'ouverture des droits à l'allocation temporaire d'attente sont réunies, les organismes gestionnaires peuvent procéder à l'extraction de ces données et à leur enregistrement dans le système de gestion de l'allocation. L'office enregistre les extractions de données précitées, afin de limiter aux seuls dossiers concernés la transmission ultérieure des informations nécessaires aux décisions de maintien ou de suppression de l'allocation.".
Une circulaire interministérielle du 24 novembre 2006 portant sur l'allocation temporaire d'attente précise que le versement de cette dernière peut être suspendu lorsque les vérifications ne peuvent être effectuées faute de production par le demandeur des documents nécessaires ou lorsque l'allocataire cesse temporairement de remplir les conditions d'attributions. En outre, la restitution des allocations indûment perçues peut être effectuée selon une procédure amiable par un accord entre l'organisme gestionnaire (Assedic) et l'allocataire.

La seconde voie concerne les réductions de conditions matérielles d'accueil à l'intérieur des centres d'hébergement. Sur la base de l'article L 311-7 du Code de l'action sociale et des familles, dans chaque établissement et service social ou médico-social, il est élaboré un règlement de fonctionnement qui définit les droits de la personne accueillie et les obligations et devoirs nécessaires au respect des règles de vie collective au sein de l'établissement ou du service. Ce règlement de fonctionnement est établi après consultation du conseil de la vie sociale ou, le cas échéant, après mise en oeuvre d'une autre forme de participation. Les dispositions minimales devant figurer dans ce règlement ainsi que les modalités de son établissement et de sa révision sont fixées par décret en Conseil d'Etat" (décret 2003-1095 du 14 novembre 2003 relatif au règlement de fonctionnement institué par l'article L. 311-7 du code de l'action sociale et des familles).

D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the documentation pack you received at our meeting in Brussels in April)?

Il n'est pas fait mention de cette position en droit français.

E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome[385]?

Sans objet

Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

Le jeu normal des règles de la procédure administrative non contentieuse et de des recours contentieux a vocation à s'appliquer à d'éventuelles décisions de refus (ou de retrait de l'ATA), à savoir le jeu d'une procédure de recours gracieux suivi d'une procédure contentieuse au moyen d'un recours en annulation devant le juge administratif.

[385] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

La loi 91-647 du 10 juillet 1991 précise les conditions d'accès des personnes à l'aide juridictionnelle. Son article 3 précise que "sont admises au bénéfice de l'aide juridictionnelle les personnes physiques de nationalité française et les ressortissants des Etats membres de la Communauté européenne.

Les personnes de nationalité étrangère résidant habituellement et régulièrement en France sont également admises au bénéfice de l'aide juridictionnelle. Toutefois, l'aide juridictionnelle peut être accordée à titre exceptionnel aux personnes ne remplissant pas les conditions fixées à l'alinéa précédent, lorsque leur situation apparaît particulièrement digne d'intérêt au regard de l'objet du litige ou des charges prévisibles du procès.

L'aide juridictionnelle est accordée sans condition de résidence aux étrangers lorsqu'ils sont mineurs, témoins assistés, inculpés, prévenus, accusés, condamnés ou parties civiles ou lorsqu'ils font l'objet de la procédure de comparution sur reconnaissance préalable de culpabilité, ainsi qu'aux personnes faisant l'objet de l'une des procédures prévues aux articles 18 bis, 22 bis, 24, 35 bis et 35 quater de l'ordonnance n° 45-2658 du 2 novembre 1945 relative aux conditions d'entrée et de séjour des étrangers en France.

Devant la Commission des recours des réfugiés, elle est accordée aux étrangers qui résident habituellement et sont entrés régulièrement en France ou qui détiennent un titre de séjour d'une durée de validité au moins égale à un an".

Cette exception formulée au dernier alinéa de l'article 3 de la loi du 10 juillet 1991, concernant la condition de "séjour régulier" pour avoir accès à l'aide juridictionnelle devant la Commission de Recours des Réfugiés (devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile) pose un problème de compatibilité avec le droit communautaire. Le Sénat, à l'occasion de l'examen du projet de loi "immigration et intégration", a proposé un amendement visant à supprimer la condition de régularité de l'entrée et du séjour de sorte que les demandeurs d'asile entrés irrégulièrement sur le territoire, qui constituent le contingent le plus important de demandeurs, puissent bénéficier de l'aide juridictionnelle devant la CRR. L'article 93 de la loi du 30 juin 2006 reprend cet amendement tout en le rendant applicable au 1° décembre 2008.

C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones[386]?

Sans objet

D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

Il n'existe pas de mécanisme de ce type en droit français.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

L'article R 741-2 du CESEDA dispose que l'étranger qui, n'étant pas déjà admis à résider en France, sollicite son admission au séjour au titre de l'asile en application de l'article L 741-1 présente à l'appui de sa demande les indications relatives à son état civil et, le cas échéant, à celui de son conjoint et de ses enfants à charge. La définition du lien familial est donc celle du mariage et la jurisprudence administrative y ajoute celle du concubinage (CE, 2 décembre 1994, Agyepong). Sauf cas particulier, l'ascendant n'est pas compris dans l'unité familiale pas davantage que la polygamie et la rupture du lien familial (divorce, séparation) peut conduire au retour du membre de la famille du réfugié.

Le Code de l'Action sociale et des familles prévoit dans son article L-311-9 que, "en vue d'assurer le respect du droit à une vie familiale des membres des familles accueillies dans les établissements ou services mentionnés aux 1° et 7° de l'article L. 312-1, ces établissements ou services doivent rechercher une solution évitant la séparation de ces personnes ou, si une telle solution ne peut être trouvée, établir, de concert avec les personnes accueillies, un projet propre à permettre leur réunion dans les plus brefs délais, et assurer le suivi de ce projet jusqu'à ce qu'il aboutisse. Dans ce but, chaque schéma départemental des centres d'hébergement et de réinsertion sociale évalue les besoins en accueil familial du département et prévoit les moyens pour y répondre"

Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

Le système d'accueil français offre deux possibilités aux demandeurs pendant la période d'instruction de leur demande. Soit l'hébergement dans un centre où ils sont pris en charge au titre de l'aide sociale, ou à défaut de disposer de place suffisantes le versement d'une allocation afin de faire face au coût d'hébergement. Soir, la liberté pour le demandeur d'asile de pourvoir lui – même à ses besoins sans avoir recours à l'aide sociale.

B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers?[387] Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

Selon un rapport parlementaire de septembre 2007, le nombre de places disponibles en CADA est passé, entre 2004 et 2006, de 15 470 à 19 470, un objectif de 21 000 places ayant été fixé pour l'année 2007. Selon le rapport au Parlement de décembre 2007 relatif aux orientations de la politique d'immigration, le nombre de places en CADA fin 2007 s'élevait à 20 410.

Le ministère de l'Emploi, de la cohésion sociale et du logement estimait les besoins à 30.000 places, afin d'éviter le recours aux coûteux dispositifs d'hébergement complémentaires en HLM ou en hôtels. Les capacités étant notamment insuffisantes en région parisienne et dans la région Rhone Alpes.

C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?[388]

Dans un rapport présenté en avril 2006 par la Mission d'Evaluation et de Contrôle sur l'évolution des coûts budgétaires des demandes d'asile, ce nombre est insuffisant : "l'accroissement des capacités n'a pas pour effet direct que la capacité d'accueil sera de 20.000 personnes. Pour atteindre ce résultat, il faudrait que la durée du séjour des demandeurs n'excède pas un an (le taux de rotation est aujourd'hui de 0,5%). Ramener la durée totale de la procédure à six mois, au lieu de dix-huit mois actuellement, reviendrait à tripler la capacité des CADA, qui passerait de 15.000 à 45.000 personnes. Une telle évolution conduirait à des conditions mieux gérables, et à un accueil amélioré des demandeurs". Au delà, le nombre des demandes d'asile en 2005 (59221) doit être rapproché du nombre de places disponibles dans le dispositif national d'accueil (environ 19 000 en 2006). Selon le rapport au Parlement de décembre 2007 relatif aux orientations de la politique d'immigration, le nombre de places en CADA fin 2007 s'élevait à 20 410.

En définitive, la politique française de gestion de l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile s'appuie sur une augmentation des places disponibles en CADA et l'accélération de la procédure d'examen des demandes d'asile assurant une augmentation de la rotation dans les structures d'accueil et mécaniquement une augmentation des places disponibles. A terme, la France devrait être dotée d'un nombre de places suffisantes pour accueillir les demandeurs d'asile.

D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

La circulaire du 3 mai 2007 relative aux missions des CADA mentionne les situations d'urgence au titre des admissions prioritaires. Ainsi "Bénéficient d'une priorité d'admission en centre d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile les catégories suivantes de demandeurs d'asile :

- les primo-arrivants en début de procédure ;
- les familles avec enfants ;
- les femmes seules ;
- les personnes rejoignant des demandeurs d'asile déjà pris en charge dans un centre d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile (conjoint(e), ascendants directs à charge, descendants directs à charge) ;
- les jeunes majeurs isolés ;
- les jeunes déclarés majeurs à l'issue d'une expertise osseuse ;
- sur avis médical motivé, les demandeurs d'asile ayant des problèmes de santé mais dont l'état ne nécessite pas une prise en charge médicalisée ;
- les personnes ayant fait l'objet d'un signalement par le ministère des affaires étrangères ;
- les personnes prises en charge au titre de l'hébergement d'urgence ou en centre de transit.

Ces priorités d'admission ne doivent pas toutefois vous faire perdre de vue que l'objectif est d'accueillir en CADA tous les demandeurs d'asile qui en ont exprimé le souhait, ce qui exige que ne soient pas maintenues dans ces centres des personnes n'ayant plus la qualité de demandeur d'asile.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

S'agissant de l'hébergement ordinaire, deux types de structures étaient offertes aux demandeurs d'asile avant l'adoption de la loi du 24 juillet 2006 : les Centres d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile (CADA) et les Centres d'hébergement et de réinsertion sociale (CHRS). S'agissant de l'hébergement d'urgence des demandeurs d'asile, les solutions d'hébergement peuvent soient être en structures collectives (AUDA voir supra) soit être en hôtel.

Le statut juridique des Centres d'accueil est fixé par la loi du 24 juillet 2006 afin d'améliorer l'efficacité globale du dispositif d'hébergement des demandeurs d'asile tout en garantissant la qualité de la prise en charge de ces personnes. À cette fin, les CADA doivent être distingués des centres d'hébergement et de réinsertion sociale spécialisés (CHRS) dès lors que leurs missions et leurs publics sont différents. Aussi, une catégorie particulière d'établissements sociaux et médicosociaux est créée : les centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile, création faisant l'objet des articles L. 348-1 à L. 348-4 du code de l'action sociale et des familles.

En application de l'article L 348-1 du Code de l'action sociale et des familles (créé par la loi du 24 juillet 2006) les centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile ont pour mission d'assurer l'accueil, l'hébergement, l'accompagnement social et administratif des demandeurs d'asile pendant la durée de leur demande d'asile. Le principe de l'admission à l'aide sociale de l'État est conforté, s'agissant des frais d'accueil et d'hébergement des étrangers admis dans ces centres. La procédure d'admission dans ces centres est précisée : l'admission est prononcée par les gestionnaires de centres avec l'accord de l'autorité administrative compétente. Il est prévu que le retrait d'habilitation peut désormais se fonder sur le non-respect des catégories de publics à accueillir - hypothèse désormais prévue par l'article L. 313-9 du code de l'action sociale et des familles, précisant les délais de la phase de concertation préalable au retrait, dans le respect du principe et des étapes d'un dialogue contradictoire.

B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

La liberté du demandeur d'asile de choisir son lieu d'hébergement lui laisse la possibilité de quitter un CADA pour un appartement privé. En outre, les CADA gèrent également des appartements privés dans lesquels ils logent des demandeurs d'asile, en priorité des familles.

La durée d'admission en CADA est liée, comme indiqué précédemment, à la procédure d'admission au statut, comme le rappelle la note d'instruction interministérielle DPM/ACI3 n° 2006-31 du 20 janvier 2006 précitée : " le Gouvernement poursuit ainsi un objectif de clarification du rôle du dispositif national d'accueil. Il entend à la fois en développer les capacités d'hébergement tout en veillant à ce que ce dispositif soit dédié aux publics ayant vocation à en bénéficier. C'est ainsi qu'il se fixe comme objectif que d'ici 2007 ces structures n'assurent l'hébergement que des personnes dont la demande d'asile est encore en cours d'examen par l'organisation d'une sortie la plus rapide possible après décision. Tous les autres publics, qui aujourd'hui peuvent être présents dans ces structures, auront ainsi vocation à les quitter pour être pris en charge, le cas échéant, par les dispositifs d'hébergement de droit commun".

Un décret n° 2007-399 du 23 mars 2007 formalise ce mouvement en intégrant dans le Code de l'action sociale et des familles un nouvel article R 348-3 qui indique :
"I. - Dès qu'une décision définitive, au sens du quatrième alinéa de l'article R. 351-6 du code du travail, a été prise sur une demande d'asile, le préfet, ou, à Paris, le préfet de police, en informe sans délai le gestionnaire du centre d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile qui héberge la personne concernée, en précisant la date à laquelle cette décision a été notifiée au demandeur.

Dès que l'information prévue à l'alinéa précédent lui est parvenue, le gestionnaire du centre communique à la personne hébergée la fin de sa prise en charge, qui intervient sous réserve de l'une des procédures suivantes :
2º Si elle en fait la demande, la personne ayant eu notification d'une décision définitive défavorable est maintenue dans le centre pour une durée maximale d'un mois à compter de la date de cette notification. Durant cette période, elle prépare avec le gestionnaire du centre les modalités de sa sortie.
Cette personne peut, dans le délai de quinze jours à compter de la notification, saisir l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations en vue d'obtenir une aide pour le retour dans son pays d'origine. Si elle présente une telle demande, elle peut, à titre exceptionnel, et avec l'accord du préfet, être maintenue dans le centre pour une durée maximale d'un mois à compter de la décision de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations.
II. - A l'issue du délai de maintien dans le centre, le gestionnaire du centre met en oeuvre la décision de sortie après avoir recueilli l'accord du préfet".

Une circulaire du 3 mai 2007 (DPM/CI3/2007) renforce ce positionnement en signalant tout d'abord que les "priorités d'admission ne doivent pas toutefois vous faire perdre de vue que l'objectif est d'accueillir en CADA tous les demandeurs d'asile qui en ont exprimé le souhait, ce qui exige que ne soient pas maintenues dans ces centres des personnes n'ayant plus la qualité de demandeur d'asile". Ensuite, la circulaire établit de manière très précise les conditions et modalités de sortie des CADA des personnes ayant fait l'objet d'une décision définitive et n'ayant dès lors plus vocation à être hébergées dans ces structures.

C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

L'article L-311-4 du Code de l'Action sociale et des Familles dispose que, "afin de garantir l'exercice effectif des droits mentionnés à l'article L. 311-3 et notamment de prévenir tout risque de maltraitance, lors de son accueil dans un établissement ou dans un service social ou médico-social, il est remis à la personne ou à son représentant légal un livret d'accueil auquel sont annexés :

a) Une charte des droits et libertés de la personne accueillie, arrêtée par les ministres compétents après consultation de la section sociale du Comité national de l'organisation sanitaire et sociale mentionné à l'article L. 6121-9 du code de la santé publique ;

b) Le règlement de fonctionnement défini à l'article L. 311-7.

Un contrat de séjour est conclu ou un document individuel de prise en charge est élaboré avec la participation de la personne accueillie ou de son représentant légal. Ce contrat ou document définit les objectifs et la nature de la prise en charge ou de l'accompagnement dans le respect des principes déontologiques et éthiques, des recommandations de bonnes pratiques professionnelles et du projet d'établissement. Il détaille la liste et la nature des prestations offertes ainsi que leur coût prévisionnel.

Le contenu minimal du contrat de séjour ou du document individuel de prise en charge est fixé par voie réglementaire selon les catégories d'établissements et de personnes accueillies".

D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision*?* Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones? [389]

Comme indiqué précédemment, l'article L-311-7 du Code de l'Action sociale et des Familles prévoit que "dans chaque établissement et service social ou médico-social, il est élaboré un règlement de fonctionnement qui définit les droits de la personne accueillie et les obligations et devoirs nécessaires au respect des règles de vie collective au sein de l'établissement ou du service.

Le règlement de fonctionnement est établi après consultation du conseil de la vie sociale ou, le cas échéant, après mise en oeuvre d'une autre forme de participation.

Les dispositions minimales devant figurer dans ce règlement ainsi que les modalités de son établissement et de sa révision sont fixées par décret en Conseil d'Etat"

Le décret n° 2003-1095 du 14 novembre 2003 relatif au règlement de fonctionnement institué par l'article L. 311-7 du Code de l'action sociale et des Familles consacre sa section 2 à cette problématique : le règlement de fonctionnement indique les principales modalités concrètes d'exercice des droits énoncés au code de l'action sociale et des familles, notamment de ceux mentionnés à l'article L. 311-3. Il précise, le cas échéant, les modalités d'association de la famille à la vie de l'établissement ou du service (article 3); le règlement de fonctionnement fixe les modalités de rétablissement des prestations dispensées par l'établissement ou le service lorsqu'elles ont été interrompues (article 4); le règlement de fonctionnement précise l'organisation et l'affectation à usage collectif ou privé des locaux et bâtiments ainsi que les conditions générales de leur accès et de leur utilisation (article 5); le règlement de fonctionnement précise les dispositions relatives aux transferts et déplacements, aux modalités d'organisation des transports, aux conditions d'organisation de la délivrance des prestations offertes par l'établissement à l'extérieur (article 6); le règlement de fonctionnement prévoit les mesures à prendre en cas d'urgence ou de situations exceptionnelles (article 7); le règlement de fonctionnement précise les mesures relatives à la sûreté des personnes et des biens (article 8); dans le respect des dispositions de la charte arrêtée en application des dispositions de l'article L. 311-4 du code de l'action sociale et des familles, le règlement de fonctionnement énumère les règles essentielles de vie collective. A cet effet, il fixe les obligations faites aux personnes accueillies ou prises en charge pour permettre la réalisation des prestations qui leur sont nécessaires, y compris lorsqu'elles sont délivrées hors de l'établissement. Ces obligations concernent, notamment, le respect des décisions de prise en charge, des termes du contrat ou du document individuel de prise en charge, le respect des rythmes de vie collectifs, le comportement civil à l'égard des autres personnes accueillies ou prises en charge, comme des membres du personnel, le respect des biens et équipements collectifs. Elles concernent également les prescriptions d'hygiène de vie nécessaires (article 9); le règlement de fonctionnement rappelle que les faits de violence sur autrui sont susceptibles d'entraîner des procédures administratives et judiciaires~~)~~. Il rappelle également, et, en tant que de besoin, précise les obligations de l'organisme gestionnaire de l'établissement ou du service ou du lieu de vie et d'accueil en matière de protection des mineurs, les temps de sorties autorisées, ainsi que les procédures de signalement déclenchées en cas de sortie non autorisée (article 10).

E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

L'article L-311-6 du Code de l'Action Sociale et des familles dispose que "afin d'associer les personnes bénéficiaires des prestations au fonctionnement de l'établissement ou du service, il est institué soit un conseil de la vie sociale, soit d'autres formes de participation. Les catégories d'établissements ou de services qui doivent mettre en oeuvre obligatoirement le conseil de la vie sociale sont précisées par décret. Ce décret précise également, d'une part, la composition et les compétences de ce conseil et, d'autre part, les autres formes de participation possible".

Le décret 2004-287 du 25 mars 2004 relatif au conseil de la vie sociale et aux autres formes de participation institués à l'article L. 311-6 du code de l'action sociale et des familles, prévoit la participation des usagers.

F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

Ces règles n'existent pas.

Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

Cette question ne concerne ni les centres de rétention administrative, ni les zones d'attentes. Concernant les centres d'accueil, la loi de 2006 (créant un nouveau Chapitre dans le CASF) fixe les missions des CADA et elle prévoit " Art. L. 348-2 CASF. – I. – Les centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile ont pour mission d'assurer l'accueil, l'hébergement ainsi que l'accompagnement social et administratif des demandeurs d'asile, pendant la durée d'instruction de leur demande d'asile".

Dans la mesure où les demandeurs d'asile conservent leur liberté de circulation, ils peuvent communiquer librement avec des Conseils, le HCR ou des ONG.

B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

Les centres d'hébergement n'imposent aucune restriction de communication aux personnes qui y sont hébergées et ne comprennent aucune règle restreignant l'accès du HCR ou d'autres ONG.

C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

Il ne semble pas que le droit français règlemente cette situation. En pratique, s'il apparaissait que le gestionnaire d'un centre d'hébergement décide de limiter l'accès pour des raisons de sécurité, les pensionnaires des centres pourraient toujours rencontrer des conseillers à l'extérieur étant donné que leur liberté de circulation ne s'en trouve pas entachée.

Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

Pour les personnes hébergées en CADA est organisée une visite médicale complète en conformité aux règles déontologiques. Sur la fiche type il n'est pas mentionné un dépistage HIV. Cette démarche appartient à la personne qui doit être sensibilisée à ce sujet.

La circulaire DPM/CI 3 n° 99-399 du 8 juillet 1999 relative aux procédures d'admission dans le dispositif national d'accueil (DNA) des réfugiés et des demandeurs d'asile, prévoyait en son annexe III, article 9, deux examens médicaux obligatoires effectués systématiquement : le premier à l'arrivée, le second à trois mois d'intervalle. Les vaccinations obligatoires pour les enfants seront réalisées.
Cette circulaire a été abrogée par la circulaire interministérielle DPM/ACI3 n° 2007-184 du 3 mai 2007, laquelle ne reprend pas en annexe les dispositions susmentionnées.

Quoi qu'il en soit, le suivi médical constitue une mission des établissements sociaux et médico-sociaux. L'article L 311-1 du Code de l'action sociale et des familles précise aux titre des missions le déploiement d'action éducatives, médico-éducatives, médicales, thérapeutiques, pédagogiques et de formation adaptées aux besoins de la personne. Ce type de mission implique obligatoirement un ou plusieurs examens médicaux.

B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care ?

En vertu de la législation française (article 3 de la loi nº 99-641 du 27 juillet 1999, JO du 28 juillet 1999) toute personne résidant en France métropolitaine ou dans un département d'outre-mer de façon stable et régulière relève du régime général lorsqu'elle n'a droit à aucun autre titre aux prestations en nature d'un régime d'assurance maladie et maternité. Un décret en Conseil d'Etat précise la condition de résidence mentionnée au présent article

L'article L-861-1 du code de la sécurité sociale prévoit que les personnes résidant en France dans les conditions prévues par l'article L. 380-1, dont les ressources sont inférieures à un plafond déterminé par décret, révisé chaque année pour tenir compte de l'évolution des prix, ont droit à une couverture complémentaire dans les conditions définies à l'article L. 861-3. Cette révision prend effet chaque année au 1er juillet. Elle tient compte de l'évolution prévisible des prix de l'année civile en cours, le cas échéant corrigée de la différence entre le taux d'évolution retenu pour fixer le plafond de l'année précédente et le taux d'évolution des prix de cette même année. Ce plafond varie selon la composition du foyer et le nombre de personnes à charge. Un décret en Conseil d'Etat précise les conditions d'âge, de domicile et de ressources dans lesquelles une personne est considérée comme étant à charge. Les personnes mineures ayant atteint l'âge de seize ans, dont les liens avec la vie familiale sont rompus, peuvent bénéficier à titre personnel, à leur demande, sur décision de l'autorité administrative, de la protection complémentaire dans les conditions définies à l'article L. 861-3. Une action en récupération peut être exercée par l'organisme prestataire à l'encontre des parents du mineur bénéficiaire lorsque ceux-ci disposent de ressources supérieures au plafond mentionné au premier alinéa

L'article R-380-1 du Code de la sécurité sociale indique :
" I. - Les personnes visées à l'article L. 380-1 doivent justifier qu'elles résident en France métropolitaine ou dans un département d'outre-mer de manière ininterrompue depuis plus de trois mois. Toutefois, ce délai de trois mois n'est pas opposable :
….3º Aux personnes reconnues réfugiés, admises au titre de l'asile ou ayant demandé le statut de réfugié.
II. - Les personnes de nationalité étrangère doivent en outre justifier qu'elles sont en situation régulière au regard de la législation sur le séjour des étrangers en France à la date de leur affiliation

Pour cette raison la question de la situation des personnes non autorisées à séjourner sur le territoire prévoit que tout étranger résidant en France de manière ininterrompue depuis plus de trois mois, sans remplir la condition de régularité mentionnée à l'article L. 380-1 du code de la sécurité sociale et dont les ressources ne dépassent pas le plafond mentionné à l'article L. 861-1 de ce code a droit, pour lui-même et les personnes à sa charge au sens des articles L. 161-14 et L. 313-3 de ce code, à l'aide médicale de l'Etat. En outre, toute personne qui, ne résidant pas en France, est présente sur le territoire français, et dont l'état de santé le justifie, peut, par décision individuelle prise par le ministre chargé de l'action sociale, bénéficier de l'aide médicale de l'Etat dans les conditions prévues par l'article L. 252-1. Dans ce cas, la prise en charge des dépenses mentionnées à l'article L. 251-2 peut être partielle. De même, toute personne gardée à vue sur le territoire français, qu'elle réside ou non en France, peut, si son état de santé le justifie, bénéficier de l'aide médicale de l'Etat, dans des conditions définies par décret (article L-251-1 du Code de l'Action sociale et des Familles).

Néanmoins, "les soins urgents dont l'absence mettrait en jeu le pronostic vital ou pourrait conduire à une altération grave et durable de l'état de santé de la personne ou d'un enfant à naître et qui sont dispensés par les établissements de santé à ceux des étrangers résidant en France sans remplir la condition de régularité mentionnée à l'article L. 380-1 du Code de la sécurité sociale et qui ne sont pas bénéficiaires de l'aide médicale de l'Etat en application de l'article L. 251-1 sont pris en charge dans les conditions prévues à l'article L. 251-2. Une dotation forfaitaire est versée à ce titre par l'Etat à la Caisse nationale de l'assurance maladie des travailleurs salariés (article L-254-1 CASF).

La circulaire du 16 mars 2005 relative à la prise en charge des soins urgents délivrés à des étrangers résidants en France de manière irrégulière et non bénéficiaires de l'aide médicale d'Etat répète ce dispositif et elle en délimite le champ d'application.

C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?[390]
Voir supra

Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

L'article R 742-2 du CESEDA est dépourvu d'ambiguïté : l'accès au marché du travail ne peut être autorisé au demandeur d'asile que dans le cas où l'office, pour des raisons qui ne sont pas imputables au demandeur, n'a pas statué sur la demande d'asile dans un délai d'un an suivant l'enregistrement de la demande. Dans ce cas, le demandeur d'asile est soumis aux règles de droit commun applicables aux travailleurs étrangers pour la délivrance d'une autorisation provisoire de travail. La situation de l'emploi lui est opposable.

L'article R 742-3 du CESEDA précise que lorsqu'un recours est formé devant la commission des recours des réfugiés, le demandeur d'asile qui a obtenu le renouvellement de son récépissé dans les conditions prévues à l'alinéa précédent est soumis aux règles de droit commun applicables aux travailleurs étrangers pour la délivrance d'une autorisation provisoire de travail

B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

Le droit français prévoit qu'une autorisation de travail doit être délivrée.

C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

L'article L- 341-4 du Code du travail indique que " un étranger ne peut exercer une activité professionnelle salariée en France sans avoir obtenu au préalable l'autorisation mentionnée à l'article L. 341-2. Cette autorisation est délivrée dans des conditions qui sont fixées par un décret en Conseil d'Etat, sous réserve des dispositions applicables en vertu des troisième et quatrième alinéas du présent article. L'autorisation de travail peut être délivrée à un étranger qui demande l'attribution de la carte de séjour temporaire sous la forme de la mention "salarié" apposée sur cette carte. Elle habilite cet étranger à exercer les activités professionnelles indiquées sur cette carte dans les zones qui y sont mentionnées. L'autorisation de travail peut être délivrée à un étranger sous la forme d'une carte de résident qui lui confère le droit d'exercer sur l'ensemble du territoire de la France métropolitaine toute activité professionnelle salariée de son choix dans le cadre de la législation en vigueur.

Lorsque l'autorisation de travail est demandée en vue de la conclusion d'un contrat d'apprentissage visé à l'article L. 117-1 ou d'un contrat de professionnalisation visé à l'article L. 981-1, la situation de l'emploi ne peut être opposée à la demande d'un étranger qui a été pris en charge par les services de l'aide sociale à l'enfance mentionnés à l'article L. 221-1 du code de l'action sociale et des familles avant qu'il ait atteint l'âge de seize ans et qui l'est toujours au moment où il présente sa demande

L'article R-341-7 du Code du travail précise que "une autorisation provisoire de travail peut être délivrée à l'étranger qui ne peut prétendre ni à la carte de séjour temporaire portant la mention "salarié" ni à la carte de résident et qui est appelé à exercer chez un employeur déterminé, pendant une période dont la durée initialement prévue n'excède pas un an, une activité présentant par sa nature ou les circonstances de son exercice un caractère temporaire. Le silence gardé pendant plus de quatre mois par le préfet sur une demande d'autorisation vaut décision de rejet. La durée de validité de cette autorisation, dont les caractéristiques sont fixées par arrêté du ministre chargé des travailleurs immigrés, ne peut dépasser neuf mois. Elle est renouvelable.

D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Il n'existe pas de priorités en ce sens. La partie réglementaire du CESEDA (art. R 742-2 et R 742-3) pose simplement le principe selon lequel la situation du marché de l'emploi peut être opposable aux demandeurs d'asile qui ont accès à une activité salariée.

E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

Conformément à l'article L. 341-4 du Code du travail, l'accès à la formation professionnelle est ouvert aux demandeurs d'asile dans les mêmes conditions que l'accès au marché de l'emploi. Néanmoins, et afin d'assurer l'accès des mineurs à la formation professionnelle, la loi de programmation pour la cohésion sociale du 18 janvier 2005, prévoit que la situation de l'emploi ne peut être opposée à cette catégorie de ressortissants de pays tiers (Loi n° 2005-32 du 18 janvier 2005 de programmation pour la cohésion sociale)

L'article L. 341-4 du code du travail est complété par un alinéa ainsi rédigé :

"Lorsque l'autorisation de travail est demandée en vue de la conclusion d'un contrat d'apprentissage visé à l'article L. 117-1 ou d'un contrat de professionnalisation visé à l'article L. 981-1, la situation de l'emploi ne peut être opposée à la demande d'un étranger qui a été pris en charge par les services de l'aide sociale à l'enfance mentionnés à l'article L. 221-1 du code de l'action sociale et des familles avant qu'il ait atteint l'âge de seize ans et qui l'est toujours au moment où il présente sa demande".

F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

La transposition de la directive au travers des dispositions réglementaires du CESEDA consacrées au droit d'asile (ancien article 16 du décret 46-1574) est plus généreuse lorsque le délai d'examen de la demande est supérieur à une année. Elle est indifférente si l'examen de la demande est inférieur à une année, puisqu'une circulaire du premier ministre du 26 septembre 1991 avait déjà supprimé le droit d'accès au marché du travail des demandeurs d'asile.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

La réponse est affirmative sur la base de la loi du 30 juin 2006. Son article L.348-2-II prévoit ainsi que "les conditions de fonctionnement et de financement des centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile sont fixées par décret en Conseil d'Etat. Ce décret précise notamment les modalités selon lesquelles les personnes participent à proportion de leur ressources à leur frais d'hébergement, de restauration et d'entretien".
Le décret n° 2007-399 du 23 mars 2007 introduit un nouvel article R 348-4 dans le Code de l'action sociale et des familles qui prévoit notamment en son I "Les personnes hébergées en centre d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile dont le niveau de ressources mensuelles est égal ou supérieur au montant du revenu minimum d'insertion défini à l'article L. 262-2 acquittent une participation financière à leurs frais d'hébergement et d'entretien. Le montant de cette participation est fixé par le préfet sur la base d'un barème établi par arrêté du ministre chargé de l'action sociale et du ministre chargé du budget. La décision est notifiée à l'intéressé par le directeur de l'établissement.
Le barème tient compte notamment :

- des ressources de la personne ou de la famille accueillie ;
- des dépenses restant à sa charge pendant la période d'accueil.

La personne accueillie acquitte directement sa contribution à l'établissement qui lui en délivre récépissé".

De même, l'allocation temporaire d'attente, à l'instar de l'allocation d'insertion préalablement accordée aux demandeurs d'asile, est attribuée en fonction de conditions de ressources. A ce titre l'article 351-9 du Code du travail énonce que "peuvent bénéficier d'une allocation temporaire d'attente les ressortissants étrangers ayant atteint l'âge de dix-huit ans révolu dont le titre de séjour ou le récépissé de demande de titre de séjour mentionne qu'ils ont sollicité l'asile en France et qui ont présenté une demande tendant à bénéficier du statut de réfugié, s'ils satisfont à une condition de ressources".

Un décret n° 2006-1380 du 13 novembre 2006 modifie l'article R 531-10 du Code du travail. Cette disposition prévoit :
"Pour bénéficier de l'allocation temporaire d'attente, la personne mentionnée à l'article L. 351-9 doit justifier de ressources mensuelles inférieures au montant du revenu minimum d'insertion défini à l'article L. 262-2 du code de l'action sociale et des familles. Les ressources prises en considération pour l'application de ce plafond comprennent, hors l'allocation temporaire d'attente, celles de l'intéressé et, le cas échéant, de son conjoint, de son concubin, ou de son partenaire lié par un pacte civil de solidarité, telles qu'elles doivent être déclarées à l'administration fiscale pour le calcul de l'impôt sur le revenu avant déduction des divers abattements. Le montant pris en compte est le douzième du total des ressources perçues pendant les douze mois précédant celui au cours duquel les ressources sont examinées. La condition relative aux ressources est appréciée le mois de la demande d'allocation, puis à échéance semestrielle.
Les ressources perçues hors du territoire national sont prises en compte comme si elles avaient été perçues sur ce territoire.
Il n'est pas tenu compte des prestations familiales.
La pension alimentaire ou la prestation compensatoire fixée par une décision de justice devenue exécutoire est déduite des ressources de celui qui la verse.
Il n'est tenu compte ni des allocations d'assurance ou de solidarité ni des rémunérations de stage ou des revenus d'activité perçus pendant la période de référence lorsqu'il est justifié que leur perception est interrompue de manière certaine à la date de la demande et que le bénéficiaire de ces ressources ne peut prétendre à un revenu de substitution.
Si le bénéficiaire peut prétendre à un revenu de substitution, un abattement de 30 % est appliqué sur la moyenne des ressources auxquelles ce revenu se substitue".

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30. A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

Parmi les différentes catégories énumérées, la législation française réserve seulement une place particulière au cas des mineurs non accompagnés. Le CESEDA dans son L-751-1 indique ainsi que "lorsque la demande d'asile est formée par un mineur sans représentant légal sur le territoire français, le procureur de la République, avisé par l'autorité administrative, lui désigne un administrateur ad hoc. Celui-ci assiste le mineur et assure sa représentation dans le cadre des procédures administratives et juridictionnelles relatives à la demande d'asile.

L'administrateur ad hoc nommé en application de ces dispositions est désigné par le procureur de la République compétent sur une liste de personnes morales ou physiques dont les modalités de constitution sont fixées par décret en Conseil d'Etat. Ce décret précise également les conditions de leur indemnisation. La mission de l'administrateur ad hoc prend fin dès le prononcé d'une mesure de tutelle.

Le statut de ces administrateurs ad hoc est précisé par le décret 2003-841 du 2 septembre 2003 relatif aux modalités de désignation et d'indemnisation des administrateurs ad hoc et la circulaire du 14 avril 2005 prise en application du décret du 2 septembre 2003 relatif aux modalités de désignation et d'indemnisation des administrateurs ad hoc. Les dispositions du décret n° 2003-841 forment désormais les article R 111-13 à R 111-24 du CESEDA.

B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions) ?

Comme indiqué précédemment, la situation spécifique des mineurs non accompagnés est largement prise en considération par le droit français.

L'article L-751-1 du CESEDA dispose que lorsque la demande d'asile est formée par un mineur sans représentant légal sur le territoire français, le procureur de la République, avisé par l'autorité administrative, lui désigne un administrateur ad hoc. Celui-ci assiste le mineur et assure sa représentation dans le cadre des procédures administratives et juridictionnelles relatives à la demande d'asile. Comme indiqué précédemment, l'administrateur ad hoc nommé en application de ces dispositions est désigné par le procureur de la République compétent sur une liste de personnes morales ou physiques dont les modalités de constitution sont fixées par décret en Conseil d'Etat. Ce décret précise également les conditions de leur indemnisation. La mission de l'administrateur ad hoc prend fin dès le prononcé d'une mesure de tutelle.

Le statut de ces administrateurs ad hoc est précisé par le décret 2003-841 du 2 septembre 2003 relatif aux modalités de désignation et d'indemnisation des administrateurs ad hoc et la circulaire du 14 avril 2005 prise en application du décret du 2 septembre 2003 relatif aux modalités de désignation et d'indemnisation des administrateurs ad hoc.

En ce qui concerne leur hébergement, deux centres spécialisés accueillent en région parisienne les mineurs qui sollicitent le statut de réfugié et qui sont isolés de leurs parents, faute de quoi les structures d'accueil d'urgence relevant des collectivités territoriales sont mises à contribution (services relevant de l'aide sociale à l'enfance ou de la protection judiciaire de la jeunesse, établissements du secteur associatif habilités, organismes dépendant des conseils généraux…).

La circulaire relative aux modalités d'admission au séjour des ressortissants étrangers entrés en France, de manière isolée, avant l'âge de 18 ans, et ayant fait l'objet d'une mesure judiciaire de placement en structure d'accueil du 2 mai 2005 (NOR/INT/D/05/00053/C) attire l'attention des autorités préfectorales sur leur cas particuliers et sur les modalités de leur prise en charge au plan matériel par les services de l'aide sociale à l'enfance.

C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

Le droit français attache une attention particulière aux mineurs non accompagnés qui relèvent donc de cette question. Leurs besoins spécifiques sont évalués à partir de l'évaluation de l'âge du demandeur d'asile (par la technique de l'examen osseux afin de déterminer l'âge de la personne). Pour les autres catégories de personnes concernées, il n'existe pas de dispositif particulier d'identification. Concernant le cas particulier des victimes de tortures, leur identification est réalisée par des associations ou des centres publics de soin. Ces personnes sont ensuite dirigées vers un centre de soin pluridisciplinaire spécifique géré par l'association Primo Levi. Il importe toutefois de noter que l'association Primo Levi est complètement indépendante des administrations du droit d'asile. En conséquence, une prise en charge au centre de soins Primo Levi n'est pas une étape obligatoire dans le parcours du demandeur d'asile.

En tout état de cause, la prise en charge est organisée légalement par les articles L 221-5 t L 751-1 du CESEDA. Il importe de noter que l'article L 221-5 qui s'applique aux zones d'attente impose une prise en charge immédiate du mineur non accompagné.

D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Les mineurs bénéficient d'un soutien médical. En revanche, les autres catégories de personnes vulnérables, y compris les victimes de la torture, ne bénéficient d'aucune prise en compte particulière dans le dispositif français. C'est de manière empirique que les victimes de tortures bénéficient d'un soutien médical pluridisciplinaire et spécifiquement adapté par l'intermédiaire du centre de soin géré par l'association parisienne Primo Levi.

Q.31. About minors:

A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

L'age légal de la majorité est de 18 ans.

B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Le Code de l'éducation ne vise pas le cas particulier des enfants de demandeurs d'asile, il ne fait pas de doute que ceux-ci sont soumis à l'obligation scolaire dès lors qu'ils se trouvent dans la tranche d'âge prévue par l'article L. 131-1, dans les mêmes conditions que n'importe quel enfant étranger. Sur cette base, l'instruction est obligatoire pour les enfants des deux sexes, français et étrangers, entre six ans et seize ans"

La circulaire 2002-063 du 20 mars 2002 du ministre de l'éducation nationale confirme cette obligation.

C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Il n'existe pas de pilotage national et individualisé de l'accueil des mineurs étrangers dans le système éducatif français. Le rapport conjoint de l'Inspection générale de l'éducation nationale et de l'Inspection générale de l'administration de l'éducation nationale et de la recherche relatif aux modalités de scolarisation des élèves non-francophones nouvellement arrivés en France le souligne (Rapport IGAS "Mission d'analyse et de proposition sur les conditions d'accueil des mineurs étrangers en France", n° 2005 010, Janvier 2005, sp. 41.).

"En matière de scolarité, l'intégration des mineurs étrangers n'est jamais chose aisée. Si les institutions concernées ont généralement établi des conventions relatives au bilan scolaire, il n'en découle pas forcément ensuite une facilité d'intégration dans les classes adaptées. Il est fréquent que comme pour tous les primo arrivants, le jeune arrivé trop tard dans l'année soit contraint d'attendre la rentrée suivante pour pouvoir accéder à une scolarité conforme à ses possibilités. L'insuffisance des classes adaptées est ainsi fortement mise en lumière. Présumés difficilement intégrables du fait de leur méconnaissance du français, les grands adolescents primo – arrivants pâtissent sans doute en plus d'un amalgame entre élèves difficiles et migrants. S'y ajoutent parfois les obstacles liés à l'absence de statut avec par exemple l'impossibilité d'accéder à certains stages professionnels, ce qui peut conduire à prioriser d'autres élèves dans d'éventuelles listes d'attente".

D'une manière générale, les mineurs étrangers âgés de 16 à 18 ans qui souhaitent exercer en France suivre une formation professionnelle rémunérée et qui, à ce titre, doivent disposer d'une carte de séjour les autorisant à travailler, peuvent se voir opposer la situation de l'emploi. Cependant, pour répondre aux besoins de formation des mineurs ou jeunes majeurs pris en charge par l'aide sociale à l'enfance nécessitant la conclusion d'un contrat d'apprentissage ou de professionnalisation, le législateur a souhaité assouplir les critères de délivrance de l'autorisation de travail requise en n'opposant pas la situation de l'emploi aux étrangers placés auprès des services de l'aide sociale à l'enfance avant l'âge de 16 ans et sous réserve qu'il justifient toujours d'un tel placement au moment de leur demande.

L'article L. 341-4 du code du travail est complété par un alinéa ainsi rédigé :
"Lorsque l'autorisation de travail est demandée en vue de la conclusion d'un contrat d'apprentissage visé à l'article L. 117-1 ou d'un contrat de professionnalisation visé à l'article L. 981-1, la situation de l'emploi ne peut être opposée à la demande d'un étranger qui a été pris en charge par les services de l'aide sociale à l'enfance mentionnés à l'article L. 221-1 du code de l'action sociale et des familles avant qu'il ait atteint l'âge de seize ans et qui l'est toujours au moment où il présente sa demande"

D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

L'obligation d'accueil dans les établissements scolaires s'applique de la même façon pour les élèves nouvellement arrivés en France et pour les autres élèves. Elle relève du droit commun et de l'obligation scolaire. Concernant les classes de langues, elles n'existent cependant pas dans toutes les écoles. La circulaire du ministre de l'Education nationale 2002-100 du 25 avril 2002 détaille le mécanisme mis en place dans le système éducatif français.

Les élèves nouvellement arrivés en France et leur famille peuvent faire l'objet d'un accueil spécifique dans l'objectif d'aider à leur rapide intégration dans un cursus de réussite comportant une véritable qualification professionnelle. Dans les écoles, collèges ou lycées, l'accueil des nouveaux arrivants requiert une attention particulière. Il convient notamment de faciliter la connaissance, pour ces élèves et leur famille, des règles de fonctionnement de l'établissement scolaire dans lequel ils sont affectés. On sera particulièrement vigilant, dans les premiers jours, à bien clarifier ce qui concerne les horaires, la demi-pension, les possibilités d'accès à différents services et les fonctions des différents professionnels de l'école ou de l'établissement. Des documents de présentation de l'établissement en langue première, accompagnés de leur traduction en français, peuvent être bienvenus. Des actions devront aider à l'accompagnement par les parents de la scolarisation de leurs enfants en leur permettant d'acquérir une bonne compréhension du système éducatif si cela s'avère nécessaire. Dans le souci de faciliter pour les familles les démarches afférentes à l'accueil et à l'affectation de leur(s) enfant(s) dans un établissement scolaire, on veillera à établir à leur intention un document d'information explicitant les procédures d'inscription et indiquant, autant que faire se peut, les personnes responsables de l'accueil, de l'évaluation linguistique et scolaire et les responsables de l'affectation, ainsi que les lieux et les adresses précises, heures et jours d'ouverture auxquels ces personnes peuvent être jointes. Ce document peut être réalisé en partenariat avec les collectivités territoriales.

Dans le cadre du regroupement familial, les procédures de pré-accueil et d'accueil organisé par l'office des migrations internationales (OMI), désormais remplacé par l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations constituent une première occasion pour les familles, de prendre connaissance des services de l'État, de leurs règles et de leur fonctionnement. Il est donc important que conformément à la convention-cadre du 7 mars 2001 co-signée par le ministère de l'éducation nationale, le ministère de l'emploi et de la solidarité, et le fonds d'action sociale, les services de l'éducation nationale soient présents dans les comités de pilotage des plans départementaux d'accueil et lors des séances collectives de pré-accueil. L'éducation nationale pourra diffuser l'information et, le cas échéant, participer à la réalisation d'actions en lien avec des associations ou d'autres organismes de l'État (en premier lieu, le fonds d'action et de soutien pour l'intégration et la lutte contre les discriminations - FASILD) visant à renforcer chez les parents, la connaissance de la langue française et de la société d'accueil.
Dans cette intention, il est vivement souhaitable de disposer, dans un premier temps, de documents en langue d'origine présentant le système éducatif, comme le précise la convention cadre précitée qui prévoit la possibilité de recourir à des services de traduction et d'interprétariat chaque fois que nécessaire. Enfin rappelons que les parents de nationalité étrangère bénéficient des mêmes droits que les parents français (droit de vote et éligibilité aux élections de représentants de parents d'élèves dans les conseils d'école et d'administration des établissements secondaires). Pour garantir une bonne scolarisation des jeunes arrivants, deux principes doivent guider le travail mené
- faciliter l'adaptation de ces jeunes au système français d'éducation en développant des aides adaptées à leur arrivée;
- assurer dès que possible l'intégration dans le cursus ordinaire.
L'évaluation des acquis à l'arrivée est également déterminante. Tout élève nouvellement arrivé en France doit pouvoir bénéficier d'une évaluation qui mette en évidence :

- ses savoir-faire en langue française, pour déterminer s'il est un débutant complet ou s'il maîtrise des éléments du français parlé ou écrit;
- ses compétences scolaires construites dans sa langue de scolarisation antérieure et son degré de familiarité avec l'écrit scolaire (on pourra s'appuyer en particulier sur des exercices en langue première de scolarisation) ;
- ses savoirs d'expérience dans différents domaines, ainsi que ses intérêts, qui peuvent constituer des points d'appui pédagogiques importants.

Il est indispensable en effet de connaître, pour ces élèves, leur degré de familiarisation avec l'écrit quelque soit le système d'écriture et leur degré de maîtrise dans certaines disciplines (mathématiques par exemple...). Les résultats de ces évaluations permettront d'élaborer les réponses pédagogiques les mieux adaptées au profil de chacun d'entre eux. Une certaine souplesse s'impose en matière d'appréciation des années de retard, en regard des compétences mises en jeu et des efforts consentis. Un retard d'un an, voire de deux ans, chez certains élèves ne constitue pas un obstacle dans un cursus de scolarisation longue.

À l'école élémentaire, c'est dans le cadre du cycle correspondant à la classe d'âge de l'écolier arrivant que cette évaluation doit être menée, avec le concours du maître de la classe d'initiation, s'il y en une dans le groupe scolaire, l'aide du CASNAV et, si besoin, celle du réseau d'aides spécialisées aux élèves en difficulté.

Dans le second degré, en fonction du nombre d'élèves à accueillir dans un même espace en général urbanisé, les centres de formation et d'information seront mobilisés, soit de manière déconcentrée, soit au sein de cellules d'accueil qui peuvent être mises en place dans les inspections académiques. Pour les élèves de plus de 16 ans, les cellules d'accueil peuvent en outre faire appel aux coordonnateurs des missions générales d'insertion. L'équipe chargée de cette évaluation devra transmettre les résultats aux enseignants qui auront à les accueillir. L'affectation devra tenir compte, d'une part, du profil scolaire de l'élève établi par les évaluations et, d'autre part, des possibilités d'accueil adaptées, à une distance raisonnable du domicile. Le délai entre la date d'inscription de l'élève auprès des services de l'Éducation nationale et son affectation effective dans un établissement ne doit pas excéder un mois.

L'affectation des élèves et le fonctionnement des classes spécifiques est également prévu. Les élèves nouvellement arrivés sont inscrits obligatoirement dans les classes ordinaires de l'école maternelle ou élémentaire. Les élèves du CP au CM2 sont regroupés en classe d'initiation (CLIN) pour un enseignement de français langue seconde, quotidiennement et pour un temps variable (et révisable dans la durée) en fonction de leurs besoins. L'objectif est qu'ils puissent au plus vite suivre l'intégralité des enseignements dans une classe du cursus ordinaire. Pour des élèves peu ou non scolarisés antérieurement et arrivant à l'âge d'intégrer le cycle III, un maintien plus long en classe d'initiation, allant jusqu'à une année supplémentaire, peut cependant être envisagé ; un suivi durable et personnalisé s'impose si l'on veut éviter un désinvestissement progressif de ces élèves dans les apprentissages. En fin de séjour en classe d'initiation, les acquisitions des élèves doivent être évaluées par l'équipe enseignante. Ces évaluations aident à préciser les champs de compétences les mieux maîtrisés et ceux pour lesquels un suivi et un soutien spécifiques sont encore nécessaires.

Dans le second degré, il convient de distinguer deux types de classes d'accueil en fonction des niveaux scolaires des élèves nouvellement arrivés. Certains n'ont pas été scolarisés dans le pays d'origine. C'est sur la base de l'évaluation effectuée à l'arrivée de l'élève que son affectation sera décidée. L'implantation de ces classes doit répondre aux besoins constatés ; on évitera d'implanter deux ou plusieurs classes d'accueil dans le même établissement. On fera également en sorte que des classes d'accueil ne soient pas systématiquement ouvertes dans les réseaux d'éducation prioritaire. Les classes d'accueil pour élèves non scolarisés antérieurement (CLA-NSA) permettent aux élèves très peu ou pas du tout scolarisés avant leur arrivée en France et ayant l'âge de fréquenter le collège d'apprendre le français et d'acquérir les connaissances de base correspondant au cycle III de l'école élémentaire.
Quand cela est possible, on regroupera ces élèves auprès d'un enseignant qui les aidera dans un premier temps à acquérir la maîtrise du français dans ses usages fondamentaux. Dans un second temps, on se consacrera à l'enseignement des bases de l'écrit, en lecture et en écriture. L'effectif de ces classes ne doit pas dépasser quinze élèves, sauf cas exceptionnel. Il convient néanmoins d'intégrer ces élèves dans les classes ordinaires lors des cours où la maîtrise du français écrit n'est pas fondamentale (EPS, musique, arts plastiques...), et cela pour favoriser plus concrètement leur intégration dans l'établissement scolaire. Ils doivent également pouvoir participer, avec leurs camarades, à toutes les activités scolaires.
Les nouveaux arrivants âgés de plus de 16 ans, ne relevant donc pas de l'obligation scolaire, peuvent néanmoins être accueillis dans le cadre de la mission générale d'insertion de l'éducation nationale (MGIEN) qui travaille à la qualification et la préparation à l'insertion professionnelle et sociale des élèves de plus de 16 ans. Ainsi des cycles d'insertion pré-professionnels spécialisés en français langue étrangère et en alphabétisation (CIPPA FLE-ALPHA) peuvent être mis en place pour les jeunes peu ou pas scolarisés dans leur pays d'origine. Enfin, on veillera à ce que soit mis en place un projet professionnel individualisé qui permette à chaque jeune d'accéder, par la découverte des filières professionnelles existantes à une formation répondant à ses aspirations personnelles et à ses capacités du moment. Les classes d'accueil pour élèves normalement scolarisés antérieurement (CLA) dispensent un enseignement adapté au niveau des élèves en fonction des évaluations menées à l'arrivée des élèves. On veillera à ce qu'ils soient inscrits dans les classes ordinaires correspondant à leur niveau scolaire sans dépasser un écart d'âge de plus de deux ans avec l'âge de référence correspondant à ces classes ; ils doivent bénéficier d'emblée d'une part importante de l'enseignement proposé en classe ordinaire, a fortiori dans les disciplines où leurs compétences sont avérées (langue vivante, mathématiques...). Un emploi du temps individualisé doit leur permettre de suivre, le plus souvent possible, l'enseignement proposé en classe ordinaire. Au total, l'horaire scolaire doit être identique à celui des autres élèves inscrits dans les mêmes niveaux. L'effectif des classes d'accueil doit être comparable à celui des classes du cursus ordinaire de l'établissement dans lequel elles sont implantées ; toutefois leur fonctionnement souple en structure ouverte doit permettre aux enseignants de n'avoir pas plus de 15 élèves en charge à la fois.
Les liaisons entre collèges et lycées ou lycées professionnels doivent être encouragées par la mise en réseau des établissements du second degré recevant ces jeunes. Les lycées professionnels doivent mettre en place des dispositifs afin de répondre aux besoins particuliers des élèves nouveaux arrivants qu'ils scolarisent, leur permettre l'acquisition rapide de la langue française et garantir à chacun d'entre eux une scolarisation réussie menant à un diplôme qualifiant. Les projets des classes d'accueil sont partie prenante du projet d'établissement qui définit par ailleurs les conditions d'intégration des nouveaux arrivants dans les classes ordinaires. Dans le cas où la dispersion des élèves ne permet pas leur regroupement en classe d'accueil, des enseignements spécifiques de français sont mis en place, prenant appui sur les acquisitions des élèves et les contenus de formation dispensés antérieurement. Des groupes de soutien pourront ainsi être constitués, sur le modèle de ce qui est prévu pour la constitution de groupes de remédiation pour les élèves en difficulté scolaire. En règle générale, les dispositifs qui concilient un accompagnement linguistique adapté et l'intégration optimale des élèves dans les classes ordinaire sont à encourager.

E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

L'article L-311-9 du Code de l'Action sociale et des Familles prévoit qu'en vue d'assurer le respect du droit à une vie familiale des membres des familles accueillies dans les établissements ou services mentionnés aux 1°, 8° et 13° de l'article L. 312-1, ces établissements ou services "doivent rechercher une solution évitant la séparation de ces personnes ou, si une telle solution ne peut être trouvée, établir, de concert avec les personnes accueillies, un projet propre à permettre leur réunion dans les plus brefs délais, et assurer le suivi de ce projet jusqu'à ce qu'il aboutisse". La loi du 24 juillet 2006 a procédé à l'introduction des centres d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile à l'article L 312-1 au 13°. En conséquence, l'article L 311-9 a été modifié pour faire application de ce dispositif aux CADA.
Dans ce but, chaque schéma départemental des centres d'hébergement et de réinsertion sociale évalue les besoins en accueil familial du département et prévoit les moyens pour y répondre.

F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Concernant les mineurs victimes de toute forme d'abus, le centre médical géré par l'association Primo Levi prodigue ce type de soins. En effet, l'association propose entre autres soins à caractère médicaux une prise en charge psychologique de toute personne ayant été victime de la violence politique ou de la torture dans son pays d'origine (demandeurs d'asile, réfugiés, etc.), aussi bien des adultes que des enfants ou adolescents. Cependant, et comme souligné précédemment, l'action engagée par l'association Primo Levi est indépendante vis-à-vis des administrations de l'asile. Cette action ne constitue nullement une action de service public, de sorte que l'inaction de l'administration française sur ce terrain témoigne d'un manquement au regard des dispositions obligatoires de la directive.

G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Comme indiqué précédemment, la situation spécifique des mineurs non accompagnés est réglementée par l'article L-751-1 du CESEDA : "lorsque la demande d'asile est formée par un mineur sans représentant légal sur le territoire français, le procureur de la République, avisé par l'autorité administrative, lui désigne un administrateur ad hoc. Celui-ci assiste le mineur et assure sa représentation dans le cadre des procédures administratives et juridictionnelles relatives à la demande d'asile. L'administrateur ad hoc nommé en application de ces dispositions est désigné par le procureur de la République compétent sur une liste de personnes morales ou physiques dont les modalités de constitution sont fixées par décret en Conseil d'Etat. Ce décret précise également les conditions de leur indemnisation. La mission de l'administrateur ad hoc prend fin dès le prononcé d'une mesure de tutelle".

Les missions de l'administrateur ad hoc ont été précisées par la circulaire prise en application du décret 2003-841 du 2 septembre 2003 relatif aux modalités de désignation et d'indemnisation des administrateurs ad hoc institués par l'article 17 de la loi 2002-305 du 4 mars 2002 relative à l'autorité parentale (NOR : JUSC0520090C). Ces missions sont doubles, d'assistance et de représentation et elles sont encadrées.
1. Une mission d'assistance : l'administrateur ad hoc se voit assisté si nécessaire d'un interprète en zone d'attente mis à sa disposition par le ministère de l'Intérieur, sous réserve de l'intervention de l'interprète dans le cadre des procédures judiciaires. Le législateur a entendu faire de l'administrateur ad hoc le référent du mineur, son accompagnateur tout au long de son maintien en zone d'attente ou de la procédure relative à la demande d'asile. A ce titre, non seulement il dispense au mineur l'information nécessaire à la compréhension de la procédure à laquelle celui-ci se trouve partie, mais encore, il lui prodigue un soutien moral, en l'absence de ses représentants légaux.
A cet égard, l'administrateur ad hoc aide le mineur à comprendre le rôle et les attributions de chacune des personnes qu'il sera amené rencontrer dans le cadre des procédures le concernant. Il facilite aussi les contacts avec d'éventuels parents en France ou à l'étranger. Il informe le mineur des risques liés à son enrôlement dans des réseaux de prostitution ou de travail clandestin et lui fournit tous les éléments utiles sur le système français de protection de l'enfance qui pourra constituer pour lui, jusqu'à sa majorité, un appui, s'il est amené à vivre sur le territoire français. Lors de la sortie du mineur de zone d'attente, l'administrateur ad hoc fait part, le cas échéant, au procureur de la République, des éléments d'information susceptibles de justifier la saisine du juge des enfants dans le cadre des dispositions de l'article 375 du Code civil. Il peut, également, informer le juge des tutelles d'éléments susceptibles de justifier l'ouverture d'une mesure de protection. Il appartiendra alors à ce juge d'apprécier si les conditions d'ouverture de la tutelle, telles qu'elles résultent des dispositions de l'article 390 du Code civil, sont remplies. L'administrateur ad hoc peut aussi rencontrer, en dehors de la zone d'attente, les membres de la famille du mineur qui pourraient se trouver sur le territoire français, et prendre contact avec les réseaux socio-éducatifs susceptibles d'intervenir à sa sortie de la zone d'attente.

Une continuité dans l'assistance apportée au mineur, lorsque s'achèvera la mission de l'administrateur ad hoc en zone d'attente, est ainsi assurée.
Lors de l'assistance du mineur, dans le cadre d'une demande d'asile, et alors que celui-ci se trouve déjà sur le territoire français, l'administrateur ad hoc doit exercer sa mission en lien, outre les services de l'OFPRA et de la préfecture, avec les différents professionnels intervenant auprès de l'enfant (service éducatif, juge des enfants éventuellement saisi d'une procédure d'assistance éducative), dans le respect du rôle et des compétences de chacun, afin d'assurer au mieux sa mission dans l'intérêt du mineur.

2. Une mission de représentation dans les procédures administratives et juridictionnelles : la loi prévoit que l'administrateur ad hoc assure la représentation du mineur dans toutes les procédures administratives et juridictionnelles relatives à son maintien en zone d'attente, afférentes à son entrée sur le territoire et relatives à la demande d'asile.
Ces dispositions visent, notamment, à rendre effectifs les recours du mineur devant la juridiction administrative contre la décision de refus d'entrée sur le territoire national, qu'elle soit ou non formulée au titre de l'asile à la frontière; devant la juridiction judiciaire, tant en première instance qu'en appel; dans la procédure d'autorisation de prolongation du maintien en zone d'attente, devant la Commission des recours des réfugiés, contre une décision de refus de l'asile qui aurait été rendue par l'OFPRA; devant le Conseil d'Etat, juge de cassation des décisions prononcées par la Commission des recours des réfugiés.
L'administrateur ad hoc, une fois désigné, prend contact dans les meilleurs délais avec les administrations concernées. Il est destinataire de tous les actes de procédure concernant le mineur. Il est également informé par écrit des dates et heures de toutes les auditions et de toutes les notifications par le service à l'origine de la procédure. L'administrateur ad hoc étant ainsi régulièrement avisé, son absence ne constituera pas un obstacle au déroulement des procédures concernées. Si l'administrateur ad hoc est présent, il signe les actes de procédure notifiés au mineur et en prend copie. Dans le cadre des procédures juridictionnelles relatives à son maintien en zone d'attente et, en application de l'article 3 de la loi du 10 juillet 1991 relative à l'aide juridique, le mineur bénéficie obligatoirement d'un avocat désigné au titre de l'aide juridictionnelle (loi 91-647 du 10 juillet 1991 sur l'aide juridique). L'administrateur ad hoc choisit un avocat de préférence sensibilisé à la défense des intérêts des mineurs. La mission de représentation légale dont est investi l'administrateur ad hoc dans toutes les procédures administratives et juridictionnelles visées par l'article 35 quater de l'ordonnance du 2 novembre 1945 modifiée par la loi du 4 mars 2002, tient au fait que le mineur ne dispose pas de la capacité juridique. Elle est donc bien distincte de celle de l'avocat qui, investi d'un mandat de représentation de son client en justice, agit en qualité d'auxiliaire de justice. Dans le cadre du dépôt des demandes d'asile, l'administrateur ad hoc ne se substitue pas au mineur pour demander l'asile à la frontière ou sur le territoire. Cette démarche doit être personnelle et le mineur peut toujours présenter une telle demande en l'absence de son représentant. Dans tous les cas où l'administrateur a été désigné après l'introduction de la demande d'asile, il adresse un courrier à l'OFPRA reprenant la demande à sa charge afin de la régulariser. Afin d'assurer ses différentes missions, l'administrateur ad hoc a la faculté de rencontrer le mineur au sein de la zone d'attente.

3. Le règlement intérieur établi au sein de la zone d'attente lui est opposable. Le transport des mineurs jusqu'au tribunal à l'occasion des audiences 35 quater ne relève pas de la compétence de l'administrateur ad hoc mais de l'administration. De même, ne relève pas de la mission de l'administrateur ad hoc, l'accompagnement du mineur devant le juge des enfants ou le service éducatif auprès du tribunal ou dans un lieu d'accueil dans le cadre d'une prise en charge éducative. Les frais de transport de l'administrateur ad hoc ne sont pas à la charge de l'administration. A l'occasion de la procédure juridictionnelle relative au maintien du mineur en zone d'attente, il appartiendra à l'autorité judiciaire saisie d'assurer la présence d'un interprète si nécessaire.

Enfin et par ailleurs, les services de l'aide sociale à l'enfance sont également mobilisés pour prendre en charge cette catégorie spécifique de mineurs. Des centres spéciaux ont été créés en région parisienne afin de recueillir les mineurs isolés tels que le CAOMIDA (Centre d'Accueil et d'Orientation pour MIneurs Demandeurs d'Asile), géré par France Terre d'Asile et le LAO (Lieu d'Accueil et d'Orientation) à Taverny (95) géré par la Croix Rouge. Ces structures bénéficient par rapport aux dispositifs de droit commun (CADA) de l'avantage de la spécialisation et de la constitution d'équipes adaptées aux besoins spécifiques des mineurs étrangers et isolés (voir sur ce point précis, "Mission d'analyse et de proposition sur les conditions d'accueil des mineurs étrangers en France", rapport IGAS n° 2005 010, Janvier 2005, sp. 32 et s. En particulier sur la mission du LAO en matière d'évaluation et d'orientation. De manière générale, la mission qui lui est assignée est de réaliser dans un délai prévu de deux mois une évaluation de la situation du mineur préalable à toute orientation. Cette orientation est sans exclusive a priori: il peut s'agir d'un retour au pays, d'un accueil dans la famille du mineur présente en France, d'un regroupement familial dans un autre pays, d'un placement de droit commun au sein d'un service d'aide sociale à l'enfance). En dehors de ces structures spécifiques, l'organisation est hétérogène en fonction des départements[391].

De manière générale, les enfants demandeurs d'asile bénéficient de l'application du droit commun en matière de prestation de l'aide sociale à l'enfance (ASE) à la charge des départements.

H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

[391] voir rapport IGAS, ps. 34 et s

Voir réponse à la question précédente.

I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

La recherche des membres de la famille est opérée par les services responsables de l'accueil des mineurs isolés dans la phase d'évaluation – orientation comme par l'assistance de l'administrateur ad hoc. Aucune disposition ne semble réglementer la confidentialité des informations en cause.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

Comme indiqué précédemment, le droit français aménage des solutions particulières au sein de la catégorie des personnes vulnérables aux mineurs isolés (voir supra) en particulier en matière d'accueil

B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

Il n'existe pas de CADA actuellement sur l'île de Corse[392].

C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

La capacité matérielle de structures d'accueil commande les conditions de cet accueil.

D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

Voir infra à propos des zones d'attente

E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

Les situations d'urgence relèvaient de la circulaire 99-399 DPM/CI3 du 8 juillet 1999 relative aux procédures d'admission dans le dispositif national d'accueil (DNA) des réfugiés et des demandeurs d'asile abrogée par la circulaire interministérielle du 3 mai 2007.
La circulaire de 1999 disposait à ce propos que, par suite d'arrivées importantes et excédant les possibilités d'admission laissés à l'initiative de la DDASS, l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile peut ne pas pouvoir être satisfait de manière durable sur le département. Une solution d'urgence doit être recherchée en priorité au niveau du département, et la commission nationale doit être saisie pour une entrée dans un centre du DNA au terme de cet hébergement temporaire. La DPM doit être informée de la situation et des modalités envisagées d'hébergement transitoire, auquel elle peut contribuer. Par ailleurs, elle indique également que la mise en place de dispositifs exceptionnels d'accueil destinés à faire face à des arrivées massives ne peut s'inscrire dans le cadre du fonctionnement du DNA, mais doit faire l'objet d'une saisine particulière de la DPM.

La circulaire interministérielle du 3 mai 2007 organise désormais la "ventilation" des demandeurs d'asile en fonction des places disponibles dans les structures d'accueil (CADA). Il appartient en premier lieu au préfet de département de recenser les places disponibles en CADA. Une fois analysée la situation personnelle, familiale et sociale du demandeur d'asile, les caractéristiques de sa demande d'hébergement doivent être rapprochées de l'offre d'hébergement disponible dans le département. En concertation avec les partenaires du dispositif national d'accueil, le préfet de département informe le demandeur du ou des centres susceptibles de l'accueillir et l'invite à se présenter au gestionnaire de l'un de ces centres.

Lorsque aucune place de CADA adaptée au profil du demandeur d'asile n'est disponible dans le département, il convient de rechercher une place dans le parc des CADA situés dans le ou les autres départements de la région. Le préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour s'enquiert auprès du préfet de région des places disponibles. En accord avec le préfet de région, il informe le demandeur d'asile du ou des centres susceptibles de l'accueillir dans d'autres département de la région et l'invite à se présenter au gestionnaire d'un de ces centres (comme dans le cas d'une admission locale, c'est le préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour qui choisit ce centre). En parallèle, il informe le préfet du département du lieu d'implantation du CADA, seul compétent pour donner son accord au gestionnaire du CADA sur la décision d'admission, ainsi que le gestionnaire retenu. La recherche de l'adéquation entre les demandes et les places disponibles au niveau régional est effectuée par le préfet de région avec le concours du représentant régional de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations, des préfets des départements et des services déconcentrés de l'action sanitaire et sociale, des représentants de personnes morales chargées du premier accueil des demandeurs d'asile et des gestionnaires de centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile.

Lorsqu'une demande d'hébergement n'a pu être satisfaite dans un cadre régional, le préfet de région la transmet au directeur de la population et des migrations (DPM), à fin d'examen des possibilités d'admission sur l'ensemble du territoire, compte tenu des places disponibles réservées pour une péréquation nationale. Les demandes d'hébergement présentées en Ile-de-France ou dans les régions frontalières sont examinées en priorité.
Afin de permettre la mise en oeuvre effective de ce mécanisme de péréquation nationale, il vous incombe de signaler chaque semaine à l'ANAEM, selon des modalités qui vous seront précisées par le directeur de la population et des migrations dans une prochaine instruction, d'une part, les places disponibles ne pouvant être affectées localement et, d'autre part, les demandes d'hébergement ne pouvant être satisfaites localement.
La recherche de l'adéquation entre les demandes et les places disponibles est effectuée par le DPM avec le concours du directeur général de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations, du préfet de la région Ile-de-France et des services déconcentrés de l'action sanitaire et sociale de cette région, des représentants de personnes morales chargées du premier accueil des demandeurs d'asile et des gestionnaires de centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile.

L'ANAEM informe le préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour des places de CADA qu'elle peut mettre à sa disposition sur le contingent national : le préfet transmet cette information au demandeur d'asile et l'invite à se présenter au gestionnaire de l'un de ces CADA. Il en informe parallèlement le préfet du département du lieu d'implantation de ce CADA, seul compétent pour donner son accord au gestionnaire du CADA sur la décision d'admission ainsi que le gestionnaire du centre retenu. La DDASS (ou à Paris, la DRASSIF) peut recevoir compétence du préfet pour accomplir ces actes, comme déjà mentionné à l'avant-dernier alinéa du § I.2.2.1.

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

B. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[393] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

Deux hypothèses différentes sont couvertes par le droit français, le maintien du demandeur d'asile en zone d'attente ou son placement en Centre de rétention administrative.

1. Le maintien en zone d'attente constitue le premier cas de figure en vertu de l'article L-221-1 du CESEDA. L'étranger qui arrive en France par la voie ferroviaire, maritime ou aérienne et qui, soit n'est pas autorisé à entrer sur le territoire français, soit demande son admission au titre de l'asile, peut être maintenu dans une zone d'attente située dans une gare ferroviaire ouverte au trafic international figurant sur une liste définie par voie réglementaire, dans un port ou à proximité du lieu de débarquement, ou dans un aéroport, pendant le temps strictement nécessaire à son départ et, s'il est demandeur d'asile, à un examen tendant à déterminer si sa demande n'est pas manifestement infondée.
Les dispositions du présent titre s'appliquent également à l'étranger qui se trouve en transit dans une gare, un port ou un aéroport si l'entreprise de transport qui devait l'acheminer dans le pays de destination ultérieure refuse de l'embarquer ou

[393] Please specify it article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 which specifies that "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if has not yet to be transposed).

si les autorités du pays de destination lui ont refusé l'entrée et l'ont renvoyé en France.

2. Le placement en Centre de rétention administrative est la seconde hypothèse, couverte par l'article L-551-1 du CESEDA. Le placement en rétention d'un étranger dans des locaux ne relevant pas de l'administration pénitentiaire peut être ordonné lorsque cet étranger :

- soit, devant être remis aux autorités compétentes d'un Etat membre de l'Union européenne en application des articles L. 531-1 et L. 531-2 ne peut quitter immédiatement le territoire français ;
- soit, faisant l'objet d'un arrêté d'expulsion, ne peut quitter immédiatement le territoire français ;
- soit, faisant l'objet d'un arrêté de reconduite à la frontière pris en application des articles L. 511-1 à L. 511-3 et édicté moins d'un an auparavant, ne peut quitter immédiatement le territoire français ;
- soit, faisant l'objet d'un signalement ou d'une décision d'éloignement mentionnés à l'article L. 531-3, ne peut quitter immédiatement le territoire français ;
- soit, ayant fait l'objet d'une décision de placement au titre de l'un des cas précédents, n'a pas déféré à la mesure d'éloignement dont il est l'objet dans un délai de sept jours suivant le terme du précédent placement ou, y ayant déféré, est revenu en France alors que cette mesure est toujours exécutoire.
- soit faisant l'objet d'une obligation de quitter le territoire français prise en application du I de l'article L 511-1 moins d'un an auparavant et pour laquelle le délai d'un mois pour quitter volontairement le territoire est expiré, ne peut quitter immédiatement ce territoire.

C. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Les dispositions françaises relatives à la rétention des étrangers et des demandeurs d'asile, dans les zones d'attente et les centres de rétention datent du début des années quatre-vingt et elles ne sont pas le résultat d'une opération de transposition d'un acte de droit communautaire.

D. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

A titre exceptionnel, le CESEDA prévoit une alternative au placement en rétention sous forme d'assignation à résidence prononcée par le Juge de la liberté et de la détention à l'issue de la période initiale de 48 heures sur la base de l'article L-552-4 : à titre exceptionnel, le juge peut ordonner l'assignation à résidence de l'étranger lorsque celui-ci dispose de garanties de représentation effectives, après remise à un service de police ou à une unité de gendarmerie de l'original du passeport et de tout document justificatif de son identité, en échange d'un récépissé valant justification de l'identité et sur lequel est portée la mention de la mesure d'éloignement en instance d'exécution. L'assignation à résidence concernant un étranger qui s'est préalablement soustrait à l'exécution d'une mesure de reconduite à la frontière en vigueur, d'une interdiction du territoire dont il n'a pas été relevé, ou d'une mesure d'expulsion en vigueur doit faire l'objet d'une motivation spéciale.

E. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

En ce qui concerne les Zones d'attente :
L'article R 213-3 du CESEDA prévoit que l'autorité compétente pour prendre la décision de refuser l'entrée en France à un étranger demandant l'asile est le ministre de l'Intérieur. L'article R 213-2 précise que cette décision "ne peut être prise qu'après consultation de l'Office français de protection des réfgiés et apatrides. La demande d'asile est consignée dans un procès-verbal et le demandeur se voit notifier la décision de maintien en zone d'attente. Un refus d'admission lui est ensuite remis uniquement si le ministère de l'intérieur estime que sa demande est manifestement infondée et qu'il convient en conséquence de procéder à son réacheminement. En pratique, la décision de placer la personne en zone d'attente est prise par les officiers de la PAF et la décision portant sur le caractère fondé ou manifestement infondé de la demande d'asile par le ministre de l'Intérieur.

En ce qui concerne les Centres de rétention administrative :
En vertu de l'article L-551-2 du CESEDA, la décision de placement est prise par l'autorité administrative, après l'interpellation de l'étranger et, le cas échéant, à l'expiration de sa garde à vue, ou à l'issue de sa période d'incarcération en cas de détention. Elle est écrite et motivée. Un double en est remis à l'intéressé. Le procureur de la République en est informé immédiatement. L'étranger est informé dans une langue qu'il comprend et dans les meilleurs délais que, pendant toute la période de la rétention, il peut demander l'assistance d'un interprète, d'un conseil ainsi que d'un médecin. Il est également informé qu'il peut communiquer avec son consulat et avec une personne de son choix. Un décret en Conseil d'Etat précise, en tant que de besoin, les modalités selon lesquelles s'exerce l'assistance de ces intervenants.
Lorsque l'étranger ne parle pas le français, il est fait application des dispositions de l'article L. 111-7.
L'article R 551-1 du CESEDA précise que l'autorité compétente pour ordonner le placement en rétention administrative est le préfet de département et, à Paris, le préfet de police.

F. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

En ce qui concerne les Zones d'attente :
En vertu de l'article L-222-1 du CESEDA, le maintien en zone d'attente au delà de quatre jours à compter de la décision initiale peut être autorisé par le juge des libertés et de la détention pour une durée qui ne peut être supérieure à huit jours.

En ce qui concerne les Centres de rétention administrative :
Le même CESEDA dans son article L-551-3 prévoit que "à son arrivée au centre de rétention, l'étranger reçoit notification des droits qu'il est susceptible d'exercer en matière de demande d'asile. Il lui est notamment indiqué que sa demande d'asile ne sera plus recevable pendant la période de rétention si elle est formulée plus de cinq jours après cette notification".

L'article R 553-15 du CESEDA (résultant de l'article 10 du décret 2005-617 du 30 mai 2005 relatif à la rétention administrative et aux zones d'attente pris en application des articles L. 111-9, L. 551-2, L. 553-6 et L. 821-5 du Code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile) précise que l'étranger maintenu dans un centre de rétention qui souhaite demander l'asile présente sa demande dans le délai de cinq jours à compter de la notification qui lui a été faite de ce droit conformément à l'article L. 551-3 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile. A cette fin, l'étranger remet sa demande soit au chef du centre de rétention soit à son adjoint ou, le cas échéant, au responsable de la gestion des dossiers administratifs.
L'étranger maintenu dans un local de rétention qui souhaite demander l'asile peut remettre à tout moment sa demande au responsable du local de rétention administrative ou à son adjoint. La demande d'asile formulée en centre ou en local de rétention est présentée selon les modalités prévues au deuxième alinéa de l'article R 723-1. L'autorité dépositaire de la demande enregistre la date et l'heure de la remise du dossier de demande d'asile par l'étranger sur le registre mentionné à l'article L. 553-1 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile.
L'article R 553-16 du CESEDA précise que l'autorité dépositaire de la demande saisit sans délai par tout moyen comportant un accusé de réception, notamment par télécopie ou par voie électronique sécurisée, le directeur général de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides du dossier de demande d'asile tel qu'il lui a été remis par l'étranger, en vue de son examen selon les modalités prévues à l'article R 723-3. L'original du dossier est transmis sans délai à l'office. Lorsque cette transmission est faite par porteur, un accusé de réception est délivré immédiatement.
L'article R 553-17 indique que si l'intéressé est retenu en centre de rétention administrative, la décision du directeur général de l'office est transmise au centre de rétention par télécopie, par voie électronique sécurisée ou par porteur au plus tard à l'échéance du délai de 96 heures prévu au deuxième alinéa de l'article R 723-3. Lorsque la décision comporte des pièces jointes, elle est transmise par voie postale accélérée. La décision du directeur général de l'office est transmise à l'intéressé par la voie administrative par le chef de centre ou son adjoint ou par le responsable de la gestion des dossiers administratifs.

Si l'intéressé est retenu en local de rétention administrative, la décision est transmise au responsable du local dans les conditions prévues à l'alinéa précédent en vue de sa notification administrative. La notification est effectuée par le responsable du local de rétention ou par son adjoint. Lorsqu'un étranger ayant déposé sa demande d'asile en local de rétention administrative est transféré en centre de rétention administrative avant que l'office ait statué, le préfet responsable de la procédure d'éloignement en informe par télécopie l'office.

G. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

Les zones d'attentes sont en général situées à proximité des lieux de débarquement d'aéroports, de ports ou, plus exceptionnellement, de gares ferroviaires. Il s'agit pour les autorités administratives de localiser les zones d'attentes au plus près de la frontière. Cette localisation permet ainsi de maintenir dans un local prévu à cet effet les personnes arrivées en France et qui ne possèdent pas les documents d'entrée et de séjour exigé. Elles sont délimitées par l'autorité administrative compétente en vertu de l'article L-221-2 du CESEDA. La liste des zones d'attente est périodiquement réactualisée[394].

Pour ce qui est de la création des centres de rétention, l'article R 553-1 du CESEDA indique que les centres de rétention administrative sont créés sur proposition du ministre de l'intérieur, par arrêté conjoint des ministres de l'intérieur, de la justice, de la défense et du ministre chargé des affaires sociales. Cet arrêté mentionne l'adresse du centre et précise d'une part si sa surveillance en est confiée à la police nationale ou à la gendarmerie nationale et d'autre part si ce centre est susceptible d'accueillir des familles.
Au terme de l'article R 553-2, "Les centres de rétention administrative sont placés sous la responsabilité du préfet territorialement compétent et, à Paris, du préfet de police, qui désigne par arrêté le chef du centre, après accord du directeur général de la police nationale ou du directeur général de la gendarmerie nationale. Cet arrêté désigne aussi, le cas échéant, dans des conditions définies par arrêté conjoint des ministres de l'intérieur, de la justice et de la défense, le responsable de la gestion hôtelière et le responsable de la gestion des dossiers administratifs des étrangers admis au centre.
Le chef de centre est responsable de l'ordre et de la sécurité du centre et de la tenue du registre mentionné à l'article L. 553-1 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile. Il a autorité sur l'ensemble des personnes qui concourent au fonctionnement du centre"

[394] Voir en annexe la liste

Les autorités chargées de la gestion des centres fermés sont la police nationale et la gendarmerie pour les Centres de rétention administratives et la police nationale ou la douane pour les zones d'attente.

Conformément à l'article R 551-3 du CESEDA, lorsqu'en raison de circonstances particulières, notamment de temps ou de lieu, des étrangers mentionnés à l'article R 551-2 ne peuvent être placés immédiatement dans un centre de rétention administrative, le préfet peut les placer dans des locaux adaptés à cette fin, dénommés « locaux de rétention administrative ».

L'article R 553-5 du CESEDA indique que ces locaux sont créés, à titre permanent ou pour une durée déterminée, par arrêté préfectoral. Une copie de cet arrêté est transmise sans délai au procureur de la République, au directeur départemental des affaires sanitaires et sociales et au président de la Commission nationale de contrôle des centres et locaux de rétention administrative et des zones d'attente.

La liste de ces centres de rétention administrative est périodiquement actualisée : voir en annexe l'arrêté du 7 juin 2006 pris en application de l'article 2 du décret 2005-617 du 30 mai 2005 relatif à la rétention administrative et aux zones d'attente pris en application des articles L. 111-9, L. 551-2, L. 553-6 et L. 821-5 du Code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile (JO 11 juin 2006).

H. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

Le décret 95-507 du 2 mai 1995 détermine les conditions d'accès du délégué du Haut-Commissariat des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés ou de ses représentants ainsi que des associations humanitaires à la zone d'attente et portant application de l'article 35 quater de l'ordonnance n° 45-2658 du 2 novembre 1945 relative aux conditions d'entrée et de séjour des étrangers en France. Ce dispositif a été intégré aux articles R 223-1 et suivant du CESEDA.

1. L'article R 223-3 prévoit que l'accès des représentants du HCR, l'accès est subordonné à un agrément individuel. Cet agrément est délivré pour une durée de trois ans par l'autorité administrative compétente (le ministre de l'Intérieur, art. R 223-4). Il est renouvelable pour la même durée. Il est matérialisé par la remise d'une carte nominative permettant d'obtenir lors de chaque visite une autorisation d'accès à la zone d'attente.
L'article R 223-6 précise que "Le délégué du Haut-Commissariat des Nations unies pour les réfugiés ou ses représentants agréés peuvent s'entretenir avec le chef des services de contrôle aux frontières et, lorsqu'ils sont présents, avec les agents de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides et les agents de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations chargés de l'assistance humanitaire. Ils peuvent également s'entretenir confidentiellement avec les personnes maintenues en zone d'attente qui ont demandé leur admission sur le territoire français au titre de l'asile".
Au terme de l'article R 223-7, une réunion est organisée annuellement sur le fonctionnement des zones d'attente, à l'initiative du ministre de l'intérieur, avec le délégué du Haut-Commissariat des Nations unies pour les réfugiés, ses représentants agréés et les services de l'Etat concernés.

2. Pour ce qui est des associations, deux régimes coexistent, un régime réglementaire et un régime conventionnel.

Le régime d'accès des associations en zones d'attente prévu par le décret du 2 mai a fait l'objet d'une codification dans le CESEDA au titre des articles R 223-8 à R 223-14.
L'article R 223-8 prévoit "L'autorité administrative compétente fixe la liste des associations habilitées à proposer des représentants en vue d'accéder à la zone d'attente dans les conditions fixées par la présente section.
L'habilitation ne peut être sollicitée que par les associations régulièrement déclarées depuis au moins cinq années et proposant par leurs statuts l'aide et l'assistance aux étrangers, la défense des droits de l'homme ou l'assistance médicale ou sociale.
Tout refus d'habilitation doit être motivé au regard notamment du nombre d'associations déjà habilitées.
L'habilitation est accordée pour une durée de trois ans et peut faire l'objet d'une convention signée entre l'autorité administrative compétente et l'association. L'habilitation et la convention sont renouvelables pour la même durée.
L'autorité administrative compétente peut retirer l'habilitation d'une association.
L'accès à la zone d'attente des représentants des associations habilitées s'effectue conformément aux stipulations de la convention.
L'attribution de l'agrément aux associations est régie par l'article R 223-9 qui précise qu'il est délivré pour une période de trois ans par le ministre de l'Intérieur. Cet agrément, qui est renouvelable, peut être accordé à dix personnes par association. Il entraîne la délivrance d'une carte nominative permettant d'obtenir lors de chaque visite une autorisation d'accès à la zone d'attente. Une même personne ne peut recevoir qu'un agrément. L'autorité administrative compétente peut retirer l'agrément délivré à un représentant d'une association. L'agrément d'un représentant d'une association est retiré sur demande de celle-ci ou lorsque l'habilitation de l'association est retirée ou a expiré.
Avant les modifications introduites par le décret de 1995, les visites étaient limitées de telle sorte que les associations ont souvent critiqué le rôle illusoire qui leur était ainsi reconnu : huit visites par an et par zone d'attente, effectuées à chaque fois pas deux représentants au plus, selon une autorisation préalable et entre huit et vingt heures. Désormais, les agréments subsistent mais les conditions de visite sont très nettement assouplies depuis l'abrogation de la disposition selon laquelle "sous réserve des nécessités de l'ordre public et de la sécurité des transports, une association habilitée peut accéder, par l'intermédiaire d'un ou de deux représentants agréés, à chaque zone d'attente, huit fois par an, entre 8 heures et 20 heures". Il résulte de cette abrogation que celles-ci peuvent effectuer autant de visites dans toutes les zones d'attente qu'elles le souhaitent, de telle sorte que toute notion de "quota" est supprimée. De même, les horaires ne sont pas limités, ce qui fait disparaître tout mécanisme d'autorisation préalable. Les associations peuvent accéder à tout moment en zone d'attente et autant de fois qu'elles le souhaitent sans présenter une quelconque demande préalable au ministère de l'intérieur.

L'article R 223-13 porte sur les visites, il prévoit " Les représentants agréés d'une association peuvent s'entretenir avec le chef des services de contrôle aux frontières et, lorsqu'ils sont présents, avec les agents de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides et les agents de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations chargés de l'assistance humanitaire.
Ils peuvent s'entretenir confidentiellement avec les personnes maintenues dans cette zone.
Pendant leur présence en zone d'attente, les représentants agréés d'une association habilitée sont accompagnés par un agent des services de contrôle aux frontières.
Les représentants de plusieurs associations habilitées ne peuvent accéder le même jour à la même zone d'attente.
Une réunion annuelle portant sur le fonctionnement de la zone d'attente est tenue à l'initiative du ministère de l'intérieur, en présence de tous les services présents en zone d'attente (police aux frontières, OFPRA, service médical…) et des présidents des associations habilitées. Elle donne lieu à un compte-rendu établi conjointement et rendu public.

Un arrêté du 30 mai 2006 dresse la liste des associations habilitées à accéder en zone d'attente.

Par ailleurs, un accès ponctuel de type conventionnel peut être également relevé. Le ministère de l'intérieur autorise les associations à jouer un rôle d'assistance des étrangers maintenus dans la zone d'attente de Roissy-Charles-de-Gaulle : la Croix-Rouge Française se voyait confier le volet humanitaire le 6 octobre 2003, l'Association nationale d'assistance aux frontières pour les étrangers (ANAFE), le volet juridique, le 5 mars 2004.

En ce qui concerne le volet humanitaire, la mission de la Croix-Rouge Française consiste notamment à rencontrer les étrangers maintenus en zone d'attente pour leur apporter un soutien psychologique et leur donner toute information utile, apporter toute aide matérielle par la fourniture de biens de première nécessité et assurer un rôle de médiateur entre les étrangers et les agents de l'État qui exercent leur mission en zone d'attente. Afin d'exercer sa mission, l'association désigne une équipe d'une vingtaine de personnes salariées qui assurent une présence continue, tous les jours et vingt-quatre heures sur vingt-quatre. Concrètement, la Croix-Rouge Française exerce sa mission dans des bureaux qui sont mis à sa disposition dans la zone d'attente pour les personnes en instance, dite « ZAPI 3 », de même que dans la zone réservée de l'aéroport, c'est-à-dire dans les aérogares, en vertu d'un badge qui est délivré sur autorisation du préfet de la Seine-Saint-Denis dans les conditions prévues par la réglementation en vigueur en matière d'accès aux différentes zones aéroportuaires. La convention, initialement prévue pour une période de six mois, a depuis lors été renouvelée expressément.

En ce qui concerne le volet juridique, la mission confiée à l'ANAFE selon la convention signée le 5 mars 2004 a pour objet de rencontrer les étrangers maintenus en zone d'attente en dehors des différentes phases administratives et judiciaires de la procédure, de leur fournir l'information et l'assistance utile sur le plan juridique afin de mieux garantir l'exercice effectif de leurs droits et de formuler des propositions tendant à améliorer les conditions de maintien en zone d'attente des étrangers et les garanties dont ces étrangers bénéficient, l'administration faisant connaître à l'association les suites qu'elle entend alors donner à ces propositions. Pour réaliser sa mission, l'ANAFE désigne une équipe de dix à quinze personnes composée de salariés ou de bénévoles qui peuvent intervenir à tout moment en zone d'attente, de jour comme de nuit, sans être toutefois astreintes à une obligation de présence, contrairement à ce qui est prévu dans la Convention unissant l'État à la Croix-Rouge française. Ces personnes disposent d'un bureau en ZAPI 3 et peuvent en outre se rendre à la zone réservée à raison de deux fois par semaine, sans être titulaires de badge mais accompagnées par un fonctionnaire de la police aux frontières et peuvent s'entretenir confidentiellement avec les étrangers qui s'y trouvent, à l'exception de ceux pour lesquels une procédure est en cours et peuvent accéder aux locaux où ces personnes sont en attente. La convention, initialement prévue pour une période de six mois, a depuis lors été renouvelée implicitement.

Le décret 2005-617 du 30 mai 2005 (JO du 30 mai 2005) ouvre formellement la possibilité qu'une convention soit signée entre le ministre de l'intérieur et une association. Les conventions sont alors passées pour une durée de trois ans et sont renouvelables pour la même durée. L'accès à la zone d'attente des représentants des associations habilitées s'effectue conformément aux stipulations de la convention. Le Groupe d'information et de soutien des immigrés (GISTI), Médecins du monde, l'Association Groupe accueil et solidarité (GAS), la Ligue des droits de l'homme et l'Association d'accueil aux médecins et personnels de santé réfugiés en France (ASPR) sont habilités pour trois ans à proposer des représentants en vue d'accéder en zone d'attente au titre de du décret n° 95-507 du 2 mai 1995 en vertu de l'arrêté du 30 mai 2006 (JO 3 juin 2006) et après un recours contentieux devant le Conseil d'Etat.

I. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

De tels recours existent en droit français, qu'il s'agisse des zones d'attente ou des centres de rétention administrative, et leur jeu est détaillé par le décret 2004-1215 du 17 novembre 2004 fixant certaines modalités d'application des articles 35 bis et 35 quater de l'ordonnance n° 45-2658 du 2 novembre 1945 relative aux conditions d'entrée et de séjour des étrangers en France (JO 18 novembre 2004).

En ce qui concerne les Zones d'attente :
Le système français est d'une grande complexité, peu compréhensible pour l'étranger car il implique la double intervention éventuelle du juge administratif et du juge judiciaire, en raison d'obligations de nature constitutionnelle. Le maintien en zone d'attente constitue une atteinte à la liberté d'aller et venir, liberté individuelle dont le juge judiciaire est le garant. S'il n'est pas compétent pour intervenir en matière d'asile, le juge judiciaire est donc compétent à ce titre. Par ailleurs, le juge administratif est le juge naturel de la légalité administrative et donc de la légalité des conditions de notification des mesures de refus d'entrée sur le territoire, du maintien en zone d'attente et de son renouvellement.

- la juridiction administrative peut en premier lieu être saisie d'un recours contre la décision de refus d'entrée en France. A la suite de la condamnation de la France par la Cour européenne des droits de l'Homme prononcée le 26 avril 2007 dans l'affaire Gebremehin (req. 25389/05), la loi du 20 novembre 2007 a procédé à un profond remaniement des procédures en cours en ajouatnt au CESEDA un nouvel article L .213-9. Ce dernier dispose que, désormais, un recours contentieux est ouvert dès l'entrée sur le territoire français.

L'étranger qui a fait l'objet d'un refus d'entrée sur le territoire français au titre de l'asile peut, dans les quarante-huit heures suivant la notification de cette décision, en demander l'annulation, par requête motivée, au président du tribunal administratif.
Le président, ou le magistrat qu'il désigne à cette fin parmi les membres de sa juridiction ou les magistrats honoraires inscrits sur la liste mentionnée à l'article L. 222-2-1 du code de justice administrative, statue dans un délai de soixante-douze heures à compter de sa saisine.
Aucun autre recours ne peut être introduit contre la décision de refus d'entrée au titre de l'asile.
L'étranger peut demander au président du tribunal ou au magistrat désigné à cette fin le concours d'un interprète.
L'étranger est assisté de son conseil s'il en a un. Il peut demander au président ou au magistrat désigné à cette fin qu'il lui en soit désigné un d'office. L'audience se déroule sans conclusions du commissaire du Gouvernement.
Par dérogation au précédent alinéa, le président du tribunal administratif ou le magistrat désigné à cette fin peut, par ordonnance motivée, donner acte des désistements, constater qu'il n'y a pas lieu de statuer sur un recours et rejeter les recours ne relevant manifestement pas de la compétence de la juridiction administrative, entachés d'une irrecevabilité manifeste non susceptible d'être couverte en cours d'instance ou manifestement mal fondés.
L'audience se tient dans les locaux du tribunal administratif compétent. Toutefois, sauf si l'étranger dûment informé dans une langue qu'il comprend s'y oppose, celle-ci peut se tenir dans la salle d'audience de la zone d'attente et le président du tribunal ou le magistrat désigné à cette fin siéger au tribunal dont il est membre, relié à la salle d'audience, en direct, par un moyen de communication audiovisuelle qui garantit la confidentialité de la transmission.

La salle d'audience de la zone d'attente et celle du tribunal administratif sont ouvertes au public. L'étranger est assisté de son conseil s'il en a un.
La décision de refus d'entrée au titre de l'asile ne peut être exécutée avant l'expiration d'un délai de quarante-huit heures suivant sa notification ou, en cas de saisine du président du tribunal administratif, avant que ce dernier ou le magistrat désigné à cette fin n'ait statué. Le jugement du président du tribunal administratif ou du magistrat désigné par lui est susceptible d'appel dans un délai de quinze jours devant le président de la cour administrative d'appel territorialement compétente ou un magistrat désigné par ce dernier. Cet appel n'est pas suspensif.
Si le refus d'entrée au titre de l'asile est annulé, il est immédiatement mis fin au maintien en zone d'attente de l'étranger, qui est autorisé à entrer en France muni d'un visa de régularisation de huit jours. Dans ce délai, l'autorité administrative compétente lui délivre, à sa demande, une autorisation provisoire de séjour lui permettant de déposer sa demande d'asile auprès de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides.
La décision de refus d'entrée au titre de l'asile qui n'a pas été contestée dans le délai prévu au premier alinéa ou qui n'a pas fait l'objet d'une annulation dans les conditions prévues au présent article peut être exécutée d'office par l'administration.

- le juge judiciaire intervient également à différents égards : il est juge des libertés individuelles, juge du respect des procédures et juge du maintien dans la zone d'attente.

En tant que juge des libertés, le juge judiciaire intervient pour apprécier la régularité de la privation de liberté de l'étranger, en raison du rôle que lui confie l'article 66 de la Constitution. Il est saisi par l'autorité administrative avant l'expiration d'un délai de quatre jours à compter de la notification de la décision de maintien en zone d'attente. Dès réception de la requête, le greffier avise aussitôt et par tout moyen l'autorité requérante, le procureur de la République, l'étranger et son avocat, s'il en a un, du jour et de l'heure de l'audience fixés par le juge.
L'étranger est avisé de son droit de choisir un avocat. Le juge lui en fait désigner un d'office si l'étranger le demande. La requête et les pièces qui y sont jointes sont, dès leur arrivée au greffe, mises à la disposition de l'avocat de l'étranger. Elles peuvent y être également consultées, avant l'ouverture des débats, par l'étranger lui-même, éventuellement assisté par un interprète s'il ne connaît pas suffisamment la langue française. Les droits fondamentaux, inhérents à toute mesure restrictive de liberté, tels que celui de bénéficier de l'assistance d'un interprète, d'un avocat, d'un médecin ou d'avertir toute personne de son choix, doivent être garantis dès l'arrivée aux frontières. Le juge judiciaire est également compétent pour vérifier que l'étranger interpellé est présenté dans un délai raisonnable à un agent de la police aux frontières ayant un grade suffisamment élevé afin qu'il soit procédé à la notification de la mesure de maintien en zone d'attente et des droits y afférent.

Son ordonnance est rendue immédiatement. Elle est notifiée sur place aux parties présentes à l'audience qui en accusent réception. Le magistrat fait connaître verbalement aux parties présentes le délai d'appel et les modalités selon lesquelles cette voie de recours peut être exercée, en vertu de l'article L-222-6 du CESEDA. Il les informe simultanément que seul l'appel formé par le ministère public peut être déclaré suspensif par le premier président de la cour d'appel ou son délégué. Lorsqu'une ordonnance met fin au maintien en zone d'attente ou à la rétention, ou assigne à résidence l'étranger et que le procureur de la République estime ne pas avoir à solliciter du premier président qu'il déclare l'appel suspensif, il retourne l'ordonnance au magistrat qui l'a rendue en mentionnant sur celle-ci qu'il ne s'oppose pas à sa mise à exécution. Il est alors immédiatement mis fin à la mesure de maintien. L'ordonnance est susceptible d'appel devant le premier président de la cour d'appel ou son délégué, par l'étranger, le préfet ou, à Paris, le préfet de police, dans les vingt-quatre heures de son prononcé. Le ministère public peut également interjeter appel de cette ordonnance selon les mêmes modalités, alors même qu'il a renoncé à solliciter la suspension provisoire. Toutefois, il doit former appel dans le délai de quatre heures s'il entend solliciter du premier président ou de son délégué qu'il déclare l'appel suspensif.

En tant que juge du respect des procédures, le juge des libertés et de la détention doit également vérifier qu'il a été saisi en respect des règles prévues dans le décret 2004-1215 du 17 novembre 2004 : délais, motivation de la requête, présence des pièces justificatives, des allégations de l'administration qui a saisi le juge judiciaire.

Enfin, le juge judiciaire peut être amené à autoriser le maintien en zone d'attente. Sur la base des articles L-222-1, L-222-2 et L-222-3, le maintien en zone d’attente au-delà de quatre jours à compter de la décision initiale peut être autorisé, par le juge des libertés et de la détention, pour une durée qui ne peut être supérieure à huit jours. A titre exceptionnel, le maintien en zone d’attente au-delà de douze jours peut être renouvelé, dans les conditions prévues au présent chapitre, par le juge des libertés et de la détention, pour une durée qu’il détermine et qui ne peut être supérieure à huit jours. Toutefois, lorsque l’étranger non admis à pénétrer sur le territoire français dépose une demande d’asile dans les quatre derniers jours de cette nouvelle période de maintien en zone d’attente, celle-ci est prorogée d’office de quatre jours à compter du jour de la demande. Cette décision est mentionnée sur le registre prévu à l’article L. 221-3 et portée à la connaissance du procureur de la République dans les conditions prévues au même article. Le juge des libertés et de la détention est informé immédiatement de cette prorogation. Il peut y mettre un terme. L’autorité administrative expose dans sa saisine les raisons pour lesquelles l’étranger n’a pu être rapatrié ou, s’il a demandé l’asile, admis, et le délai nécessaire pour assurer son départ de la zone d’attente. Le juge des libertés et de la détention statue par ordonnance, après audition de l’intéressé, en présence de son conseil s’il en a un, ou celui-ci dûment averti.

En toute hypothèse, cette intervention judiciaire reste d'exception, la durée moyenne du maintien en zone d'attente étant dans la plupart des cas inférieure à quatre jours.

Ce délai de huit jours est un maximum et le juge des libertés et de la détention peut décider de faire droit à la requête de l'administration mais pour une durée inférieure, en tenant notamment compte des circonstances propres à l'instruction d'une demande d'admission sur le territoire au titre de l'asile ou bien encore des possibilités réelles, notamment liées aux horaires des compagnies aériennes, pour un éventuel réacheminement.

En ce qui concerne les Centres de rétention administrative :
Les étrangers disposent ici de deux types de recours. Le premier est un recours contre la décision de placement en rétention administrative : le juge administratif est compétent pour statuer sur la légalité de l'arrêté préfectoral prononçant le placement en rétention. Le second recours, à l'issue du délai de 48 heures porte sur les décisions de prolongation de la détention adoptées par le juge des libertés c'est-à-dire le juge judiciaire.

Les recours administratifs et les recours contentieux de droit commun à l'encontre de la décision administrative de placement ont vocation à jouer normalement. Leur efficacité est clairement renforcée depuis 2000 par le jeu de la technique du référé-injonction qui permet d'obtenir soit la suspension d'une décision manifestement illégale, soit un acte que l'administration refuse de prendre. Le Conseil d'Etat vient ainsi "d'ordonner à l'administration de prendre les dispositions nécessaires pour que [la requérante] soit admise à demeurer à titre provisoire sur le territoire français jusqu'à ce qu'il ait été statué sur sa demande d'admission au statut de réfugié" (CE, 11 mai 2006, Ministre de l'Intérieur c. Issandja, req.296071).

Par ailleurs, le juge judiciaire, le juge des libertés, peut également être amené à intervenir, qu'il s'agisse de contrôler la décision de mise en rétention ou sa prolongation. Les articles L-552-1 et suivants du CESEDA indiquent ainsi : " quand un délai de quarante-huit heures s'est écoulé depuis la décision de placement en rétention, le juge des libertés et de la détention est saisi aux fins de prolongation de la rétention. Il statue par ordonnance au siège du tribunal de grande instance dans le ressort duquel se situe le lieu de placement en rétention de l'étranger, sauf exception prévue par voie réglementaire, après audition du représentant de l'administration, si celui-ci, dûment convoqué, est présent, et de l'intéressé en présence de son conseil, s'il en a un. Toutefois, si une salle d'audience attribuée au ministère de la justice lui permettant de statuer publiquement a été spécialement aménagée à proximité immédiate de ce lieu de rétention, il statue dans cette salle". On notera à cet égard les polémiques entraînées par la volonté de l'administration de "délocaliser" ces procédures près des centres de rétention (Circulaire INT/04/00006/C du 20 janvier 2004).

"Le juge rappelle à l'étranger les droits qui lui sont reconnus pendant la rétention et s'assure, d'après les mentions figurant au registre prévu à l'article L. 553-1 émargé par l'intéressé, que celui-ci a été, au moment de la notification de la décision de placement, pleinement informé de ses droits et placé en état de les faire valoir. Il l'informe des possibilités et des délais de recours contre toutes les décisions le concernant. L'intéressé est maintenu à la disposition de la justice, pendant le temps strictement nécessaire à la tenue de l'audience et au prononcé de l'ordonnance". A titre exceptionnel il peut prononcer une assignation à résidence.

Le CESEDA traite spécifiquement des voies de recours à l'encontre de ces différentes interventions du juge judiciaire en indiquant dans son article L-552-9 que les ordonnances mentionnées aux sections 1 et 2 du présent chapitre sont susceptibles d'appel devant le premier président de la cour d'appel ou son délégué, qui est saisi sans forme et doit statuer dans les quarante-huit heures de sa saisine ; l'appel peut être formé par l'intéressé, le ministère public et l'autorité administrative. L'article L-552-10 précise que l'appel n'est pas suspensif. Toutefois, le ministère public peut demander au premier président de la cour d'appel ou à son délégué de déclarer son recours suspensif lorsqu'il lui apparaît que l'intéressé ne dispose pas de garanties de représentation effectives ou en cas de menace grave pour l'ordre public. Dans ce cas, l'appel, accompagné de la demande qui se réfère à l'absence de garanties de représentation effectives ou à la menace grave pour l'ordre public, est formé dans un délai de quatre heures à compter de la notification de l'ordonnance au procureur de la République et transmis au premier président de la cour d'appel ou à son délégué. Celui-ci décide, sans délai, s'il y a lieu de donner à cet appel un effet suspensif, en fonction des garanties de représentation dont dispose l'étranger ou de la menace grave pour l'ordre public, par une ordonnance motivée rendue contradictoirement qui n'est pas susceptible de recours. L'intéressé est maintenu à la disposition de la justice jusqu'à ce que cette ordonnance soit rendue et, si elle donne un effet suspensif à l'appel du ministère public, jusqu'à ce qu'il soit statué sur le fond.

J. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

La directive a vocation à être pleinement applicable dans l'ensemble des lieux mentionnés.

En ce qui concerne les Zones d'attente :

L'article L-221-4 du CESEDA indique que l'étranger maintenu en zone d'attente est informé, dans les meilleurs délais, qu'il peut demander l'assistance d'un interprète et d'un médecin, communiquer avec un conseil ou toute personne de son choix et quitter à tout moment la zone d'attente pour toute destination située hors de France. Ces informations lui sont communiquées dans une langue qu'il comprend, ce qui est une avancée au regard des pratiques antérieures. Mention en est faite sur le registre mentionné au deuxième alinéa de l'article L. 221-3, qui est émargé par l'intéressé. Lorsque l'étranger ne parle pas le français, il est fait application de l'article L. 111-7.

En ce qui concerne les Centres de rétention administrative :

L'article L-553-4 du CESEDA indique que dans chaque lieu de rétention, un espace permettant aux avocats de s'entretenir confidentiellement avec les étrangers retenus est prévu. A cette fin, sauf en cas de force majeure, il est accessible en toutes circonstances sur demande de l'avocat. Un décret en Conseil d'Etat précise, en tant que de besoin, les modalités d'application du présent article

Les articles 8,9 et 10 du décret 2005-617 du 30 mai 2005 relatif à la rétention administrative et aux zones d'attente pris en application des articles L. 111-9, L. 551-2, L. 553-6 et L. 821-5 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile mentionnent l'essentiel de ces garanties. Ces dispositions ont fait l'objet d'une codification. Ainsi :
L'article R 553-7 prévoit qu'un local réservé aux avocats et permettant de préserver la confidentialité des entretiens est ménagé dans chaque lieu de rétention. Il est accessible en toutes circonstances, sauf en cas de force majeure, sur simple requête de l'avocat auprès du service en charge de l'accueil des étrangers retenus et avec l'accord de la personne intéressée.

L'article R 551-4 du CESEDA indique que dès son arrivée au lieu de rétention, chaque étranger est mis en mesure de communiquer avec toute personne de son choix, avec les autorités consulaires du pays dont il déclare avoir la nationalité et avec son avocat s'il en a un, ou, s'il n'en a pas, avec la permanence du barreau du tribunal de grande instance dans le ressort duquel se trouve le lieu de rétention. Quel que soit le lieu de rétention dans lequel l'étranger est placé, un procès-verbal de la procédure de notification des droits en rétention, signé par l'intéressé qui en reçoit un exemplaire, le fonctionnaire qui en est l'auteur et, le cas échéant, l'interprète, est établi. Ces références sont portées sur le registre mentionné à l'article L. 553-1 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile.

Au terme de l'article R 553-13, les étrangers placés ou maintenus dans un centre de rétention administrative bénéficient d'actions d'accueil, d'information, de soutien moral et psychologique et d'aide pour préparer les conditions matérielles de leur départ, qui portent notamment sur la récupération des bagages des personnes retenues, la réalisation de formalités administratives, l'achat de produits de vie courante et, le cas échéant, les liens avec le pays d'origine, et notamment la famille. Pour la conduite de ces actions, l'Etat a recours à l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations. Une convention détermine les conditions d'affectation et d'intervention des agents de cet établissement public.

L'article R 553-14 ajoute que "Pour permettre l'exercice effectif de leurs droits par les étrangers maintenus dans un centre de rétention administrative, l'Etat passe une convention avec une association à caractère national ayant pour objet d'informer les étrangers et de les aider à exercer leurs droits. L'association assure à cette fin dans chaque centre des prestations d'information, par l'organisation de permanences et la mise à disposition de documentation (…)". Il s'agit de la CIMADE, qui exerçait déjà ce rôle dans divers centres, et avec laquelle l'État a passé une convention. Elle peut notamment aider les étrangers en instance d'éloignement à préparer leur comparution devant le juge judiciaire, un recours contre la mesure d'éloignement, ou à obtenir l'aide juridictionnelle et un avocat ; l'étranger retenu a accès à son concours à sa demande ou à l'initiative de cette association. Les étrangers retenus bénéficient de ces prestations sans formalité dans les conditions prévues par le règlement intérieur.

Pendant la durée de leur séjour en rétention, les étrangers sont soignés gratuitement. Dans les conditions prévues par l'article R 553-3 du CESEDA, les centres de rétention administrative doivent comprendre une ou pluseirs salles dotées d'équipement médical, réservé au service médical devant permettre au personnel de santé d'y donner des consultations et d'y dispenser des soins.
Les conditions dans lesquelles le service public hospitalier intervient au bénéfice des personnes retenues, en application des articles L. 6112-1 et L. 6112-8 du code de la santé publique, sont précisées par voie de convention passée entre le préfet territorialement compétent et un établissement public hospitalier selon des modalités définies par arrêté conjoint du ministre de l'intérieur, du ministre chargé des affaires sociales et du ministre chargé de la santé. Pour les centres de rétention administrative, cet arrêté précise notamment les conditions de présence et de qualification des personnels de santé ainsi que les dispositions sanitaires applicables en dehors de leurs heures de présence au centre.

Les dispositions de l'article L-111-7 et L-111-8 du CESEDA s'appliquent en ce qui concerne la présence d'un interprète et les besoins de traduction. Lorsqu'un étranger fait l'objet d'une mesure de non-admission en France, de maintien en zone d'attente ou de placement en rétention et qu'il ne parle pas le français, il indique au début de la procédure une langue qu'il comprend. Il indique également s'il sait lire. Ces informations sont mentionnées sur la décision de non-admission, de maintien ou de placement. Ces mentions font foi sauf preuve contraire. La langue que l'étranger a déclaré comprendre est utilisée jusqu'à la fin de la procédure. Si l'étranger refuse d'indiquer une langue qu'il comprend, la langue utilisée est le français.

Lorsqu'il est prévu aux livres II et V du présent code qu'une décision ou qu'une information doit être communiquée à un étranger dans une langue qu'il comprend, cette information peut se faire soit au moyen de formulaires écrits, soit par l'intermédiaire d'un interprète. L'assistance de l'interprète est obligatoire si l'étranger ne parle pas le français et qu'il ne sait pas lire. En cas de nécessité, l'assistance de l'interprète peut se faire par l'intermédiaire de moyens de télécommunication. Dans une telle hypothèse, il ne peut être fait appel qu'à un interprète inscrit sur l'une des listes prévues à l'alinéa suivant ou à un organisme d'interprétariat et de traduction agréé par l'administration. Le nom et les coordonnées de l'interprète ainsi que le jour et la langue utilisée sont indiqués par écrit à l'étrange

Les articles R 553-11 et R 221-3 du CESEDA (anciens articles 18 et 19 du décret 2005-617 du 30 mai 2005 relatif à la rétention administrative et aux zones d'attente pris en application des articles L. 111-9, L. 551-2, L. 553-6 et L. 821-5 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile) confirment cette obligation. L'administration met un interprète à la disposition des étrangers maintenus en zone d'attente ou en centre ou en local de rétention administrative qui ne comprennent pas le français, dans le seul cadre des procédures de non-admission ou d'éloignement dont ils font l'objet. Dans les autres cas, la rétribution du prestataire est à la charge de l'étranger. Lorsque l'assistance d'un interprète se fait par téléphone ou un autre moyen de télécommunication, le nom et les coordonnées de l'interprète, ainsi que la langue utilisée, sont mentionnés par procès-verbal, dont une copie est remise à l'étranger.

On notera également que le règlement intérieur modèle, tel que publié par l'arrêté du 2 mai 2006 organise les modalités pratiques d'exercice de leurs droits par les étrangers placés en rétention (JO du 6 mai 2006).

Prévu par l'article R 553-4 du CESEDA (ancien article 4 du décret 2005-617 du 30 mai 2005), le modèle de règlement intérieur se divise en quatre titres. Le premier, relatif aux « Conditions d'accueil », organise les horaires d'« accueil » des étrangers placés en rétention, la procédure d'inscription de l'étranger concerné, les documents exigés, la procédure de notification des droits ainsi que les modalités de remise de « tout objet coupant ou contendant » et des documents susceptibles d'établir leur identité. Le second titre, relatif à la « Vie quotidienne » en centre de rétention, organise les conditions d'accès à certains locaux (sanitaires, « logements familiaux »), aux repas, aux « loisirs », règle les questions d'accès à la téléphonie et prévoit des règles de circulation des étrangers à l'intérieur du centre. Le troisième est consacré à l'accès aux services médicaux et aux agents de l'ANAEM. Enfin, le dernier titre, « Droits spécifiques et procédure juridique », organise les visites aux étrangers retenus, la permanence des associations conventionnées, l'information sur les recours aux juridictions et les « déplacements qu'ils auront à effectuer dans le cadre de la procédure d'éloignement dont ils font l'objet ».

K. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

La première différenciation tient au caractère prioritaire du traitement de la demande d'asile par l'OFPRA. L'article R 723-3 du CESEDA prévoit : "lorsqu'il est saisi en application de la procédure prioritaire prévue au second alinéa de l'article L 723-1, l'office statue dans un délai de quinze jours sur la demande d'asile. Ce délai est ramené à 96 heures lorsque le demandeur d'asile est placé en rétention administrative en application de l'article L 551-1" (ancien article 3 du décret 2004-814 du 14 août 2004 relatif à l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides et à la Commission des recours des réfugiés).

Un problème se pose également au niveau des interprètes. En effet, et conformément aux articles R 553-11 et R 221-3 (ancien article 18 du décret 2005-617), les interprètes sont mis à disposition pour les procédures de non admission. Pour ce qui relève de la demande d'asile, laquelle doit être obligatoirement rédigée en français, les frais de rétribution de l'interprète sont à la charge du demandeur. Ainsi, dès lors que l'étranger se trouve dans un centre fermé, il ne dispose pas de facilités de traduction telles qu'elles existent en centre d'accueil ou dans les associations de protection et de défense des demandeurs d'asile.

L. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

Mis à part le cas des mineurs isolés, le régime juridique français ne ménage pas de mesures spéciales.

M. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Juridiquement, les mineurs peuvent être amenés à intégrer une zone d'attente (art. L. 221-6 du CESEDA). Néanmoins, et en pratique, notamment à Paris, les mineurs sont logés dans des hôtels à proximité de l'aéroport. Selon les associations (ANAFE) il se pose un problème relativement à la "garde" de ses enfants qui se réalise en pratique avec le concours d'étudiants embauchés pour se faire et qui ne bénéficient d'aucune expérience à ce titre. Ils sont également sortis des zones d'attente de Roissy et dirigé vers le CAOMIDA et le LAO.
Concernant les centres de rétention administrative, les mineurs ne peuvent y être placés seuls. En revanche, lorsqu'ils accompagnent leurs parents, deux solutions sont envisageables. Les mineurs peuvent accompagner leurs parents et donc rester dans le centre de rétention. Les mineurs peuvent être pris en charge par un membre de la famille à l'extérieur du centre de rétention.

N. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

Aucune disposition de droit français ne prévoit d'accès à l'éducation dans les centres fermés. Ce positionnement relève notamment des brefs délais de rétention qui ne nécessitent pas la mise en œuvre de dispositifs d'éducation.

O. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

Selon le rapport le Mission d'évaluation des coûts, en date du 5 avril 2006, 59 221 demandes d'asile ont été présentées en France en 2005. L'OFPRA relève dans son rapport d'activité que 2 278 avis ont été rendus en 2005 dans le cadre des demandes d'asile présentées à la frontière (en zone d'attente). En ce qui concerne les demandes présentées en centre de rétention administrative, le rapport de l'OFPRA ne les cite qu'au travers de la procédure de réexamen

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

Le dispositif français d'accueil en matière d'asile est centralisé. Le ministère de l'Emploi, de la cohésion sociale et du logement est le ministère tête de file et il a en charge notamment l'accueil, l'hébergement et l'accès aux droits sociaux des demandeurs d'asile et des réfugiés statutaires. Cette mission est assurée par le Direction de la Population et des Migrations (DPM).

Il s'y ajoute deux ministères directement concernés : le ministère de l'Intérieur, directement en charge de la police des étrangers et qui assure la coordination de l'accueil au plan régional à travers l'action des préfets et le ministère des affaires étrangères à travers les deux organismes responsables de l'instruction des demandes de protection juridique : l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides (OFPRA) et la Commission des recours des réfugiés (CRR, devenue depuis la loi du 20 novembre 2007 la Cour nationale du droit d'asile). Cette organisation est désormais modifiée par la création d'un ministère de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement. Au terme de l'article 1er du décret n° 2007-999 du 31 mai 2007 relatif aux attributions du ministère de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement, "Le ministre de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement prépare et met en oeuivre la politique du gouvernement en matière d'immigration, d'asile, d'intégration des populations immigrées, de promotion de l'identité nationale et de codéveloppement.

Il prépare et met en oeuvre les règles relatives aux conditions d'entrée, de séjour et d'exercice d'une activité professionnelle en France des ressortissants étrangers. Il est chargé :

- en liaison avec le ministre de l'intérieur, de l'outre-mer et des collectivités territoriales, de la lutte contre l'immigration illégale et la fraude documentaire intéressant des ressortissants étrangers ;
- en liaison avec le ministre de l'intérieur, de l'outre-mer et des collectivités territoriales et le ministre du travail, des relations sociales et de la solidarité, de la lutte contre le travail illégal des étrangers ;
- conjointement avec le ministre des affaires étrangères et européennes, de la politique d'attribution des visas.

Il est compétent, dans le respect des attributions de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et apatrides et de la Commission des recours des réfugiés, en matière d'exercice du droit d'asile et de protection subsidiaire et de prise en charge sociale des personnes intéressées.

Il est responsable de l'accueil en France des ressortissants étrangers qui souhaitent s'y établir et est chargé de l'ensemble des questions concernant l'intégration des populations immigrées en France. Pour l'exercice de cette mission, il est associé à la définition et à la mise en oeuvre des politiques d'éducation, de culture et de communication, de formation professionnelle, d'action sociale, de la ville, d'accès aux soins, à l'emploi et au logement et de lutte contre les discriminations.
Il a la charge des naturalisations et de l'enregistrement des déclarations de nationalité à raison du mariage. Il est associé à l'exercice par le garde des sceaux, ministre de la justice, de ses attributions en matière de déclaration de nationalité et de délivrance des certificats de nationalité française.
Avec les ministres intéressés, il participe, auprès des ressortissants étrangers, à la politique d'apprentissage, de maîtrise et de diffusion de la langue française. Il est associé à la politique menée en faveur du rayonnement de la francophonie.
Il participe, en liaison avec les ministres intéressés, à la politique de la mémoire et à la promotion de la citoyenneté et des principes et valeurs de la République.
Il est chargé de la politique de codéveloppement et, en liaison avec le ministre des affaires étrangères et européennes et le ministre de l'économie, des finances et de l'emploi, participe à la définition et à la mise en oeuvre des autres politiques de coopération et d'aide au développement qui concourent au contrôle des migrations.
Dans le respect des attributions du ministre de l'économie, des finances et de l'emploi en matière de statistique, il coordonne la collecte, l'analyse et la diffusion des données relatives à l'immigration et à l'intégration des populations immigrées. Il est associé à la collecte et à l'analyse des données relatives à la population.

Un projet de loi en cours de discussion devant les assemblées parlementaire prévoit en outre de confier la tutelle de l'Office français de protection des réfugiés et des apatrides au ministère de l'immigration, de l'intégration, de l'identité nationale et du codéveloppement.

L'action sociale en direction des demandeurs d'asile comporte les volets suivants :

- Un hébergement dans le dispositif national d'accueil (DNA). Cet hébergement, mis en place et financé par la DPM, est destiné aux demandeurs d'asile dépourvus de ressources suffisantes et de logement. Les demandeurs d'asile sont alors pris en charge dans des centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile (CADA). Ces centres d'hébergement sont placés sous le contrôle administratif, social et financier des directions départementales des affaires sanitaires et sociales (DDASS). La DPM est également gestionnaire des crédits destinés à la prise en charge des demandeurs d'asile (tout au moins pour ce qui relève de leur hébergement car s'agissant de leurs dépenses de santé, celles-ci s'imputent sur les crédits de la CMU, gérée par la Sécurité sociale). Les crédits consacrés à l'hébergement des demandeurs d'asile sont gérés par la Direction de la population et des migrations (DPM) du Ministère de l'emploi, du travail et de la cohésion sociale. Ces crédits font pour l'essentiel l'objet d'une gestion déconcentrée et sont délégués aux DRASS et DDASS, exception faite des cas ou la direction signe directement des conventions avec quelques grands opérateurs comme la SONACOTRA ou l'AFTAM, spécialisés dans la gestion des foyers de travailleurs migrants mais accueillant à présent une partie de la population des demandeurs d'asile dans des centres d'accueil. Les opérateurs gérant les structures d'accueil sont au nombre de 180 au total.

- Une allocation temporaire d'attente est délivrée aux demandeurs d'aisle auxquels l'administration n'a pas été en mesure de trouver un hébergement. Elle est versée pour la durée de la procédure et son montant est de 10,04 euros journaliers. Cette extension de l'attribution temporaire de l'allocation constitue une transposition, implicite, de la directive.

- La couverture maladie des demandeurs d'asile est assurée par la Couverture Maladie universelle (CMU) de base et complémentaire, créée par la loi du 27 janvier 1999. Ces deux couvertures sont gérées par la Sécurité sociale.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)[395]

Conformément à l'article L. 315-7 du CASF, les CHRS, desquels découlent les CADA, sont des établissements publics, dont la gestion est confiée à différents acteurs (SONACOTRA, FTDA, AFTAM, CIMADE, …). Le projet de loi "immigration et intégration" en conférant une existence légale aux CADA donne à ces derniers le caractère d'établissement public.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?[396]

Entre 2004 et 2006, le nombre de places disponibles en CADA est passé de 15 470 à 19 470, un objectif de 21 000 places ayant été fixé pour l'année 2007"[397] some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities ?

Oui. Depuis 2004, les préfets de régions se sont vus confier une mission de péréquation interdépartementale pour la répartition des places de CADA afin d'assurer une solidarité nationale pour la répartition des demandeurs d'asile sur le territoire français, en liaison avec la Direction de la population et des migrations.

Cette mission est désormais confiée à l'Agence Nationale de l'Accueil des Etrangers et des Migrations (ANAEM), crée par la loi 2005-32 du 18 janvier 2005 de programmation pour la cohésion sociale (JO 19 janvier 2005). L'article L. 341-9 du Code du travail est rédigé comme suit :
" L'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations est un établissement public administratif de l'Etat. L'agence est chargée, sur l'ensemble du territoire, du service public de l'accueil des étrangers titulaires, pour la première fois, d'un titre les autorisant à séjourner durablement en France. Elle a également pour mission de participer à toutes actions administratives, sanitaires et sociales relatives :
« a) A l'entrée et au séjour d'une durée inférieure ou égale à trois mois des étrangers ;
« b) A l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile ;
« c) A l'introduction en France, au titre du regroupement familial ou en vue d'y effectuer un travail salarié, d'étrangers ressortissants de pays tiers à l'Union européenne ;
« d) Au contrôle médical des étrangers admis à séjourner en France pour une durée supérieure à trois mois ;
« e) Au retour et à la réinsertion des étrangers dans leur pays d'origine ;
« f) A l'emploi des Français à l'étranger.
« Pour l'exercice de ses missions, l'agence met en œuvre une action sociale spécialisée en direction des personnes immigrées.
L'agence peut, par voie de convention, associer à ses missions tout organisme privé ou public, notamment les collectivités territoriales et les organismes de droit privé à but non lucratif spécialisés dans l'aide aux migrants".

La loi du 24 juillet 2006 prévoit de renforcer la coordination du dispositif autour de l'ANAEM et du préfet de région. Dans le cadre de sa mission d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile définie à l'article L. 341-9 du Code du travail, l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations coordonne la gestion de l'hébergement dans les centres d'accueil pour les demandeurs d'asile. À cette fin, elle conçoit, met en oeuvre et gère, dans les conditions prévues par la loi n° 78-17 du 6 janvier 1978 relative à l'informatique, aux fichiers et aux libertés, un traitement automatisé de données relatives aux capacités d'hébergement des centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile, à l'utilisation de ces capacités et aux demandeurs d'asile qui y sont accueillis afin de disposer d'une information faible sur la disponibilité du système d'accueil. Les gestionnaires des centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile seront tenues de déclarer, dans le cadre de ce traitement automatisé de données, les places disponibles dans les centres d'accueil à l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations et à l'autorité administrative compétente de l'État et de leur transmettre les informations, qu'elles tiennent à jour, concernant les personnes accueillies.

Une circulaire interministérielle du 3 mai 2007 organise précisément ce système de péréquation. Il se décompose comme suit :

I.2.2. - La désignation du CADA de destination

La seconde étape de la procédure préalable à l'admission en CADA est la désignation, par le préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour, d'un CADA disposant d'une place adaptée au profil personnel, familial et social du demandeur d'asile et l'invitation faite au demandeur d'asile à se présenter au gestionnaire de ce CADA.

Cette seconde étape doit être préparée avec beaucoup de soin, en explorant successivement les différents niveaux de gestion du DNA.

I.2.2.1. - Les admissions locales

Il appartient au préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour des demandeurs d'asile de recenser les places de CADA disponibles dans son département et susceptibles de correspondre à la situation personnelle, familiale et sociale du demandeur d'asile. Cette mission peut être confiée à la DDASS (ou à Paris, à la DRASSIF), qui peut s'appuyer, pour la mener à bien, sur les représentations locales de l'ANAEM, les plates-formes d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile lorsqu'elles existent ou les partenaires associatifs conventionnés.

Pour faciliter ce recensement, le demandeur d'asile qui a accepté l'offre de prise en charge en CADA doit être invité par les services de la préfecture à déposer une demande auprès de la structure que le préfet aura chargée au plan départemental de l'analyse de la situation personnelle, familiale et sociale des demandeurs d'asile. Il peut s'agir de la représentation locale de l'ANAEM, de la plate-forme d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile, s'il en existe une dans le département ou, à défaut, des partenaires associatifs conventionnés par la DDASS.

Votre attention est toutefois appelée sur le fait qu'un demandeur d'asile ayant accepté l'offre de prise en charge en CADA peut percevoir l'ATA aussi longtemps qu'il n'a pas été accueilli effectivement dans un CADA. En conséquence, vous veillerez en toute hypothèse, même si le demandeur d'asile n'a pas pris l'attache de la structure mentionnée ci-dessus, à l'informer, après analyse des renseignements qu'il vous aura fournis lors de son admission au séjour sur sa situation personnelle et familiale, de ce qu'une place est devenue disponible dans un CADA et à l'inviter à se présenter au gestionnaire de ce CADA dans les conditions prévues au § I.3 ci-dessous.

Une fois analysée la situation personnelle, familiale et sociale du demandeur d'asile, les caractéristiques de sa demande d'hébergement doivent être rapprochées de l'offre d'hébergement disponible dans le département. A cet effet, vous êtes invités à organiser et à développer entre tous les acteurs concernés des modalités de dialogue et d'échange adaptées à une gestion locale efficace de l'hébergement et de la prise en charge sociale des demandeurs d'asile. Vous effectuerez notamment la recherche de l'adéquation entre les demandes et les places disponibles avec le concours de l'ensemble des partenaires du DNA, au premier rang desquels les gestionnaires de CADA, le représentant de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations (ANAEM) mais aussi les personnes morales chargées du premier accueil des demandeurs d'asile. Vous veillerez également à associer, en tant que de besoin, les associations intervenant dans ce domaine.

Votre attention est particulièrement appelée sur le fait que la commission nationale et les commissions locales prévues par les articles L. 111-3-1 et R. 345-5 du CASF ont été supprimées par le 2° du II de l'article 95 de la loi du 24 juillet 2006 et par le II de l'article 3 du décret n° 2007-399 du 23 mars 2007. Ces instances n'ont donc plus à intervenir dans la procédure d'admission d'un demandeur d'asile en CADA. En revanche, il vous appartient d'organiser de manière informelle la concertation la plus large possible dans les conditions définies à l'alinéa précédent.

A l'issue de cette concertation, il appartient au préfet d'informer le demandeur du ou des centres susceptibles de l'accueillir et de l'inviter à se présenter au gestionnaire de l'un de ces centres.

Si des places sont disponibles dans plusieurs CADA, c'est donc le préfet qui choisit la place qu'il propose au demandeur d'asile.

Prévue par le second alinéa du nouvel article R. 348-1 du CASF, cette information doublée d'une invitation doit être faite soit par envoi recommandé avec demande d'avis de réception, soit par remise en mains propres contre reçu au demandeur d'asile à l'occasion d'un entretien organisé dans les conditions précisées au § I.3.

La compétence pour délivrer cette information doublée d'une invitation peut être déléguée par le préfet au DDASS (ou à Paris, au DRASSIF) qui peut être assisté pour les formalités pratiques par la représentation locale de l'ANAEM, les platesformes d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile ou des partenaires associatifs conventionnés par la DDASS.

Vous trouverez en annexe n° 3 à la présente circulaire la lettre type qui servira de support à cette information doublée d'une invitation.

I.2.2.2. - Les admissions après mutualisation interdépartementale

Les préfets de région exercent l'autorité de l'Etat sur le dispositif national d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile dans leur région. Sous réserve de la part nationale, le préfet de région fixe les contingents départementaux et arrête la proportion de places à réserver pour le contingent régional. Comme précédemment, les préfets de départements sont compétents pour la gestion des contingents départementaux. Le préfet de région a compétence sur la totalité du contingent régional, sous réserve du contingent réservé au mécanisme de mutualisation nationale (cf. tableau joint en annexe 4). Les préfets de région veilleront à assurer la fluidité du dispositif d'accueil régional, à mettre en oeuvre à l'échelle de la région une répartition équitable des personnes hébergées en concertation avec les préfets de départements.

Lorsque aucune place de CADA adaptée au profil du demandeur d'asile n'est disponible dans le département, il convient de rechercher une place adaptée dans le parc des CADA situés dans le ou les autres départements de la région.

Le préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour s'enquiert auprès du préfet de région des places disponibles. En accord avec le préfet de région, il informe le demandeur d'asile du ou des centres susceptibles de l'accueillir dans d'autres département de la région et l'invite à se présenter au gestionnaire d'un de ces centres (comme dans le cas d'une admission locale, c'est le préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour qui choisit ce centre). En parallèle, il informe le préfet du département du lieu d'implantation du CADA, seul compétent pour donner son accord au gestionnaire du CADA sur la décision d'admission, ainsi que le gestionnaire retenu. Le DDASS (ou à Paris, le DRASSIF) peut recevoir compétence du préfet pour accomplir ces actes, comme déjà mentionné à l'avant-dernier alinéa du § I.2.2.1. Afin de favoriser une gestion fluide des capacités, il est souhaitable que les affectations de places dans un cadre interdépartemental aient lieu dans un délai de huit jours.

La recherche de l'adéquation entre les demandes et les places disponibles au niveau régional est effectuée par le préfet de région avec le concours du représentant régional de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations, des préfets des départements et des services déconcentrés de l'action sanitaire et sociale, des représentants de personnes morales chargées du premier accueil des demandeurs d'asile et des gestionnaires de centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile.

I.2.2.3. - Les admissions après péréquation nationale

Lorsqu'une demande d'hébergement n'a pu être satisfaite dans un cadre régional, le préfet de région la transmet au directeur de la population et des migrations (DPM), à fin d'examen des possibilités d'admission sur l'ensemble du territoire, compte tenu des places disponibles réservées pour une péréquation nationale. Les demandes d'hébergement présentées en Ile-de-France ou dans les régions frontalières sont examinées en priorité.

Afin de permettre la mise en oeuvre effective de ce mécanisme de péréquation nationale, il vous incombe de signaler chaque semaine à l'ANAEM, selon des modalités qui vous seront précisées par le directeur de la population et des migrations dans une prochaine instruction, d'une part, les places disponibles ne pouvant être affectées localement et, d'autre part, les demandes d'hébergement ne pouvant être satisfaites localement.

La recherche de l'adéquation entre les demandes et les places disponibles est effectuée par le DPM avec le concours du directeur général de l'Agence nationale de l'accueil des étrangers et des migrations, du préfet de la région Ile-de-France et des services déconcentrés de l'action sanitaire et sociale de cette région, des représentants de personnes morales chargées du premier accueil des demandeurs d'asile et des gestionnaires de centres d'accueil pour demandeurs d'asile.

L'ANAEM informe le préfet compétent pour l'admission au séjour des places de CADA qu'elle peut mettre à sa disposition sur le contingent national : le préfet transmet cette information au demandeur d'asile et l'invite à se présenter au gestionnaire de l'un de ces CADA. Il en informe parallèlement le préfet du département du lieu d'implantation de ce CADA, seul compétent pour donner son accord au gestionnaire du CADA sur la décision d'admission ainsi que le gestionnaire du centre retenu. La DDASS (ou à Paris, la DRASSIF) peut recevoir compétence du préfet pour accomplir ces actes, comme déjà mentionné à l'avant-dernier alinéa du § I.2.2.1.

I.2.2.4. - Cas particulier des régions dans lesquelles le préfet du département chef lieu de région est compétent pour l'admission au séjour des demandeurs d'asile de tous les départements de la région

Dans ces régions, c'est le préfet du département chef lieu de région désigné par arrêté du ministre de l'intérieur en application des dispositions du second alinéa de l'article R. 741-1 du CESEDA qui est compétent pour l'admission au séjour. C'est à lui que revient la charge, d'une part, de formuler l'offre de prise en charge en CADA et, d'autre part, d'informer le demandeur d'asile du ou des CADA susceptibles de le prendre en charge et de l'inviter à se présenter au gestionnaire de l'un de ces centres. Pour exercer cette double compétence, le préfet du département chef lieu de région organisera, selon les modalités de son choix, une concertation avec les autres préfets de département, le DRASS, les DDASS et les gestionnaires de CADA de tous les départements de la région. Si aucune place n'est disponible dans un CADA de la région, il fera jouer la péréquation nationale comme indiqué au § I.2.2.3.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?[398]

Au plan consultatif, la CNCDH est consultée pour toute question relevant du champ des droits de l'homme, et donc du droit d'asile. Sa compétence relève d'un décret (84-72 du 30 janvier 1984 modifié par les décrets 93-182 du 9 février 1993, 96-791 du 11 septembre 1996 et 99-377 du 10 mai 1999) lequel énonce que "la Commission assiste de ses avis le Premier ministre et les ministres concernés sur toutes les questions de portée générale qui concernent les Droits de l'homme ou l'action humanitaire". Plusieurs associations intervenant dans l'aide et le soutien des réfugiés sont membres de la CNCDH.

Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

Voir supra : En matière d'asile, le ministère de l'emploi, de la cohésion sociale et du logement, a en charge notamment l'accueil, l'hébergement et l'accès aux droits sociaux des demandeurs d'asile et des réfugiés statutaires. Cette mission est assurée par le Direction de la Population et des Migrations (DPM).

B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?[399]

Ce type de règles n'existe pas pour les centres d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile. Les centres et locaux de rétention administrative doivent répondre aux standards fixés par l'article 553-3 du CESEDA (ancien décret 2005-617 du 30 mai 2005 relatif à la rétention administrative et aux zones d'attente pris en application des articles L. 111-9, L. 551-2, L. 553-6 et L. 821-5 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile (JO 31 mai 2005). Ce dernier indique que les centres de rétention administrative, dont la capacité d'accueil ne pourra pas dépasser 140 places, offrent aux étrangers retenus des équipements de type hôtelier et des prestations de restauration collective. Ils répondent aux normes suivantes :

1° Une surface utile minimum de 10 mètres carrés par retenu comprenant les chambres et les espaces librement accessibles aux heures ouvrables ;

2° Des chambres collectives non mixtes, contenant au maximum six personnes ;

3° Des équipements sanitaires, comprenant des lavabos, douches et w.-c., en libre accès et en nombre suffisant, soit un bloc sanitaire pour 10 retenus ;

4° Un téléphone en libre accès pour cinquante retenus ;

5° Des locaux et matériels nécessaires à la restauration conformes aux normes prévues par un arrêté conjoint du ministre de l'agriculture, du ministre de la défense, du ministre chargé de la santé et du ministre chargé des petites et moyennes entreprises, du commerce et de l'artisanat ;

6° Au-delà de quarante personnes retenues, une salle de loisirs et de détente distincte du réfectoire, dont la superficie est d'au moins 50 mètres carrés, majorée de 10 mètres carrés pour quinze retenus supplémentaires ;

7° Une ou plusieurs salles dotées d'équipement médical, réservées au service médical ;

8° Un local permettant de recevoir les visites des familles et des autorités consulaires ;

[399] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

9° Le local mentionné à l'article R. 553-7, réservé aux avocats ;
10° Un local affecté à l'organisme mentionné à l'article R. 553-13 ;
11° Un local, meublé et équipé d'un téléphone, affecté à l'association mentionnée au premier alinéa de l'article R. 553-14 ;
12° Un espace de promenade à l'air libre ;
13° Un local à bagages.
Les centres de rétention administrative susceptibles d'accueillir des familles disposent en outre de chambres spécialement équipées, et notamment de matériels de puériculture adaptés.

C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?[400]

Comme indiqué plus haut, la DPM a pour mission d'organiser l'accueil et l'hébergement des demandeurs d'asile et des réfugiés. La DPM est organisée en trois sous–directions (de la démographie, des mouvements de population et des questions internationales).

La sous–direction de l'accueil et de l'intégration élabore et anime la politique d'accueil et d'intégration des personnes d'origine étrangère : lutte contre les discriminations, actions sociales et territoriales favorisant l'intégration, égal accès aux services publics et aux droits sociaux, accueil et hébergement des demandeurs d'asile, des réfugiés et des personnes accueillies à titre humanitaire, suivi des questions relatives aux conditions de logement des populations immigrées. L'action menée au titre de l'accueil et de l'hébergement des demandeurs d'asile est réalisée en liaison avec les Direction Départementale des Affaires Sanitaires et Sociales et les Direction Régionales des Affaires Sanitaires et Sociales.

D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?[401]

La Direction des populations et des migrations publie un rapport annuel lequel consacre une partie à l'accueil des demandeurs d'asile (Ces rapports ne sont pas disponibles en ligne, ils sont publiés à la Documentation française, sans que l'on puisse consulter la table des matières.

Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

[400] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[401] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Le nombre de demandes d'asile enregistrées par l'OFPRA s'est élevé en 2006 à 39 315 demandes (dont 30 731 premières demandes et 8 584 demandes de réexamen) (2), ce qui représente une diminution de 33,6 % par rapport à l'année précédente. La tendance est identique pour le premier semestre 2007, puisque 14 102 premières demandes d'asile ont été adressées à l'OFPRA, ce qui marque un recul de 14 % par rapport au premier semestre 2006.[402]

Pour ce qui relève de l'hébergement en centre d'accueil, les travaux parlementaires indiquent que fin 2005, les 245 CADA présents sur le territoire français ont accueilli 16 148 personnes, parmi lesquelles seuls 9 612 demandeurs d'asile, le solde étant constitué de 3 228 réfugiés et de 3 308 déboutés. Pour l'année 2005, le nombre total de personnes ayant été hébergées en CADA s'est élevé, selon les données provisoire de l'ANAEM à 25 288 personnes pour une capacité de 17 740 places.

B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?[403]

Selon les travaux parlementaires, le budget alloué à l'hébergement des demandeurs d'asile s'élevait en 2005 à 182 305 828 euros. Celui affecté à l'allocation d'insertion pour les demandeurs d'asile à 152 000 000 euros. Concernant les dépenses de santé, la Mission d'évaluation et de contrôle estimait que les dépenses dégagées par l'Etat en 2004 (sur la base approximative de 90 000 demandeurs d'asile en cours de procédure) s'élevaient à 204 500 000 (évaluation comprenant la CMU de base et la complémentaire). Au total, les dépenses engagées par la France au titre des conditions d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile peuvent être évalué à 538 805 828 euros (cette évaluation ne comprenant pas les crédits déconcentrés aux collectivités territoriales [environ 11 500 000 euros], qui gèrent les situations de mineurs isolés ainsi que les centres de rétentions administratives, et les aides versées aux associations (1 620 000 euros).

C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?[404]

Le coût journalier d'une place en CADA est d'environ 25 euros et plus exactement de 24, 82 euros.

[402] Rapport Mariani 2007, p. 21
[403] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.
[404] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Le directeur de la DPM, lors de son audition par la MEC[405] indique : "le coût moyen d'une place en CADA est exactement de 24,82 euros par personne et par jour. Ce chiffre, qui recouvre l'hébergement, la nourriture, l'accompagnement social, le transport vers l'OFPRA, le financement des éléments de la scolarisation des enfants et les petites dépenses de la vie quotidienne, ne paraît pas exorbitant. Par comparaison, une place en CHRS revient à presque 40 euros… Le coût de l'hébergement d'urgence est quant à lui estimé à un peu moins de 17 euros. Signalons toutefois, par honnêteté, que nous avons une mauvaise appréciation des coûts de l'hébergement en urgence alors que, pour les CADA, nous les connaissons à l'euro près, même si nous sommes en train d'en revoir totalement la structure avec les organismes gestionnaires, conformément aux exigences de la LOLF".

Il n'existe pas d'évaluation disponible sur le coût moyen d'un demandeur d'asile par an. Sur le fondement des données délivrées par la Mission d'évaluation et de contrôle, il est possible d'estimer que le coût moyen d'un demandeur d'asile hébergé en CADA (hébergement et soins de santé) s'élève à 11 332 euros par an (9060 euros d'hébergement et 2 273 euros de soins). Pour un demandeur d'asile qui ne bénéficie pas d'un hébergement en centre d'accueil, le coût annuel s'élève approximativement à 5 813 euros (allocation d'insertion et soins de santé).

D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

Le coût est principalement supporté par l'Etat et les collectivités territoriales pour certaines dépenses.

E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?[406]

Au regard de l'augmentation des dépenses allouées à l'hébergement en centre d'accueil ainsi qu'aux dépenses de santé, il peut être considéré que l'Etat français alloue les dépenses nécessaires à la mise en œuvre de la directive.

Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions[407]?

Aucun recensement n'est disponible.

[407] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?[408]

La formation des personnels travaillant dans les centres d'accueil ne constitue pas une obligation légale. Nous ne disposons pas d'éléments de réponse à cette question au plan pratique.

C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?[409]

Pas à notre connaissance.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

Pas de problèmes spécifiques de traduction relevés en France

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

Oui, comme signifié précédemment, le respect des dispositions de la directive résulte à la fois de la superposition de textes anciens et de l'adoption de textes spécifiques, le dernier d'entre eux est constitué par la loi du 30 juin 2006 dont le titre V porte "dispositions relatives à l'asile". Le droit français prenait donc déjà en compte la question relative à l'accueil matériel des demandeurs d'asile, soit par voie législative, soit par voie réglementaire.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

Il ne semble pas que la directive ait eu une influence quelconque sur la clarté, la précision ou la cohérence des règles applicables. Le domaine demeure d'ailleurs toujours soumis à un éclatement très important du cadre juridique (multiplicité des règles et des domaines sollicités).

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

Certains changements ont été induits par la directive portent notamment sur l'accès au marché du travail ou encore l'attribution d'une allocation temporaire d'attente pour toute la durée de la procédure. Si ces changements demeurent importants pour le demandeur d'asile, le mouvement de fond visant à permettre à tous les demandeurs d'accéder au dispositif national d'accueil n'a visiblement pas été initié par la directive.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

Aucun débat de fond n'a été mené en vue de la transposition de la directive.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

Au plan de la transposition stricto sensu, la disposition relative à l'accès au travail des demandeurs d'asile constitue une règle positive, pour autant toutefois que la procédure dépasse le délai de une année. L'attribution de l'ATA pour toute la durée de la procédure constitue également un point positif, sans toutefois que cette modification ait été présentée comme une transposition de la directive.

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?[410]

Les faiblesses :
- Le nombre limité de places en centre d'accueil
- la situation des personnes sous couvert d'une procédure Dublin pour lesquelles l'accès aux allocations ou aux soins de santé est parfois refusé (notamment en pratique) à défaut de disposer d'une APS ;
- les victimes de torture qui ne bénéficient d'aucune prise en charge particulière ;
- l'éducation des enfants dans les centres fermés qui est inexistante
- l'allocation d'insertion qui été très faible, donc insuffisante, à voir si l'ATA sera augmentée
- l'accès au marché du travail qui est très tardif

Aspects positifs :
- le système général d'accueil des demandeurs d'asile en France semble correct si l'on prend notamment en compte le nombre très importants de demandes déposées (nombre de demande le plus important en Europe, voir raport OFPRA 2005)
- l'accès aux soins de santé qui sont au-delà du système requis par la directive

[410] To be answered with the help of UNHCR local office competent for your Member State or on the basis of the answers of NGOs and accommodation centres to the practical questionnaire.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States[411]

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answers.

Deux arrêtés du 8 juin 2006 mettent en place une expérimentation de la régionalisation de l'admission au séjour des demandeurs d'asile dans les régions Bretagne et Haute-Normandie.
Le préfet du département d'Ille-et-Vilaine est désormais, à titre expérimental et pour une période de six mois prorogeable, compétent pour examiner l'ensemble des demandes d'admission au séjour formulées par les demandeurs d'asile en région Bretagne (Ille-et-Vilaine, Côtes-d'Armor, Finistère et Morbihan). En région Haute-Normandie, le préfet de Seine-Maritime est compétent dans les mêmes termes pour les demandes formulées dans son département et celui de l'Eure.
Le préfet compétent examine les pièces produites par l'étranger à l'appui de sa demande et lui délivre autorisation provisoire de séjour et récépissé. Il peut refuser l'admission au séjour si le demandeur entre dans les cas prévus à l'article L. 741-4 du code de l'entrée et du séjour des étrangers et du droit d'asile (autre État responsable, pays d'origine sûr, ordre public ou recours abusif aux procédures d'asile).
L'expérimentation n'est pas étendue aux nouvelles demandes d'étrangers ayant fait l'objet de refus définitifs ni aux demandes de renouvellement du récépissé suite à l'expiration de la validité de l'autorisation provisoire de séjour, chaque préfet de département restant compétent territorialement.

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

The German Parliament has recently adopted the Act on Transposition of several EU-Directives on immigration and asylum law. This act includes, inter alia, amendments to the Asylum Procedure Act (Asylverfahrensgesetz). Since the Federal Ministry of the Interior did not see a need for fundamental changes in German Asylum legislation in order to meet the directive's requirements, they prepared a draft which included only minor amendments to the Asylum Procedure Act[413]. The draft provided for an additional paragraph to Sec. 47 asylum procedure

[412] This report has been elaborated and drafted by the aforementioned member of the German research group and Prof. Dr. Kay Hailbronner. Please contact the indicated researcher who has worked on this report in case of any requests during the study.

[413] See Bundestagsdrucksache (Parliamentary Document) 16/5065

code, implementing Art. 5 of the Directive, and for an amendment of Sec. 63 para 1 Asylum Procedure Act stating the obligation to provide the asylum seeker with the necessary documents within three days after lodging his asylum claim (Art. 6 para 1 Directive). The relevant parts of the bill have not been modified in the parliamentary discussions. The act has entered into force on 28 August 2007. Provisions of major importance for the Directive are included in the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. This is, however, not modified by a formal act of transposition but is considered sufficient to meet the Directive's requirements.

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

There are no other norms of formal transposition, see above. Texts of the relevant legislation are included.

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

The asylum legislation is part of the so-called concurrent legislation (konkurrierende Gesetzgebung) in terms of Art. 72, 74 para. 1 No. 6 Grundgesetz (German Constitution), i.e. the Länder are competent for legislation as long and as far as the Federal State has not made use of its legislative competence. Since there is a comprehensive legislation on asylum procedure and reception conditions on the Federal level, the Federal level is exclusively competent for amendments to the existent legislation as well. It is however within the federal states' responsibility to set up and run the reception centres, to provide other accommodation facilities and to organise the distribution of material reception conditions. Thus, it is on them to implement the directive into practice.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

The already mentioned amendments only concern the legislation on the federal level. There are no administrative instructions on the implementation of the Asylum Procedure Act or the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

The above mentioned amendments to the Asylum Procedure Act do not just copy the Directive's wording but create autonomous legal provisions. Since most of the concerned provisions are pre-existing law, the question is not of much relevance for the biggest part of German legislation on reception conditions. Whether the existing legislation and practice and in particular the recently adopted amendments to the asylum legislation meet the directive's requirements will be discussed in the subsequent parts.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

The above mentioned amendments concern only details of the directive. Further amendments are not envisaged at the moment. The question whether further texts are necessary for effective implementation depends upon a comprehensive in-depth examination of the German legislation on all levels of the federal state, which is beyond the scope of this report.

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

According to the Federal Ministry of the Interior no such in-depth preparatory study has been carried out.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

To our knowledge, only one article has been published on the directive and its future transposition into German law. It is "Mindestaufnahmebedingungen für Asylbewerber: Nivellierung auf geringem Niveau oder Fortschritt für eine gemeinsame Asylpolitik in Europa?" by Harald Meyer, published in Neue Zeitschrift für Verwaltungsrecht (New Journal on Administrative Law) No. 5 of 2004, pp. 547 – 551.
In the Zeitschrift für Ausländerrecht und Ausländerpolitik (No 5-6 of 2006, pp. 161 – 167), Hans-Georg Maaßen published an article on the draft bill of the Federal Ministry of the Interior. However, this article mentions the Directive only briefly.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?
Since the existing legislation has not been largely revised to transpose the directive due to the fact that the German government considers the existing legislation by and large already sufficient to meet the directive's requirements, there are only very few decisions of jurisprudence which refer to the directive. The only relevant decisions deal with Sec. 2 para 1 of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. This provision stipulates that an asylum seeker does not become eligible to regular (higher) social benefits under the Social Code if he extends his stay in Germany by misusing his rights under the Asylum Procedure Act. To interpret the term "by misusing rights" (rechtsmissbräuchlich) the Bavarian Social Court of Appeal (Bayerisches Landessozialgericht) referred to Art. 16 of the directive. The court pointed out that a misuse may be taken for granted if the asylum seeker acted in a way described in Art. 16 para 1 or 2 of the directive[414].
Some other Social Courts of Appeal even concluded from Art. 16 that asylum seekers may only be barred from regular social benefits for more than three years if they acted in a way as described in Art. 16 para 1 or 2[415]. The Federal Social Court, however, found that Art. 16 of the Directive is not relevant for the interpretation of Sec. 2 para 1 of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. It pointed out that the denial of a higher level of social benefits is not a case of Art. 16 which concerns only the shortening or withdrawal of benefits[416].

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

Reception conditions for asylum seekers are regulated in the Asylum Procedure Act (Asylverfahrensgesetz)[417] and in the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act (Asylbewerberleistungsgesetz)[418]. The latter act regulates what kind of reception conditions, particularly social benefits, are granted to asylum seekers. The Asylum Procedure Act deals inter alia with procedures and competences with regard to reception conditions. Both acts are federal legislation. However, the administration of the asylum procedure is divided between the federal level and the Länder. The Länder are responsible for setting up and running the reception centres. They also decide upon how to spread the asylum seekers within the particular Land and are competent for the implementation of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. This includes the organisation of the necessary administration.
However, it is within the competence of the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (Bundesamt für Migration und Flüchtlinge) to handle the asylum seeker's application. Its decisions are binding in all matters related to the formal recognition of asylum status.
An alien applying for asylum is allowed to stay on the federal territory while his application is pending. His so-called Aufenthaltsgestattung (permission to stay, see Sec. 55 Asylum Procedure Act) is restricted to the district of the competent aliens office. In the first weeks after he has lodged his application, the asylum seeker is obliged to live in a reception centre. This obligation ends after three months or earlier if the asylum seeker is sent to another housing facility or if the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees decides on the application. An asylum seeker whose obligation to live in a reception centre has ended is usually obliged to take up residence in a particular accommodation centre.
Accommodation centres are usually shared accommodation facilities, such as hostels, converted apartment or office buildings, or provisional camps. Sometimes accommodation centres are in the same complex as the reception centre, but unlike the latter accommodation centres should be suitable for long-term accommodation.
As long as the asylum seeker is obliged to live in the reception centre, he is not allowed to take up an employment. Afterwards, he may be admitted to the labour market under the preconditions laid down in Sec. 61 Asylum Procedure Act, cf. Question 28 for details.

[417] AsylVfG as announced on 27 July 1993, Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1361, last amendment through act of 19 August 2007, Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970.
[418] AsylbLG as announced on 5 August 1997, Federal Law Gazette I, p. 2022, last amendment through act of 19 August 2007, Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970.

The Asylum Seekers Benefits Act came into force on 1 January 1993 and excluded asylum seekers from the scope of application of the Social Code. Instead it provides for lower social benefits for aliens whose stay in Germany is only temporary. These basic social benefits shall only meet the asylum seekers vital needs and are granted to a large extent in kind or in vouchers. This includes basic supply with food, accommodation, heating, clothing etc. Additionally, a limited amount of money is granted. Health care is granted for the treatment of acute illness and pain. Other benefits may be granted if they are necessary in an individual case to ensure the asylum seeker's subsistence or health. After four years of having received benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act in Germany, asylum seekers are entitled to receive regular social benefits according to the Social Code largely in the same way as German citizens. Exceptions apply, however, if the asylum seeker extended his stay by misusing his rights. This waiting period used to be three years and has been extended to four years by the latest amendment to the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act[419].
All social benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act are financed through the federal states' budgets, whereas regular social benefits are financed by the municipalities.

Q.11. Q11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

A special type of reception conditions applies to asylum seekers who arrive in Germany by air if they come from a safe country of origin or cannot identify themselves with a valid passport or passport substitute, cf. Sec 18a Asylum Procedure Act. In these cases the asylum procedure will be handled before the asylum seeker is permitted to enter the federal territory provided that adequate accommodation in the airport premises is available. Material reception conditions are nevertheless to be granted according to the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.
Apart from this group, the reception conditions as described above remain unchanged during the asylum procedure. Only in the first weeks after application asylum seekers are obliged to live in reception centres (Aufnahmeeinrichtungen), see Question 10 above. Reception conditions end if the asylum seeker is formally recognised as refugee by the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees or if a court commits the Federal Office to do so, even if those decisions can be appealed, cf. Sec. 1 para 3 of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.

[419] see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 2007..

As mentioned above, asylum seekers become eligible to regular social benefits after four years of receiving benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

Answers are valid for all stages of asylum procedure from application until final rejection or approval. Where different rules apply, it will be indicated in the following sections.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

In 1993, the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act (Asylbewerberleistungsgesetz) has entered into force which provides for a general priority of benefits granted in kind. This includes food, housing, heating, clothes, health care, personal hygiene and household goods for daily use and consumption. If clothes cannot be provided in kind, vouchers may be granted. Household goods may be given on loan, see Sec. 3 para 1 of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.
Additionally, asylum seekers older than fourteen receive 40.90 Euro per month, children up to fourteen receive 20.45 Euro for personal needs (pocket money).
Asylum seekers who do not live in a reception centre anymore may receive benefits in vouchers or in money if this is necessary without prejudice to the general priority of benefits in kind[420]. Vouchers or money may be granted up to an amount of 184.07 Euro for the head of the household, for children younger than seven years in the same household up to 112.48 Euro and for older persons in the same household 158.50 Euro. These amounts do not include the necessary costs for housing, heating and household effects. The benefits in money for personal needs (pocket money) are granted in addition. Sometimes, asylum seekers receive a smartcard which enables them to buy their personal needs in selected shops[421].

[420] E.g. in most federal states vouchers or money are granted for food, cf. Practice Report Berlin, Q.1.C. According to Caritas, only in Bavaria and parts of Baden-Wuerttemberg food packages are handed out, cf. Practice Report Caritas Q.1.C.

Asylum seekers who received benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act for 48 months become eligible to the general system of social aid according to the Social Code, vol. 12 and vol. 2.

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

The benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act are considerably lower than the ones granted as general social aid which is currently 345 Euro for the head of the household[422] and 276 Euro for other persons older than 13 years living in the same household[423]. This does not include additional benefits for housing and heating.
The social aid benefits are considered as the minimum which is necessary to ensure the recipient's subsistence[424]. The Federal Government recently published its report on minimum needs of adults and children in 2008[425]. This report explains that an adult single needs at least 7,140 Euro per year (595 Euro per month) for his subsistence (including housing, heating, water and electric energy).
However, this applies to people who live in Germany on a permanent basis and have therefore different needs. Hence, it is considered legitimate to grant lower benefits to aliens who live in Germany only on a temporary basis. An adult head of household receives benefits which are worth 224.97 Euro per month. Benefits granted under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act are aimed to ensure only the recipient's very basic subsistence. It is, however, not considered necessary by the legislator to ensure a living standard equivalent to the prevalent basic standard in Germany or to enable the recipient to integrate himself socially into the domestic society[426]. This perspective is widely shared in the administrative courts' jurisdiction[427], but widely criticised by several NGOs working with refugees[428]. They have continuously objected that the lower allowances are paid over a period of then three years before asylum seekers were entitled to regular social benefits, which has been considered too long. This concern obviously aggravates with the recently adopted amendment to the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act which provides for a waiting period of now 48 months[429]. The Federal Government holds, however, that asylum seekers normally do not need the same level of social benefits unless the factual situation is such that a certain social integration took place.

It should also be mentioned that the amount of social benefits for asylum seekers has not been raised since 1993[430].
UNHCR points out that chronic diseases may be treated insufficiently because the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act only guarantees the treatment of acute illnesses[431].
The way of accommodation in the facilities may lead to a certain attitude of passiveness and disheartenment due to the complete dependency on social benefits and the lack of meaningful activity[432]. This is, however, a general problem which cannot be related to the directive's requirements with regard to health in Art. 13 para 2.
The Social Court of Appeal in the Land North Rhine-Westphalia ruled that the lower Social Benefits according to the Act on Social Benefits for Asylum Seekers are always sufficient to meet the Directive's requirements irrespective of the duration of the asylum seeker's stay[433].
The Federal States' Ministries of Interior consider the Benefits granted to asylum seekers as sufficient to meet the Directive's requirements.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. Q 13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

Sec. 13 para 1 and 2 Asylum Procedure Act stipulates that each request for protection from political persecution is regarded as an application for asylum

Neue Zeitschrift für Verwaltungsrecht – Beilage (NVwZ-Beil.) 1997, p. 95; Administrative Court of Appeal of North Rhine-Westphalia, Decision of 28 May 2002, ZFSH/SGB 2002, p. 620.

[430] The amounts are still listed in Deutsche Mark in Sec. 3 of the Act on Benefits for Asylum Seekers.
[431] This problem is also mentioned by refugee lawyers.
[432] See Practice Report Caritas and also Report of the Jesuit Refugee Service Germany, Answer A.1.
[433] See LSG NW, decision of 27 April 2006, file-no. L 20 B 10/06 AY ER, of 23 January 2006, file-no. L 20 B 15/05 AY ER and of 21 December 2005, file-no. L 20 (9) B 37/95 SO ER.

according to Art. 16a of the Grundgesetz and as a request for refugee status in terms of the Geneva Convention unless explicitly stated otherwise.

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

The Asylum Seekers Benefits Act is applicable not only to asylum seekers but also to aliens holding a temporary residence permit for temporary protection purposes in terms of Directive 2001/55/EC (Sec. 24 Residence Act), for humanitarian or international law reasons (Sec. 23 para 1 Residence Act) or for other exceptional reasons (Sec. 25 para. 4 and 5 Residence Act). The same applies to aliens with tolerated status (Sec. 60a Residence Act), aliens whose obligation to leave is executable and to family members of aliens who are entitled to benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act, see Sec. 1 para 1 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. According to the newly adopted amendments to the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act, persons holding a temporary residence permit for victims of trafficking in terms of Directive 2004/81/EC are eligible to benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act as well[434].

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

There are no provisions on diplomatic or territorial asylum in German law.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Reception conditions, i.e. benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act, are available to all aliens holding a permission to stay (Aufenthaltsgestattung) according to Sec. 55 Asylum Procedure Act which is automatically granted as soon as the asylum seeker asks for asylum. If the asylum seeker entered Germany illegally, he is permitted to stay as soon as he lodges an asylum application with the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) and is thenceforth entitled to reception conditions.

[434] see act of 19 August 2007, Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 2007.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

Reception conditions in terms of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act end with the last day of the month within which the asylum seeker is recognised as refugee by the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees[435]. Reception conditions end, too, if the asylum seeker leaves the Federal Republic of Germany or if the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act becomes inapplicable for other reasons, cf. Sec. 1 para. 3 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.
However, reception conditions do not end automatically if the application for asylum is rejected since the scope of application of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act is relatively broad and also includes aliens who are obliged to leave the federal territory[436].

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Successive applications will only result in a further asylum procedure and the respective application of rules on accommodation etc. if certain conditions are met (new facts etc.).

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Until recently, federal law did not stipulate an obligation for the federal states to inform the asylum seekers comprehensively about their rights and duties under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. However, in most cases such information was provided by the management of the accommodation facilities or by NGOs active in counselling. A comprehensive illustration of this practice cannot be given since it is in no way centrally organised and may vary considerably between different centres. Statements of UNHCR and NGOs indicate that the current practice might in many cases be unsatisfactory.
With the recent amendments to the asylum legislation, Sec. 47 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act now includes the obligation to hand out information about rights and duties under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act[437]. The federal states are currently preparing the necessary handouts[438].

[435] Or within which a court commits the Federal Office to do so, even if those decisions can be appealed.
[436] See Q.13.B.
[437] see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 1998.
[438] Cf. Practice Report Berlin, Q.2.A.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Sec. 47 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act stipulates that information should be handed out preferably in writing. This means that written information is not necessary if it must be assumed that the asylum seeker will not be able to understand it due to lacking skills in reading. In these cases information must be given orally.

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

An exhaustive answer is not possible due to the competence of the Federal States, see above. Sec. 47 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act stipulates that information must be given in a language of which can reasonably be assumed that the asylum seeker is able to understand it[439].

According to the Ministry of the Interior of Mecklenburg-Western Pomerania, the relevant information is available in the following languages:

- Arabic
- Armenian
- English
- Farsi
- French
- Kurdish
- Punjabi
- Russian
- Serbo-Croatian
- Spanish
- Tamil and Hindi
- Thai
- Turkish
- Vietnamese

The Ministry of the Interior of Lower Saxony says it is currently preparing written information on reception conditions in English, French and the prevalent languages of the countries of origin. Earlier, the information was given only orally.
In Saxony, information is normally provided only in German, only in "exceptional situations" in the national language of the asylum seeker. This practice will have to change with the recently introduced amendments to the Asylum Procedure Act.

In Baden-Württemberg information brochures for asylum seekers are available in the following languages:

- Arabic
- Albanian
- Chinese
- English
- Farsi
- French
- Punjabi
- Russian
- Serbo-Croatian
- Tamil
- Turkish
- Urdu
- Vietnamese

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Sec. 47 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act includes a deadline of fifteen days[440]. An answer on the practical implementation is not yet possible, see above.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

Sec. 47 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act includes the obligation to hand out information about possibilities to get legal assistance and about organisations which may counsel the asylum seeker with regard to accommodation and health care[441].
Until recently, federal law did not include an obligation for the federal states to hand out such a list. However, this does not hinder them to do so but to our knowledge such an official list was not set up in any federal state in the past. It remains to be seen how well the federal states cope with their new obligation under federal law.

[441] see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 1998.

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Sec. 47 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act stipulates that information should be handed out preferably in writing. This means that written information is not necessary if it must be assumed that the asylum seeker will not be able to understand it due to lacking skills in reading. In these cases information must be given orally[442].
For the current situation as regards practical implementation an exhaustive answer is not yet possible, see above.

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

An exhaustive answer is not yet possible, see above. Sec. 47 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act stipulates that information must be given in a language of which can reasonably be assumed that the asylum seeker is able to understand it[443].

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

It is impossible to give an exact number. The most important charity organisations are Arbeiterwohlfahrt (Workers Welfare Organisation), Rotes Kreuz (Red Cross), Caritas (Catholic Charity Organisation), Diakonie (Protestant Charity Organisation) and local refugee councils. Several other organisations provide counselling, among them amnesty international, Pro Asyl and other, often regional groups and initiatives. Which organisations are in fact most active depends to a large extent on the particular region, if it is urban or rather rural, which religious confession is predominant etc.

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

The asylum seeker receives a certificate proving his status when he lodges his asylum application, see Sec. 63 para 1 Asylum Procedure Act. This certificate includes a photo and the asylum seeker's personal dates[444]. As long as the application is pending, the certificate serves as identification.

[442] See Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 1998 and Bundestagsdrucksache (Parliamentary Document) 16/5065, p. 428.
[443] see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 1998.
[444] i.e. name, surname, nationality, place and date of birth, residence in Germany.

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

No such certificate is issued if the asylum seeker already holds a residence permit in Germany.
Asylum seekers who arrive by air and who are subject to the pre-screening procedure in the airport (see Sec 18a Asylum Procedure Act) do not receive a certificate either, since this procedure is carried out prior to entering the federal territory and a documentation is therefore obsolete, cf. Art 6 (2).

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

As long as the asylum seeker is obliged to live in a reception centre, the certificate's validity is limited to a maximum of three months, afterwards to a maximum of six months. It must be renewed because it replaces the asylum seeker's passport for identification purposes, cf. Sec. 63 para. 2 Asylum Procedure Act.

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[445]?

Until recently Sec. 63 para 1 Asylum Procedure Act did not contain a deadline for the delivery of the certificate, however, the amended version of Sec. 63 para 1 Asylum Procedure Act provides for a deadline of three days after the application is lodged[446].

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

A regulation on residence (Sec. 13 para. 1 No 2 Aufenthaltsverordnung) provides for issuance of travel documents in case of emergency. The Asylum Procedure Act does not exclude travel with the permission of aliens authorities completely, however, it is limited to cases of extreme hardship.

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

[446] see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 1999.

All aliens whose stay in Germany is not only on a short-term basis are registered in the Central Aliens Register (Ausländerzentralregister - AZR). Also registered in the AZR are aliens who have lodged an asylum application. There is no separate register exclusively for asylum seekers.

The registration includes the aliens' personal dates[447] plus differing spelling of names, other names, former names, alias personalities, civil state, information on identification documents, last place of residence in country of origin, voluntary made statements about religious belief, nationalities of spouse or same-sex partner. Additionally it is registered: Information on legal status of residence, decisions on admission to the labour market, recognition as refugee (Geneva Convention) in another country, decision with regard to the alien's legal status in Germany and finally the authority which provided the information. The recently adopted amendments to the Central Aliens Register Act provide for registering photos as well[448].
The AZR is an electronic database.

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers :

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

The asylum seeker's permission to stay (Aufenthaltsgestattung) is generally restricted to the district of the competent aliens authority. Only in urgent cases, the asylum seeker will be granted permission to leave this district temporarily.
Leaving the designated district without prior authorisation (see Q.20.E) is considered an administrative offence and is subject to fines of a maximum amount of 2,500 Euro (cf. Sec. 86 Asylum Procedure Act). Repeated infringements are prosecuted as criminal actions under Sec. 85 No. 2 Asylum Procedure Act.

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

During the asylum procedure, the asylum seeker is not free to choose his place of residence, but will be allocated first to a reception centre and later on to an accommodation centre. Allocation is done by quota, so there is no claim for the asylum seekers to be allocated to a specific place. Family units (spouses and minor children) shall be respected, cf. Sec. 50 para. 4 Asylum Procedure Act.

[447] i.e. name, surname, name of birth, spelling of names under German law, nationality, place, district, and date of birth, sex.
[448] see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 2001.

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

Since each asylum seeker is primarily to be accommodated in the reception centre where he filed his asylum application, he may influence his place of residence to a certain extent. Only if the accommodation capacities are exhausted in the respective reception centre or if the asylum application cannot be handled by the competent branch of the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees[449], the asylum seeker will be allocated to another reception centre, cf. Sec. 46 para 1 and 2 Asylum Procedure Act.
When the obligation to live in a reception centre ends, asylum seekers are allocated within the respective federal state following schemes that are developed by the local authorities. The main goal of these restrictions to free movement and choice of residence is to speed up the asylum procedure and to ensure a fair burden sharing among the federal states and municipalities which bear the costs for reception conditions.

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)

At the moment, no such situation occurs due to dropping numbers of asylum applications. If these numbers should rise again and the capacity of accommodation facilities proves to be insufficient, it is within the federal states' competence and responsibility to allocate asylum seekers to other places. Since it is upon the individual federal state to regulate the allocation, no general statement can be made. However, in the past authorities often rented hotels or set up provisional container constructions to house asylum seekers when the regular capacities were exhausted.

[449] The different branches of the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees are usually not handling applications from all countries of origin.

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

In urgent cases the asylum seeker may be granted permission to leave the assigned district temporarily. As long as he is obliged to live in a reception centre such a permission may only be granted if the trip is unavoidable. This applies in particular to visits to the asylum seeker's attorney, to UNHCR and to organisations which take care of refugees. After the obligation to live in the reception centre has ended, permission may be granted under less strict conditions. If the asylum seeker has to appear in person before a court or at public authorities, he does not need a permission, but has to announce his appointment.
All decisions on leaving the assigned district may be challenged in the courts. However, the possibility to file an objection with the superior authority is excluded.

Q.21. Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Reception conditions must not be completely withdrawn while the asylum procedure is pending. However, benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act are reduced to the very minimum if the asylum seeker refuses to do some work (in particular within the accommodation facility) without good reasons, cf. Sec. 5 para 4 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.
After rejection, reception conditions may be subject to reduction if the asylum seeker is considered to have entered Germany for the mere purpose of receiving social benefits or if he cannot be deported for reasons within his responsibility, cf. Sec. 1 a Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. A complete withdrawal is not possible and the remaining minimum always includes emergency health care.

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice?

Illegal immigrants and other aliens whose obligation to leave is enforceable and who do not file an asylum application are nevertheless eligible to reception conditions. However, in these cases reception conditions may be subject to reduction or withdrawal if the respective alien is considered to have entered Germany for the mere purpose of receiving social benefits or if he cannot be deported for reasons within his responsibility, cf. Sec. 1 a Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. A complete withdrawal is not possible.

The mere fact that an asylum application was lodged unreasonably late is not a reason to refuse reception conditions.

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

The decision on reduction of reception conditions is made by the competent aliens authority and follows the rules of the Administrative Procedures Act (Verwaltungsverfahrensgesetz). The alien must be given opportunity to express his opinion on the intended reduction. The authority has to give reasons for its decision to enable the alien to file a reasoned objection. The objection will be handled by a superior authority. Its decision on the objection may be challenged in the courts.

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the document attached to our sending)?

A complete withdrawal of reception conditions is not possible in Germany. In any case, the respective alien will be provided with housing, food and other allowances which are absolutely necessary. Emergency healthcare is always guaranteed.
Statement 14/03 is respected.

There are already several judgements on reduction decisions[450] since the respective provision has been adopted in 1998. The jurisprudence deals with preconditions for reduction of benefits and the burden of proof. Since most decisions cannot be related to asylum seekers in terms of the directive, the details of the mentioned judgements are not described.

Q.22. Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

[450] Cf. e.g. Social Court of Appeal of Baden-Wuerttemberg, Decision of 25 August 2005, published in Fürsorgerechtliche Entscheidungen der Verwaltungs- und Sozialgerichte (FEVS) 57, pp. 100 – 102; Administrative Court of Bremen, Decision of 28 July 2005 published in Sozialhilfe- und Asylbewerberleistungsrecht (SAR) 2005, pp. 117 – 120; Administrative Court of Appeal of Hesse, Decision of 4 March 2003, published in Sozialhilfe- und Asylbewerberleistungsrecht (SAR) 2003, pp. 119 – 120.

All decisions regarding the denial of social benefits can be appealed according to the general rules of administrative procedure.
The restriction to stay in one specific district cannot be challenged in the courts since it is implied in the permission to stay (Aufenthaltsgestattung). Asylum seekers are not entitled to a residence permit without geographical limitation, nor is there any right to being sent to one specific reception centre. However, the administrative decision to which district the asylum seeker is allocated after his obligation to live in a reception centre has ended is subject to judicial appeal. The asylum seeker has to file this appeal within two weeks after the decision has been officially announced to him. The reasons for the appeal have to be delivered within one month, cf. Sec. 74 Asylum Procedure Act. The appeal has no suspensive effect, cf. Sec. 75 Asylum Procedure Act.

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

The asylum seeker may mandate an attorney for legal assistance. According to the Act on Legal Assistance only lawyers are allowed to give legal assistance. If the asylum seeker is lacking the necessary financial means, he is entitled to financial support to consult a lawyer (Beratungshilfe) and to pay the lawyer for handling the appeal (Prozesskostenhilfe). However, the latter will only be granted if there is a reasonable chance of success. The decision on financial support for legal assistance is within the competence of the local court.

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

No appeal decisions are known.

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

Like many aspects in the asylum procedure, this may vary between the federal states. Such a system of complaint need not be installed with respect to the Asylum Procedure Act, however, the federal states are free to do so. According to UNHCR, such a system exists in Berlin[451]. In Bavaria, however, there is no such system. Asylum seeker can of course address the facilities' management or an NGO. However, this does not guarantee that they will receive a satisfactory reaction. The success of any complaint depends to a great extent on the addressee's goodwill.

If no such system of direct complains exists, the asylum seeker may always address to the superior authority and complain about the an officer's individual attitude or about an individual decision he considers inadequate or unlawful. Such a complaint does not have any legal binding for the superior authority but may initiate a monitoring process as described under Question 39.
If the management of accommodation centres is contracted out, the competent authorities are responsible to control the private company's (or NGO's) compliance with the agreement[452].

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

Family members in terms of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act are the asylum seeker's spouse or partner in a registered same-sex relationship, and his under age children. As a rule, family members are accommodated together. However, in singular cases parents may be allocated to different reception centres if they did not file their asylum applications together. These cases are rare and rather the consequence of lacking information.
Under age children are in any case entitled to be accommodated with their parent(s), cf. Sec. 47 para 2 Asylum Procedure Act.
Children may, however, be separated from their parents in cases of violence or abuse. They may be accommodated with other relatives or in a children's home in order to protect them from ill-treatment. Separate accommodation may also take place if the parents are not able to care for their child.

Q.24. Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

According to Sec. 44 para 2 Asylum Procedure Act it is within the Länder's responsibility to provide for the required number of [451] Also mentioned in Practice Report Berlin, Q.7.B.

[452] Cf. Practice Report Berlin, Q.19.B.

accommodation places in reception centres. How the Länder fulfil their duty to make a sufficient number of places available is left to their discretion. Most Länder provide only one central reception centre, only Lower Saxony and Bavaria maintain two reception centres each.
With regard to other accommodation facilities the Länder are even more flexible. Usually they tend to spread the asylum seekers by quota within their territory. The local authorities provide for suitable premises which can be municipality flats, converted office or school buildings or different premises available. Often provisional premises like barracks or container constructions are used. There are neither common standards for reception centres nor for other accommodation facilities in Germany which leads to the fact that the standards may differ considerably among the different Länder and even within the same Land.

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers? Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

According to official information of the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees there were 10,381 places in reception centres available on March 31, 2007, of which 4,389 were not used. This number does not contain places in other accommodation facilities than reception centres since only the capacity of reception centres must be reported to the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees. Other accommodation facilities are run by the federal states autonomously. They do not house exclusively asylum seekers but often also other foreigners without residence title. E.g. in the Bavarian district of Oberbayern (Upper Bavaria) 3,984 aliens are presently living in accommodation facilities, but only about one third of them are asylum seekers[453]. The same relation exists in the whole federal state of Bavaria: Of 12,709 persons living in accommodation facilities only 4,070 are asylum seekers[454].

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?

This number was always sufficient in the last years since there has been a constant decline in asylum applications.

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

In such cases the period of accommodation in the reception centres may be shortened in order to allocate the asylum seekers sooner to smaller [453] Cf. Practical Questionnaire Caritas, Question 6 A.

[454] Date of December 31, 2005, cf. Practical Questionnaire, Central Reception Centre Zirndorf, Bavaria.

accommodation facilities. Such facilities are more easy to set up by renting suitable premises, converting public buildings into accommodation facilities or setting up provisional premises like container structures.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

As already stated above, it is necessary to distinguish between reception centres for the initial accommodation of asylum seekers and other accommodation facilities which have to be suitable to accommodate asylum seekers for a longer period of time after their obligation to live in a reception centre has ended.

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

The obligation to live in the reception centre ends after a maximum period of three months. However, this does not mean that asylum seekers are free to choose their place of residence afterwards. They are rather allocated to other, normally smaller accommodation facilities.

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

Accommodation facilities usually adopt their own internal regulations autonomously or such an internal regulation is given by the municipality or the state district for several facilities in their area of responsibility.

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision*?* Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

A comprehensive answer is not possible since there might be hundreds of different regulations in accommodation facilities. Two examples are attached to this report. They both include the possibility of sanctions in case of breach of internal rules. The most important sanction is to ban the respective asylum seeker from the accommodation centre and to allocate him to another facility. Practice Reports indicate that the forced allocation to another accommodation facility which is of lower standard or rather isolated sometimes serves as a sanction[455]. The Ministry of Interior of Thuringia mentions that asylum seekers may be assigned to temporary work obligations within the facility (e.g. courtyard sweeping, cleaning of shared rooms etc.) as a consequence of infringements.
Practice Reports of NGOs suggest that additional and sometimes subtle sanctions without a specific legal basis other than internal house rules are imposed in individual accommodation facilities[456]. However, it is impossible to assess within the scope of this study how frequent such sanctions occur and of what nature they are.
Federal law includes the provision that asylum seekers lose part of their benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act if they decline a working opportunity offered to them, cf. Question 25.E for details.

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

To our knowledge, there is no reception centre in which asylum seekers are involved in management. This is, however, the case in some accommodation facilities. We know that the accommodation centres in Parchim (Mecklenburg – Western Pomerania) and Salzwedel (Saxony-Anhalt) have established local advisory boards in which the occupants are represented. This might also be the case in other accommodation facilities. A comprehensive answer is, however, not possible since such advisory boards are established on the basis of internal regulations which are set by the respective management or municipality.

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

[455] Cf. Practice Report of Attorney Detlef Otto, Answer A.3, report of Pro Asyl, Answer A.3 and Report of the Jesuit Refugee Service Germany, Answer A.3.
[456] Cf. Practice Report of Pro Asyl, Answer A.3.

Generally asylum seekers do not have access to the labour market. After one year of residence in Germany with a stay permit, an asylum seeker may be permitted to take up an employment, cf. Question 28.
Independently of that, asylum seekers shall be offered work opportunities in the reception centres and similar facilities. These work opportunities cannot be regarded as part of the labour market since asylum seekers must not compete with regular workers and thus may only be offered work which would not be done otherwise.
Asylum seekers who are able to work and not employed otherwise are obliged to accept such a work offer. If an asylum seeker refuses to take up work unfoundedly, he loses his eligibility to social benefits which will be reduced to the very minimum, cf. Sec 5 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.

The work is paid with 1.05 Euro per hour.

The work opportunities may be regarded as contributions to the management of the centre in a wider sense. This may comprise gardening on the grounds of the premises, cleaning of shared facilities etc.

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

The asylum seeker's right to address the UNHCR is guaranteed in Sec. 9 para. 1 Asylum Procedure Act. There are, however, no statutory rules on communication with legal advisers or NGOs. Since there are no closed centres (except the transit accommodation facilities at the airports), asylum seekers may visit legal advisers or NGOs in their offices. If these offices are outside the aliens authorities district, the asylum seeker will be granted a permission to leave the district for meeting them, cf. Sec. 57 para 2 and Sec. 58 para. 2 Asylum Procedure Act.

Asylum seekers confined to airport transit zones must be given opportunity to contact a lawyer, cf. Sec. 18a para. 1 Asylum Procedure Act.

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

There are no statutory rules on access for NGOs and legal advisers on the Federal level, whereas access is guaranteed for UNHCR representatives in Sec. 9 para. 1 Asylum Procedure Act in its recently amended version[457]. Permissions to enter are usually granted by the individual centre or accommodation facility. According to the Practice Reports there are generally no restrictions for UNHCR and legal advisers to enter the accommodation centres. UNHCR reports difficulties for some NGOs to get permission to enter some accommodation centres. The same observation is made by Pro Asyl[458]. Since the decision on access is within the responsibility of the reception centre's or accommodation facility's management, no general statement can be made but the Practice Reports do not indicate that any serious conflicts occur.

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

Since the decision on access is within the responsibility of the reception centre's or accommodation facility's management, no general statement can be made. Usually internal rules of the respective accommodation facility stipulate that access of people not living in the centre may be denied for security reasons.

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

Asylum seekers who are obliged to live in a reception centre or a shared accommodation facility are subject to a mandatory medical screening, cf. Sec. 62 Asylum Procedure Act. The scope of this screening may vary in the different federal states so no general statement on HIV tests can be made. The screening does include an HIV test in the federal states of Saxony and Bavaria, whereas in Berlin, Thuringia and Lower Saxony no HIV test is carried out. In Mecklenburg-Western Pomerania and Baden-Württemberg, voluntary HIV tests are offered.

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Reception conditions must not be completely withdrawn but may be reduced to the absolute minimum that is necessary for a person to live and preserve his human dignity, cf. Sec. 1a Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. This includes emergency health care and essential treatment of acute illnesses. However, Sec. 1a is not applicable as long as the asylum procedure is not completed and the foreigner obliged to leave the Federal Territory. Sec. 5 para. 4 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act, providing for a complete withdrawal of benefits, has to be interpreted in a way that the above mentioned absolute minimum of benefits is preserved.

[458] Cf. Practice Report, Answer A.4.

Regular health care benefits for asylum seekers include additionally dental prostheses if the treatment cannot be postponed, care for expectant mothers and women in childbed, and preventive medical checkups including necessary vaccinations.
This standard is still lower than that for residents, though, which may lead to difficulties for persons with chronic diseases if these diseases are not considered acute illnesses. The treatment of chronic diseases is usually restricted to pain relieving measures[459].

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?

There is no common practice in all federal states. In some reception centres and accommodation facilities a health service is in attendance. In other cases, asylum seekers have to visit a doctor outside the centre. Since asylum seekers are not part of the general health insurance scheme, they have to apply with the competent authority for a certificate of coverage to receive medical counselling. To avoid this often bureaucratic and time-consuming procedure, many asylum seekers tend to call an emergency doctor instead, who is obliged to help patients who do not have a certificate and may hand in his bill afterwards.

Q.28. Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

One year after application, cf. Sec. 61 para. 2 Asylum Procedures Law

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

A work permit is mandatory to take up an employment, it may be issued by the aliens authority and requires the Federal Agency for Labour's approval.

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

When the asylum seeker has held a permit to stay for at least one year, he may be admitted to the labour market if he has a job offer. The permission may include restrictions in terms of working time, employer, type of work, area, etc. These are the general rules under the Residence Act and no special provisions for asylum seekers.

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

A work permit may be issued if the vacancy cannot be filled with a German national, an EU citizen or a third country national who holds a residence permit which grants him full access to the labour market or who is otherwise privileged with regard to access to the labour market.

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

In Germany, vocational training is generally done on the job, i.e. persons in vocational training are employed and receive at the same theoretical education. Hence, an asylum seeker has access to vocational training only if he is employed. That requires, again, a work permit.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

There have been no changes in national legislation on labour market access due to the Directive.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

If asylum seekers have financial resources or receive an income, they are not entitled to benefits as long and as far as they are able to provide for themselves and their family members who live in the same household. If the respective asylum seeker is accommodated in a reception centre or another public accommodation facility or if he receives other benefits in kind, he is obliged to refund the authorities for these services, cf. Sec. 7 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. Asylum seekers must not reject reception conditions (in particular housing) in these cases but are obliged to live in the accommodation facility which may be rather expensive.

25 per cent of the income an asylum seeker receives from employment is not taken into account when calculating the asylum seekers ability to contribute to reception conditions.
A compensation for non-pecuniary damage must not be treated as income but left to the asylum seeker's disposal[460].

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30.

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

Legal Provisions:

- Pregnant women and women in childbed are entitled to special medical care and midwife support, cf. Sec. 4 para. 2 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act.

- For other persons with special needs additional benefits may be granted if this is necessary in the individual case. Additional benefits may in particular be granted if a child requires more clothes due to growth periods or if parents of a new born child lack basic equipment for the bringing up[461]. Additional benefits may also be granted to ill or disabled people to meet their additional needs in terms of food or clothing, cf. Sec. 6 para. 1 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. This legal provision does not define groups of persons with special needs as the directive does. Benefits are granted on a discretionary basis. The practice of granting or rejecting applications for additional social benefits is thus formed to a large extent by the courts.

- Sec. 6 para. 2 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act mentions persons with special needs, e.g. unaccompanied minors and persons who have suffered torture, rape or other forms of serious psychological, physical or sexual violence, however, this provision does not apply to asylum seekers but only to persons enjoying temporary protection according to Directive 2001/55/EC. This wording is problematic as it may lead to a restrictive interpretation of Sec. 6 para. 1 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act by interpreting para. 2 as an exclusive entitlement of persons under temporary protection whereas victims of violence and other persons with special needs are not entitled to specific treatment or aid.

However, the provision of Sec. 6 must be interpreted as a whole in the light of Directive 2003/9/EC. The correct interpretation of para. 1 leads therefore to the conclusion that persons who have special needs (e.g. because of suffered torture, rape or other kinds of serious violence, or because of their age) have to be granted adequate treatment or aid, which is equivalent to the treatment provided for in para. 2. This interpretation is, however, controversial. As yet no court decisions are known on the interpretation of this provision. Therefore, it remains to be seen if the practical implementation will meet the directive's requirements.

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

Some examples:

Administrative Court of Munich: A multiple disabled child is entitled to visit an integrative kindergarten if this is necessary to meet the child's special needs[462].
Social Court of Frankfurt: Costs for assisted living must be borne by the government if the ending of the assistance would constitute a serious threat to the asylum seeker's health. The mental health must be regarded equivalent to the physical health[463].
Higher Administrative Court of Lower Saxony: Psychological Treatment must be paid in serious cases, however, in the respective case an entitlement was denied as the alleged post-traumatic stress disorder of the asylum seeker was not acknowledged by the court[464].
Administrative Court of Gera: Implantation of hip joint prosthesis is not considered necessary even if the asylum seeker's hip joint is irrevocably destroyed as long as a pain relieving treatment is possible and enables the asylum seeker to live free of pain[465].

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

There is no legal provision which stipulates that a general screening has to take place to identify people with special needs as presupposed by the directive. It is argued that this could lead to an insufficient treatment of persons whose needs are not obvious, e.g. traumatised persons[466]. Persons with special needs are granted the necessary help if they identify themselves or if the responsible authority obtains knowledge through other asylum seekers, social workers or an NGO.

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Even if victims of torture, rape or other forms of serious psychological, physical or sexual violence receive the necessary medical and psychological treatment (see above), Practice Reports indicate that sufficient treatment is not always provided. This applies in particular to psychological treatment for traumatised persons which is carried out to some extent by NGOs. Due to capacity problems, in some cases traumatised persons have to wait quite long before they receive psychological counselling and treatment[467].
Many accommodation facilities are not suitable for wheelchairs. Since the individual allocation of asylum seekers lies within the competence of the federal states, no exhaustive answer is possible to what extent physically handicapped persons are allocated to suitable facilities or accommodated in private housing facilities. Practice Reports indicate deficiencies in some federal states[468].

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

In general, 18 years, cf. Sec. 12 para. 2 Asylum Procedure Act. However, in terms of social benefits asylum seekers from the age of 14 are entitled to the full amount of social benefits. With regard to the asylum procedure, minors of 16 years and older have the legal capacity to act.

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Asylum seekers of school age are offered access to public schools if they stay more than three months in Germany. Most federal states consider it mandatory for asylum seekers at school age to attend school[469]. In some cases, classes are taught not in public schools but directly in the accommodation facilities. We know about such a practice in one accommodation facility in Lower Saxony. This separate schooling applies, however, only for children who lack the necessary language or literacy skills to visit a public school[470]. Mandatory education ends when a minor turns sixteen. Children of asylum seekers generally attend public schools outside the accommodation facilities. However, since education is within the competence of the federal states, no comprehensive answer on the details can be given.

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

Only a cursory view is possible, since legislation varies between the federal states. For children at school age, i.e. 6-16 years, access to school is generally ensured[471]. There may be transitory classes to help the children of asylum seekers to integrate themselves more easily and to learn German. Some problems seem to occur in federal states in which no mandatory education exists for children of asylum seekers[472]. Newly arrived minors of 16 and older are not subject to mandatory education and may therefore face serious difficulties to attend a school. The obligation to visit school starts as soon as the asylum seeker moves from the reception centre to another accommodation facility. According to Sec. 47 para 1 Asylum Procedure Act, the stay in the reception centres is limited to three months. Thus, Art. 10 para 2 of the directive is respected.

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

[469] Except Baden-Württemberg, Hesse and Saarland. Saxony has recently adopted compulsory education for minor asylum seekers at school age.
[470] Cf. Practice Report Pro Asyl, Answer A. 8 and Letter of the Ministry of the Interior of Lower Saxony of 20 April 2007.
[471] Occasional problems occur with regard to transport and costs for materials, cf. Practice Report Pro Asyl, Answer A.8.
[472] Cf. to Practice Report UNHCR, Question 12.A.

This again depends to a high degree on the legislation in the specific federal state and on the commitment of NGOs and other private initiatives, so no general statement can be given. Especially in bigger cities transitory classes are often offered to facilitate the children's transition into the regular school system. However, there is no general provision on the federal level stipulating such courses.

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Sec. 47 para. 2 Asylum Procedure Act stipulates that minor children shall be accommodated with their parents even if they are no asylum seekers themselves. If children do not arrive together with their parents, it may take some time to allocate them to the same place. Cf. Question 23 for further details.

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Minors may receive mental health care and counselling according to Sec. 6 para. 1 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. This provision is not designed exclusively for minors but mentions the special needs of children. Nevertheless, minors as enumerated in Art. 18 para. 2 of the Directive fall under this provision. Sec. 6 para. 1 is not very clear in its wording and gives rise to some questions concerning its scope of application, especially when comparing it with its second paragraph. An interpretation that is conform with the requirements of the Directive is though possible and necessary (cf. Q.30.A).

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

The Youth Welfare Office takes care of the unaccompanied minor and arranges the appointment of a guardian, which is within the competence of the Guardianship Court, see Sec. 42 para. 3 Social Code Vol. 8. After the Guardianship Court has considered the parental custody of the minor as suspended, it will appoint a guardian to represent the minor in general matters. In some federal states, a lawyer is appointed for the representation as far as the asylum procedure is concerned, while the Youth Welfare Office represents the minor in all other affairs[473]. Minors sixteen and older are legally able to run their asylum procedure on their own, however, they are still minors with regard to almost all other aspects of daily life. A guardian is therefore necessary to represent these minors outside the asylum procedure.

As soon as a minor who is younger than sixteen[474] claims asylum at an airport and is initially refused entry (cf. Sec. 18a Asylum Procedure Act), the Border authority is obliged to refer to the guardianship court, which will instantly appoint a guardian for the asylum procedure since the minor is legally not capable to file a valid asylum application on his own.

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

Unaccompanied minors (younger than 16) are to be accommodated in Child and Youth Welfare facilities if no persons who are in custody for the child live in Germany, Sec. 42 para. 3 Social Code Vol. 8. I f relatives live in Germany it is also possible to accommodate the minor with them if the accommodation is considered suitable to meet a child's needs. Asylum seekers of sixteen years and older are usually accommodated in the regular reception centres and other accommodation facilities[475]. The exact policy may vary among the federal states. E.g., Lower Saxony states that minors of 16 and 17 years are accommodated in Youth and Welfare facilities if the competent Youth Welfare Authority finds special needs.

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

Unaccompanied minors are accommodated in a centre of youth welfare. Initially they are subject to a screening procedure carried out by the youth welfare authority. The minors are interviewed by social workers to find out about their background, their current situation and their needs. A translator is involved, if necessary. The interviewer tries to find out details about the minors' families and relatives, be it in Germany, be it in their country of origin or be it in some third country. If the minor delivers any information, the authorities try to identify and localise the mentioned family members or relatives with the help of organisations like International Social Service, Fritz, Gemeinschaftskommentar AsylVfG (Commentary on the Asylum Procedures Act), § 18a, Rn. 40 (Sec. 18a, No. 40).

[474] Minors of sixteen years and older are capable to act in the asylum procedure, cf. Sec. 12 para 1 Asylum Procedures Act.
[475] Erich Peter, Unbegleitete Minderjährige im Lichte des Zuwanderungsgesetzes und der EU-Asylrechtsharmonisierung, in: Zeitschrift für Ausländerrecht (ZAR) 2005, pp. 11 – 18.

familie international Frankfurt e.V., or the search service of German Red Cross. For this end, personal data which is stored in the AZR (Central Aliens Register) may be transmitted to these organisations, Sec. 25 of the Central Aliens Register Act. The organisations have to prove that they are tracing family members for humanitarian or social reasons and are listed at the Aliens Register Authority, Sec. 12 of the Implementation Regulation to the Aliens Register Act. The organisations are not allowed to transmit the data to third persons without the authorisation of the Register Authority and may use the data only for tracing purposes, Sec. 25 para. 3 of the Aliens Register Act.
Due to scarce information given by the minors or the problem to identify themselves, the tracing of relatives often fails.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

There are no exceptional modalities during the period of assessment which shall be carried out as fast as possible. During this period, the concerned persons receive the regular reception conditions. However, in many cases, in particular with regard to handicapped people, people with illnesses, children[476] and elderly people, special needs are quite obvious, so extra benefits may be granted on the spot.

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

Not applicable

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

Not relevant

Q.32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

Asylum seekers who arrive in Germany by air and come from a safe country of origin or cannot identify themselves with a valid passport or passport substitute are subject to a specific airport procedure, see Sec 18 a Asylum Procedure Act. In these cases the asylum procedure will be handled before the asylum seeker is permitted to enter the federal territory provided that adequate accommodation on the airport premises is available or that it is impossible only due to clinical treatment. Material reception conditions are nevertheless to be granted according to the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act. The asylum seeker must be admitted to the federal territory

- if the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees announces that it is unable to make a short-term decision
- if the Federal Office does not decide within two days after the asylum application has been filed

if the court which is handling a motion for an injunction against the Federal Office's decision has not decided within 14 days after the injunction has been applied for.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

Not relevant

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[1] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

It is generally not possible to detain asylum seekers except for reasons of criminal investigations (custody) or a conviction in a criminal court. However, in extreme cases of non-cooperation, coercive detention may be ordered by a court following the general rules of administrative execution. This detention is not a sanction but a means of coercion.
In terms of detention as a penal sanction it must be noted that the Asylum Procedure Act contains provisions as to offences punishable with imprisonment. These asylum-related offences are:

[1] Please specify if article 18 §1 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Member States shall not hold a person in detention for the sole reason that he/she is an applicant for asylum" is or not respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed).

- Non-compliance with allocation orders, Sec. 85 No. 1 in relation with Sec. 50 para. 6 Asylum Procedure Act
- Acting contrary to movement restrictions repeatedly, Sec. 85 No. 2 in relation with Sec. 56 para. 1 or 2 Asylum Procedure Act
- Unauthorised work, Sec. 85 No. 3 in relation with Sec. 60 para. 1 Asylum Procedure Act[477]
- Non-compliance with an executable accommodation order, Sec. 85 No. 4 in relation with Sec. 60 para. 2 Asylum Procedure Act

The maximum period of imprisonment as penal sanction for one of the above-mentioned offences is one year.
The so-called airport procedure (Flughafenverfahren) according to Sec. 18a Asylum Procedure Act was not considered a case of detention by the German Constitutional Court[478]. The court pointed out that the asylum seeker is not obliged to stay within the airport premises but free to leave by air. However, it may be argued that the reasons for this rulings[479] cannot be transferred upon the application of the directive. Nevertheless, it must be kept in mind that the airport procedure takes place before the asylum seeker is granted access to the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany.
The following answers must therefore be read with some caution as the airport procedure is not a typical form of detention as the questions seem to suggest.

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Art. 7 para. 3 of the Directive is not understood as a case of detention. However, restrictions on free movement are based on this provision. Even if asylum seekers are free to leave the reception centre or any other accommodation facility they are obliged to stay within the district of the aliens authority in charge. These restrictions apply to all asylum seekers and are considered necessary for reasons of effectiveness of the asylum procedure and of burden-sharing among the federal states and municipalities.

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

[477] Not applicable at the moment due to changes in the system of granting access to the labour market. The prohibition to work is no longer imposed by an obligation, but can be deducted from the Residence Act.
[478] Judgement of 14 May 1996, File-No. 2 BvR 1516/93, BVerfGE 94, pp. 166 – 240.
[479] The question to answer by the Constitutional Court was if the airport procedure was a case of habeas corpus.

As far as the airport procedure is concerned, no.

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

The airport procedure is the obligatory procedure for all asylum seekers flying into a German airport if they come from a safe country of origin or do not carry any valid documents. The decision if these preconditions are met is on the border authorities and may be appealed to the administrative court within three days.

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

For the airport procedure only: The asylum seeker must be admitted to the Federal Territory if the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees announces that it is unable to decide on the asylum application within short term or if it does not decide within two days after application.

If there is a negative decision by the Federal Office within two days, the asylum seeker has the opportunity to appeal against it within three days. If the administrative court does not decide on the asylum seekers appeal within 14 days, he must be admitted to the Federal territory. Altogether the airport procedure will not exceed 19 days, this period may however be some days longer as far as unaccompanied minors under 16 years are concerned as a guardian has to be appointed first.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

For the airport procedure only: During the airport procedure the asylum seeker is accommodated within the airport premises if it offers suitable facilities. If suitable facilities are not available at the airport, the asylum seeker is sent to a reception centre and is subject to the regular asylum procedure.

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

For the airport procedure only: According to UNHCR, access to the transit areas is granted without restrictions to their representatives. This unproblematic practice is now safeguarded by a new provision in the Asylum Procedure Act[480].

[480] Sec. 9 para. 1 Asylum Procedure Act, see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 1996.

For NGOs, the situation seems to be diverse: Some NGOs, in particular the airport social services of the churches have unlimited access, sometimes they even have an office in the transit area. However, for some NGOs, in particular smaller ones, it seems to be more difficult to get access. Regarding this, is must however be kept in mind that it seems to be unavoidable to introduce certain restrictions to the access to the transit area in the airport. Transit areas are necessarily restricted areas for security reasons and an unrestricted access can therefore not possibly be granted.
The access of asylum seekers to adequate counselling by UNHCR and NGOs is safeguarded by the current practice.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

For the airport procedure only: The asylum seeker in the airport procedure must be given opportunity to contact a person of his choice to give him legal assistance (Sec. 18a para 2 Asylum Procedure Act). Furthermore, the provisions of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act are in principle applicable to asylum seekers being subject to the airport procedure (Sec. 1 para 1 No.2 Asylum Seekers Benefits Act).

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

See above.

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

For the airport procedure only: Sec. 18a Asylum Procedure Act does not distinguish between different groups of asylum seekers. However, special needs are met, as far as described in this report, by the provisions of the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act, which is applicable, see above.

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

For the airport procedure only: Sec. 18a Asylum Procedure Act does not distinguish between different groups of asylum seekers. This means that no distinction is made between minors and adults in the airport procedure, a fact which is widely criticised by NGOs, as accommodation within the airport premises may effect hardships especially for unaccompanied minors[481].

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

Not applicable as the airport procedure is strictly limited in time, see above.

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

For the airport procedure only: In 2006, 601 persons were subject to the airport procedure. 313 of them were admitted to the Federal Republic after the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees had announced that it is unable to decide on their case within short term. After five years of continuously decreasing numbers of asylum seekers in the airport procedure, the numbers in 2006 were considerably higher than in 2005.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

In Germany, the system of reception conditions is decentralised. Reception centres are set up, maintained and managed under authority of the Länder. The same applies to other accommodation facilities. In some of the federal states the municipalities are in charge to organize reception facilities for asylum seekers who are not obliged to live in a reception centre anymore.

Costs for reception conditions are borne by the federal states. As far as municipalities are in charge for delivering reception conditions, they are refunded by the respective federal state.

[481] Cf. Helga Jockenhövel-Schiecke, Schutz für unbegleitete Flüchtlingskinder: Rechtsgrundlagen und gegenwärtige Praxis, Zeitschrift für Ausländerrecht und Ausländerpolitik (ZAR) 1998, pp. 165 – 175.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)

This question cannot be answered in the same way for all federal states. E.g. in Bavaria all accommodation centres are managed by public authorities. In other federal states, accommodation centres are in part or completely managed by NGOs or private companies. The span of involved private organisations is very wide: In Berlin and Bremen the reception centres are managed by the Arbeiterwohlfahrt (Workers' Welfare), a charitable organisation whereas in Brandenburg the reception centre is managed by a private security company. These private organisations have in common that they deliver their services on the basis of a contract with the respective federal state.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?

There are 18 reception centres in Germany (Date: March 31, 2007). It is, however, not possible to quantify the number of other accommodation facilities or provide details about the nature of their organisational structure as they are not centrally registered.

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

Such a key exists in Sec. 45 Asylum Procedure Act. This so-called Königssteiner Schlüssel (Königstein Key) regulates the allocation of asylum seekers among the federal states to achieve a fair burden sharing. This key takes into account the population and the tax income of the different federal states. The federal states usually use a similar key to allocate the asylum seekers to several accommodation facilities within their territory.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?

There is an advisory board at the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees consisting of experts from science, charitable and other non-governmental organisations, administrative courts, administrative bodies and lawyers. This board plays a consultative role. However, it is no central body which represents all NGOs as suggested in the question.

Q.39. Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

Since the administration of reception conditions is organized by the federal states, there may be different structures of guidance, monitoring and controlling. In Bavaria, there is a commissioner for the reception of refugees who is directly responsible to the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Family and Women. This commissioner is in charge to coordinate the reception centres and is authorised to give them orders. The highest monitoring authority is the ministry in charge which is in the case of Bavaria the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Family and Women[482]. In Saxonia no such commissioner exists and the highest monitoring authority is the Ministry of the Interior[483]. In Hamburg it is the Office for Social and Family Affairs[484]. In Hesse the Ministry for Women, Labour and Social Affairs is the highest monitoring body[485]. In Berlin a special body, called "Begleitende Heimverwaltung" is responsible for the monitoring of privately managed accommodation facilities[486].

Q.39. B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?

There are no such standards on the federal level. Federal states are competent to organize the system of accommodation facilities. Therefore standards can be defined by them. An exhaustive overview is not possible, to our knowledge not all federal states have adopted quality standards. Mecklenburg-Western Pomerania has adopted a regulation on minimum standards for shared accommodation facilities[487]. It stipulates that not more than six persons shall be allocated to one bedroom and that a minimum of 6 m² shall be available per person. It further stipulates the minimum equipment with furniture and kitchenware and standards for washrooms and shared kitchens. If housing to children is provided, accommodation facilities must be equipped with a playroom and provide room for schoolchildren to do homework.

Q.39. C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?

There is a system of monitoring which is more or less the same for all administrative structures. According to this system, the administrative level ranking higher in the hierarchy is authorised to control the lower level in terms of legality and expediency of administrative acting. The highest ranking level in this hierarchy is usually the competent ministry. Additionally, there is a monitoring system with regard to the proper performance of duties by the officers which is structured alongside the same hierarchy but is dominated by the Ministry of the Interior of the concerned federal state.
There is, however, no specific monitoring system with regard to the quality of reception conditions.

Q.39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?

No.

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

In 2006, 193'562 persons received benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act (date: 31 Dec 2006)[488]. However, not all these persons were asylum seekers, neither do all asylum seekers receive benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act since they may have sufficient funds to maintain themselves, receive a working income or are entitled to regular social aid after 36 months of permitted stay in Germany. This becomes clear when comparing these numbers with the total number of asylum seekers in Germany: On December 31, 2006, only 8,835 asylum applications were pending with the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees plus 40,221 pending actions in the courts. 21,029 new asylum applications were lodged in 2006, compared with 28,914 in 2005[489].

Q.40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?

[488] Source : Federal Office for Statistics.
[489] Source: Federal Office for Migration and Refugees.

In 2006, 1.17 billion Euro have been spent on benefits under the Asylum Seekers Benefits Act[490]. However, this number has to be read with the same reservations as above.

Q.40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?

The average cost for reception conditions can hardly be determined since they depend on too many factors: the type of accommodation facility, if single men/women or families are concerned, if unaccompanied minors are concerned, the stage of the asylum procedure etc.

Q.40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

Reception conditions are financed from the budgets of the federal states (Länder).

Q.40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?

This question is difficult to answer since the funding may differ between the federal states. As far as reception conditions are provided by the federal states, one can assume that they are soundly financed. There are enough accommodation facilities to house all asylum seekers and no problems occur with regard to social benefits granted by the federal states directly.
However, it is difficult to assess the allocation of the necessary funding when reception conditions are provided by private organisations. State funding for NGOs providing counselling and psychological help was reduced in the last years, mostly due to the fact that numbers of asylum seekers were on a constant decline. These shortenings have nevertheless caused a reduction of services offered by these organisations. Thus, especially the counselling of persons with special needs may in some cases be insufficient as Practice Reports indicate.
NGOs also criticise that the number of qualified personnel is insufficient in some accommodation facilities.

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

No figures available, due to federal structures and cooperation with NGOs and private companies.

[490] Source : Federal Office for Statistics.

Q.41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?

Reception centres and accommodation facilities are run by the federal states, thus, hiring and training of personnel is within their responsibility, too. In federal states where accommodation facilities are run by private organisations or companies the training of personnel is sometimes not regulated at all (so in Saxony). A general statement can therefore not be made. Practice Reports indicate that personnel is trained in education seminars[491] at regular intervals. The federal state of Mecklenburg-Western Pomerania has adopted guidelines for running accommodation centres which include requirements for the qualification of the personnel. Lower Saxony says it employs skilled social workers who are, due to their special training, qualified to meet the special needs of male and female asylum seekers[492]. Similar information is provided by the Federal State of Baden-Württemberg. NGO statements suggest that the staffing with qualified personnel is insufficient in some facilities[493].
NGOs working with refugees train their personnel within their own responsibility[494].
Unaccompanied minors are accommodated in special facilities where adequately trained personnel is employed.

Q.41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?

Personnel working in the public sector are obliged not to disclose confidential information. The violation of this public duty is considered a criminal offence. Most NGOs have a similar policy. Violations may lead to instant dismissal.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

[494] Cf. Practice Report Caritas Question 21.

question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

The word reception conditions as such causes some difficulties. In German, it is translated as "Aufnahmebedingungen", which is correct as far as the total situation is concerned but can hardly be used for individual benefits or services.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

Yes, there were precise legal rules before, mainly in the Act on Social Benefits for Asylum Seekers. Thus, the Directive did not lead to major changes in the legislation.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

see above.

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

There have been no fundamental changes in national legislation due to the directive. As mentioned above, some amendments to the existing legislation have recently been adopted by parliament[495].

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

There was no such debate since the government did not see the need for any major changes in national legislation. According to UNHCR some discussion took place among practitioners, however, this discussion did not lead to a wider debate. Even in academic circles, the directive and potentially necessary amendments to national law were not widely discussed. This is also the reason why not much has been published on this subject.

[495] see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

The recently adopted Act on Transposition of Several EU Directives in the Field of Immigration and Asylum did not lead to considerable changes in the system of reception conditions. The information of asylum seekers about their rights especially with regard to reception conditions will presumably improve. Reports from the Federal States indicate that information sheets in different languages are at least under preparation.
In general, the standard of reception conditions has remained unchanged. The Directive thus has neither led to a lowering of standards nor to the establishment of more favourable rules (apart from the information issue).

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?

One clear weakness is the system to assess the age of minors who do not have any documents showing their age. Since there is no legal basis for an X-ray examination of the carpal bone, which would deliver reliable results, the assessment is done by mere estimate. Since reception conditions are different dependent on the age of the asylum seeker, this practice needs to be improved.
The problem used to occur for all groups of aliens, however, the recently adopted Act on Transposition of Several EU Directives in the Field of Immigration and Asylum introduced such a legal basis in the Residence Act[496]. This provision is not applicable to asylum seekers, though, as the Asylum Procedure Act includes in Sec. 16 a special provision on identification measures which still lacks an authorisation for X-ray examination.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States

The decentralised accommodation of asylum seekers helps to establish relatively small units in which internal tensions can be reduced more easily. Individual needs of asylum seekers may be identified easier and the work of local charity organisations is facilitated. These are rather atmospheric factors but they may help to avoid unnecessary hardships for asylum seekers. On the other hand this system makes it more difficult to establish and monitor common standards.

[496] Sec. 49 para. 6, see Federal Law Gazette I, p. 1970, 1980.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answer.

RECEPTION CONDITIONS OF 27 JANUARY 2003

IN: GREECE

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

LAW: Presidential Decree (PD) 220/2007 (OJHR 251/13-11-07): "Adaptation of the Greek legislation to the provisions of Directive 2003/9/EU of the Council of January 27, 2003, about the minimum requirements for reception of asylum applicants in Member States (EEL 31/6.2.2003)". This law whas just been enacted and communicated to us today 21/11/2007.

The Greek legislative system on asylum is basically based on laws (hereinafter indicated as: Acts) and a number of Presidential Decrees that delineate the conditions of application of these laws.

A Presidential Decree is a legislative instrument but does nor go through a regular parliamentary vote. It is agreed upon by the various Ministries involved and is enacted directly after it is sanctioned by the President of the Republic.

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

N/A

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

In Greece it is the Executive that adopts legal norms on reception conditions through Presidential Decrees (by direct transposition of European Directives into national law).

There is only one level of government competent to adopt legal norms on reception conditions and this is the central government of the Greek State.
The two main Ministries involved are the Ministry of Public Order (MPO) handling the processing of asylum applications and part of reception conditions relative to detention or "closed centres" and the Ministry of Health and Social Solidarity (MHSS) handling reception conditions relative to the funding of reception centres. The MPO is in charge of the legal framework on refugees and is responsible for the publication of the PD in the Official Journal of the Hellenic Republic (OJHR) (final provision of the PD).

Even though the MPO cooperates with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in matters of Asylum practice, the former is the sole administrative branch directly competent for the administration of asylum applications.
Other Ministries involved are the Ministries of Labour, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Interior, the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Finance.
The Ministry of Interior, Public Administration and Decentralisation (IPAD) is responsible for issues of nationality, regular migration and integration of migrants. It is the responsibility of the ministry of Public Order (PO) to exercise control over the legality of migrants, to pass and implement decisions on administrative expulsion, to examine the asylum demands and to provide the Ministry of IPAD with data on nationality issues. Following the September 2007 national elections and the re-election of the National Democracy Party the two Ministries of Public Order and the Ministry of Interior have now merged into one Ministry.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

The basic instruments used for the transposition of the Directive were the Greek version of the Directive in conjunction with the above mentioned legislative instruments and in particular:

a) art. 4 of Act 1338/1983 (Application of Community Law) as amended by articles 6 par. 4 of Act 1440/1984, 7 of Act 1775/1988, 31 of Act 2076/1992, 19 of Act 2367/1995, 22 of Act 2789/2000 and 48 of Act 3427/2005;

b) art. 24 of Act 1975/1991 as replaced by art. 1of Act 2452/1996;

c) art. 90 of the Code of Legislation for the Government and for Government Instruments (PD 63/2005) as well as art.1, par. 4 of Act 2469/1997;

d) The Common Decision by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Economy and Finances ("Determination of Competences of Deputy Ministers of Economy and Finances") 37930/DIOE 1264/14.10.2005;

e) The opinion of the Council of State, following a proposal by the Ministers of Interior, Public Administration and Decentralization, Economy and Finances, External Affairs, Education, Employment and Social Affairs, Health and Welfare and Public Order.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

In general there is such a tendency but where national practice has exceeded minimum standards the provisions have been re-drafted and expanded upon. There are only a couple of examples of direct copying of provisions which would run the risk of remaining unapplied: for example, Art. 17.1 of the Directive, on Provisions for Persons with Special Needs requiring the Member State to make provisions in the national legislation for these persons, has been transposed by PD art. 17 in such a way as to pass in very general terms this responsibility down to lower local authorities.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

Please see answer to Q1 above.

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

If any study of that kind has been prepared, it has not been made public.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

There have been certain relevant articles on the status of refugees and asylum seekers which are mentioned in the bibliography to the present report, but, to our knowledge, not any specific study on the Directive on Reception Conditions in Greece.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

There are no such decisions available, because transposition has not yet taken place.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

Note: The answer to this question relates to the current status of asylum-seekers, but not to the PD.

The MHSS, as the main funding and supervisory state authority in charge of reception centres and the NGOs dealing with the basic administration of those centres can be considered as the main actors in charge of reception conditions.

The MPO, through the police authorities, is charged with receiving the claim (orally or in writing, but always in the physical presence of the claimant) and supplies the asylum seeker with written information, in the form of a booklet, mentioning the procedure and the rights of the claimant as well as the refugee assisting organizations.

In Athens, where the number of refugee claims as compared to the available manpower for processing them is disproportionately high, the MPO is supposed to provide "in-service" notes or "white notes" with the applicant's name and photograph and the date of the scheduled first interview for consideration of the claim by a member of the police department.

Regardless of the decision following the interview (a negative decision is appealable before the Secretary General of the MPO, whose decision is based on the advice of an Appeals Board which hears the claimant's representation and which consists of officials from the MPO, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a representative from the Athens Bar Association and a representative from the UNHCR) a claimant is issued following the interview a "pink card" with the applicant's name, address and photograph and a description of the rights and obligations of an asylum applicant, such as the right to free medical care by the National Health System and the right to work. This is a 6-month duration (renewable) document that serves as the applicant's only identification while his case is being processed.
The applicant can then apply for a work permit, which is subject to the applicant not residing in a reception centre and a preliminary search of the market having resulted in a profession in which there is no express interest by a Greek citizen, a EU citizen, an expatriate Greek or a recognized refugee. This latter requirement is almost never applied in practice, as asylum applicants do not apply for a specific profession and the manual employment which is usually available to them does not belong to any "sought after" professions of the Greek market.

Though there seem to be administrative guidelines (an internal memo from the MHSS) according to which holders of the "in-service note" have access to the health system, other information gives a different picture on the conduct of the authorities. It seems that the authorities do not provide "in-service notes" but instead they return to applicants a copy of their application, stamped by the Ministry of Public Order. This document is not covered by the MHSS memo but is being accepted by hospital authorities in emergency health needs. Moreover, according to our information from UNHCR Greece, the authorities now try to practically make documents such as the "in-service notes" or "pink cards" redundant, by increasingly applying the accelerated procedure to all applications, treating them as abusive, while they issue invariably negative decisions within a relatively short (compared to the previous delays of up to one year, under the regular procedure) period of time (2-3 weeks).
In addition to the MPO and the MHSS, other important actors in the reception of asylum seekers are the UNHCR (which undertakes monitoring of legislation, procedure and reception conditions, is informed about the outcome of all asylum cases, is represented on the Appeals Committee, finances the training of school teachers and publishes yearly reports and recommendations on the improvement of asylum conditions in Greece) and a number of Greek NGOs.

Such NGOs are:

The Greek Council for Refugees, which runs social and benefit programmes for asylum seekers for whom a positive application outcome is expected, offers legal representation to refugee seekers, supplies interpreters and runs training programs for police staff;

The Greek Red Cross, which administers the Lavrio reception center;

The International Social Services, which runs social assistance and education programmes in the Lavrio reception centre;

The following Non Governmental Organizations asylum seekers with different kinds of aid according to their specific scope and activity programmes:

Solidarity of the Church of Greece;
Social Work Foundation;
Amnesty International;
Medical Rehabilitation Centre for the Victims of Torture;
Doctors Without Frontiers (Medecins sans Frontiers);
Doctors of the World (Medecins du Monde);
Centre for Support of Repatriated Immigrants (INTO-HELLAS);
Network of Social Support for Refugees and Immigrants;
ARSIS , Social Organization for the Support of Youth (Athens);
ARSIS , Social Organization for Youth' Support (Thessaloniki); PRAKSIS;
Voluntary Work Athens;
ELINAS Greek Institute for Solidarity ad Cooperation;
Medical Intervention (MedIn);
Marangopoulos Foundation for Human Rights;
CARITAS; KENTRO ZOIS; KLIMAKA;
Social Solidarity;
Mother Tereza;
Ecumenical Refugee Programme;

also, The International Organization of Migration (IOM)

Q.11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

Note: The answer to this question relates to the general status of asylum-seekers under the current law, but not to the draft PD.

The asylum procedure in Greece (PD 61/1999)

An asylum application may be lodged by an alien at any time after his/her entry to Greece or at the border, to any public authority, orally or in writing.

The two procedures for examination of asylum applications are: Accelerated Procedure (when the persecution claim is manifestly unsubstantiated, fraudulent or abusive of the asylum procedure, when submitted at a seaport or airport point of entry or when applicants arrive from a safe third country where they run no risk of persecution) and the Regular Procedure.

Accelerated Procedure

Asylum seekers who apply at the border are held pending the outcome of the accelerated procedure, which may take from one to fifteen days, depending on whether an appeal is filed or not.

Where the alien's application is submitted upon arrival at an airport, the applicant waits in the international zone (an area which extends from the point of embarkation and disembarkation to the point of passport control and which includes the transit area) or in other special areas within or outside the airport ("surveillance areas"), designated by ministerial decision for the accommodation of asylum seekers, while his application is examined.

Surveillance areas are under the responsibility of the port authorities and are guarded by the police. Men and women are usually separated, food is provided and washing facilities are made available.

NGOs , in cooperation with UNHCR, have access to the asylum seekers in the surveillance areas and may provide assistance and counselling.

In ports of entry without a surveillance area (such as a seaport) the police are responsible for providing applicants with accommodation, food and washing facilities.

In cases of abusive or manifestly unfounded claims or claims by travelers arriving from safe third countries, the "Regular Accelerated Procedure" applies.

In case the application is lodged at an airport the application is considered the same day through an interview conducted by the police security department of the airport and the supporting documents are dispatched within ten days to the Minister of Public Order[497].

If the application is rejected there is a right of appeal to the Secretary General of the Ministry of Public Order. The appeal must be lodged within ten days from the date of service of the decision of rejection. The Secretary General of the Minister of Public Order must pronounce on the appeal within thirty days from the lodging of the appeal.

For applications submitted in the transit zone of the international area of an airport the "Super-Accelerated Procedure" or "On-the-Spot" Procedure is used and more restrictive rules apply: the supporting documents are dispatched within 24 hours to the Minister of Public Order where a decision is taken within 15 days by the Head of Police, Security and Order Division of the Ministry, according to recommendations made by the Department of State Security of the Ministry. During this period, the applicant is detained in a specially modified area of the airport and if a final decision is not reached within the 15-day period they are released in the Greek territory.

[497] When an application is considered manifestly unfounded but has not been lodged at a seaport or an airport the supporting documents for an accelerated procedure are also submitted to the Ministry within ten days.

If the application is rejected there is a right of appeal to the Secretary General of the Ministry of Public Order. The applicant must lodge his/her appeal, which has a suspensive effect, within five days from communication of a negative decision. The Ministry of Public Order must pronounce its decision on the appeal within fifteen days.

In practice, the Greek authorities have been unable to implement the Accelerated Procedure within the prescribed time limits since the advisory Appeals Board which hears all appeals to first instance negative decisions, whether abusive or not and independently of the procedure (Regular or Accelerated), meets only once every week and examines on the average fifteen cases per week.

Dublin II Cases

Asylum applicants subject to the Dublin II regulation are only kept two days in the surveillance areas where they are finger-printed and photographed, following which they are released to the Greek territory pending the arrangements with the state which is supposed to examine their application, during which period they benefit from reception conditions.

Regular Procedure

Upon expressing their wish to seek asylum at the Athens Aliens Police Department the applicants are supposed to receive a “white note” or “in-service note” with their name, photograph and date on which their application was submitted and the date of the examination of their application (interview) and with the indication: “the alien mentioned here-above has appeared today before our department [the Aliens Department of Athens-Asylum Office] to apply for political asylum and the starting date for the examination procedure of his application is set for [date]”).

In practice though, the asylum seeker deposits an application form, copy of which is returned to him stamped by the authorities - this substitutes the “white note” - This receipt does not constitute any proof of status but only confirms that a request for examination of a claim has been made. In theory, the police must interview an asylum seeker within three months from submission of his claim (Presidential Decree 61/1999) but in practice this appointment is postponed several times, resulting often in delays of over one year, partly due to lack of trained personnel and interpreters.

During this period the applicant is protected from readmission (refoulement) but does not enjoy the social rights and benefits enjoyed by refugee claimants whose examination of application has already begun.

This practice leaves asylum seekers without an asylum seeker's status, which would allow them to seek accommodation or take up work and without any means of subsistence for periods usually exceeding one whole year.
However, according to written information the authors of this report have received from the MPO, holders of the "in-service note" benefit immediately from free health services, they can immediately be accommodated in reception centres (subject to space availability) and they receive the right to immediate employment in order to cover their basic needs (as long as they do not benefit from reception centre accommodation)[498].
Following the interview, the file and interview records are transmitted to the Ministry of Public Order where after further evaluation a decision is issued by the Secretary General of the Ministry of Public Order following the recommendation of the Ministry's Department of Internal Security.
The decision must be reasoned and mention the deadline for an appeal (which is thirty days from the serving of the decision) and the consequences, if no action is taken within this period. However, in practice such decisions are invariably in "form type" and do not contain reasons for the decision based on the merits of the particular case, simply mentioning that the applicant was found ineligible under all of the criteria justifying the granting of refugee status.

An appeal is heard by the Appeals Board, a six-member consultative committee[499], and has suspensive effect. The Minister must pronounce within ninety days upon the opinion provided by the Appeals Board, but this opinion is not binding on the Minister and there has been a practice (denounced by the Greek Ombudsman and the NGOs) whereby the Minister issues negative decisions in spite of unanimous positive opinions by the Appeals Committee..

If the appeal is rejected the Minister considers whether the applicant may remain in the country under the humanitarian regime or be requested to leave the country within a three month period.

Once an appeal is rejected an asylum seeker loses his "pink card" and all the social benefits that it bestows upon him.

A request for annulment of the second instance (appeal) decision may be filed with the Council of State (the supreme administrative court of the country) within sixty days following notification of the negative decision by the MPO and does not have suspensive effect. In spite of the Greek Constitution's guarantees of a right to a fair trial and to an appeal for annulment before the Council of State of any administrative act (Art. 20, para. 1 and Art. 95 of the Greek Constitution), which includes an appeal against the rejection of an asylum request, the suspension of an expulsion is at the discretion of the Council of State and the exercise of that remedy does not suspend the decision of the administration to expel the applicant.

[498] Letter of 18/10/2006 by Mr. D. Panopoulos, Director General of the Aliens Department , MPO
[499] The Appeals Board consists of: a) the Legal Adviser of the Minister of Public Order as chairman, b) an employee of the diplomatic branch of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, c) a legal adviser of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, d) a senior officer of the Greek Police, e) a representative of the Athens Bar Association and f) the legal adviser of the UNHCR office in Athens

Applicants who are dealt with under the Regular Process are required to stay at a place of residence chosen by them or assigned by the authorities for the whole period of examination of their claim and although there is no direct control as such, they must report any change of address to the police. Failure to do so will result in interruption of the asylum procedure by order of the Secretary General of the MPO and loss of any social privileges, unless, within three months time, the applicant can justify his absence due to force majeure.

If a residence has been assigned to the applicant by the police the applicant needs a police authorization prior to changing this residence. On the alternative, an applicant may choose to stay in a residence of his own choice, provided that he notifies the police authorities of any changes thereafter.

The interruption of the asylum procedure and loss of social privileges was a usual occurrence in Dublin II cases where an applicant, exasperated by the long waiting periods in the Greek refugee application system, sought to enter another EU state and claim asylum there but was subsequently returned by this state's authorities to Greece, by application of the Dublin II regulation. In such a case, Greek authorities considered the applicant as having abandoned his place of residence without notifying the authorities and interrupted the asylum procedure. The asylum seekers then found themselves in limbo, not being able to claim refugee status in any EU country and being completely deprived of social benefits.
On this practice, we were informed by the MPO that in a letter of 14/6/2006 the Minister of Public Order of Greece notified the European Commission that this practice was no longer followed. Instead, the asylum application procedure of a refugee applicant returned to Greece through Dublin II was resumed at the point it was interrupted.

The accumulated delays in processing regular asylum applications sometimes exceed three years, while the accelerated procedure, including both first and second instance decisions can last up to three or four months.

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

Practice: In Greece there are no legal provisions offering asylum seekers a right to social assistance, either in currency or by vouchers.
An asylum seeker holding a valid asylum seeker's document ("pink card") and not staying at a Temporary Residence Center (refugee shelter) has access to temporary employment in the private sector, provided that the particular employment is of no interest to Greek nationals, other EU citizens or recognized refugees (the Community preferences are abolished by the draft PD; please see below answers to the relevant questions).
Social assistance, such as a minimum income guarantee, is also unavailable to the native Greek population (unless they are insured, disabled or elderly) and the general relief of poverty is left to private charity and to NGOs' social programmes for the most vulnerable groups in society.
However, Reception Centres provide material reception conditions "in kind" (food, clothes and shoes, personal hygiene products etc.), according to their budgetary means. Certain reception centres cover the necessary needs of asylum applicants, providing adequate number of beds, clothing, nourishment and proper conditions of hygiene, while others do not.
A 2004 UNHCR report on these conditions is available at www.unhcr.gr.

PD: PD art. 12. 5 mentions a "stipend" covering the asylum applicant's daily expenses to be made available according to provisions of Law 57/1973 and according to administrative decisions that are occasionally issued on this subject, but there is no specific mention of the amount an asylum seeker is to be awarded for his daily expenses.

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

To our opinion, not. In the opinion of the Greek Council of Refugees housing and food, when provided in reception centres, ensure a standard of living adequate for the health and the subsistence of the applicants.

Furthermore, in view of the current situation as outlined in answers to Questions 10 and 11 above and Question 14 below and the lack of explicit provisions in the PD for alleviation of the long delays before an applicant can start enjoying reception conditions, it is obvious that the current and perhaps the future (PD) situations are in violation of articles 13.2 and 13.2 of the Directive. Art. 5.1 of the PD provides for issuance of a document, called "certificate of an applicant for refugee status", to be supplied to the asylum applicant within three days from submission of an asylum application and after the results of finger-printing, but there is no mention to the effect that this document confers reception rights and that is any different from the current “in-service note”. Furthermore, this “certificate” is not provided to those applying at the border or while an asylum applicant is in detention. This “certificate” is not an identity document.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2b which is a mandatory provision)

Practice: No such provision exists in the national legislation

PD: PD art. 1b (Definitions) provides for such a presumption. An individual may explicitly request protection on humanitarian grounds. If no such request is made explicitly this is done automatically after a request is rejected as not fulfilling the criteria of the Geneva Convention.

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

PD: PD art. 1b defines as asylum applicants all those who seek international protection, unless an application for subsidiary protection (which includes cases in which the individual is threatened with death penalty, torture, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, or is going to find himself in the midst of generalized violence in the country of origin, or if his return is not possible for objective reasons beyond his control, or when he is unwilling to avail himself to the protection of the country of origin) is filed explicitly as such from the start.
Art. 22 of the draft PD provides for extension of the provisions of the Directive to humanitarian cases, according to Law 2452/1996 (OJHR A -283).

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

Practice: There can be no diplomatic asylum requests in Greek diplomatic missions outside Greece. The only acceptable asylum requests must be filed on Greek territory.

PD: PD art. 2 covers all applicants of third countries as well as their families who request international protection while on Greek territory but it excludes applications submitted through diplomatic or consular representations outside the Greek territory as well as cases covered by PD 80/2006 on Temporary Protection through Mass Influx of Displaced Aliens.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Practice: Reception conditions are only introduced from the moment the applicant goes through the first interview and receives his "pink card", which has a six month duration, is renewable and provides him with social benefits (such as residence at a reception centre, free medical and health care and the possibility to apply for a work permit), but not from the moment he files his application (when he receives the "white note" or "in-service note" scheduling his interview and gets finger-printed). However, vulnerable cases (elderly, unaccompanied minors, pregnant women, families with minors) are accommodated immediately (subject to availability of spaces) to reception centres, through the intervention of NGOs.

Health coverage can be provided earlier than the first interview, because even though formally the applicant will only be entitled to medical and hospital services after he obtains his "pink card", the MHSS has circulated a memo directing health service providers to accept patients who only possess an "in-service note".

PD: Art. 5.1 of the PD provides for a certificate ("deltio") attesting to the status of the claimant, to be provided after the results of finger-printing and in any event not later than three (3) days following submission of the application. This certificate, which is not provided in case an application has been submitted at the border or while an asylum seeker is detained, has a six month duration, is renewable and does not constitute an identification document. There is no mention however to the effect that this document confers reception rights immediately after an applicant expresses his wish to seek international protection and that it replaces the current "in-service note". In other words, it is not clarified whether the moment "an application is submitted" is considered the first contact of the applicant with the authorities or the date of the first interview.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

Practice: As described above, reception conditions end at the moment of the rejection of an applicant's appeal before the Appeal Committee.

Once an appeal is rejected an asylum seeker loses his "pink card" and all the social benefits that it bestows upon him.

A request for annulment of the second instance (appeal) decision may be filed with the Council of State (the supreme administrative court of the country) within sixty days following notification of the negative decision by the Minister of Public Order and does not have a suspensive effect by itself.

In spite of the Greek Constitution's guarantees of a right to a fair trial and to an appeal for annulment before the Council of State of any administrative act, which includes an appeal against the rejection of an asylum request, the suspension of an expulsion is at the discretion of the Council of State. In case the Council of State suspends deportation until final judgment the refugee seeker continues to enjoy his social benefits.

PD: PD art. 5.1 stipulates that the applicant's certificate of asylum seeker must be returned to the authorities after a final decision on the application has been rendered. Therefore the status of asylum-seekers is terminated by a final negative decision on their application, at which point they are no longer entitled to reception conditions. However, it is not mentioned whether a final negative decision refers to a decision by the Council of State.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

PD: PD art. 15.1 par. c allows for limitation or revocation of reception conditions when an applicant has already submitted a previous application for international protection in Greece.

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Practice:

Section 1(6) of the Presidential Decree No. 61/1999 requires authorities to inform asylum seekers about the asylum procedure in a language which they understand. In practice, this mainly means that the authorities hand out a information booklet produced by the International Social Service. This booklet explains the asylum procedure, asylum seekers' rights and obligations, and how to access free legal assistance provided by NGOs and their contact details.

The booklet is currently available in Greek, English, Albanian, Arabic, French, Kurdish, Russian, Serbo-Croatian, Turkish and Farsi. Information material produced by other NGOs is normally only available to asylum seekers if they contact that particular NGO.
The current perception is that asylum seekers are generally not that well informed as it often depends on the asylum seeker's initiative to find out how to access services available.

Under the current practice, translators' languages available for communication with asylum-seekers are English, Arabic, Turkish, French and sometimes Farsi (information provided by the NGO "CARITAS Athens").

PD: PD art 3 provides for immediate (following the application for asylum), or within 15 days at the latest[500], information of the applicant through a document in a language understood by the applicant of the examination procedure, the rights, benefits and obligations as well as the consequences of non-compliance. The document mentions the functions of the UNHCR in Greece and organizations that provide legal counselling as well as the available reception conditions, including medical care. If the applicant does not understand any of the languages of the document or if he/she is illiterate, there is oral information through the use of an interpreter and a relative report is prepared and kept in the applicant's file.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Please see answer to Q17 A above

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

Please see answer to Q17 A above

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Please see answer to Q17 A above

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

Please see answer to Q17 A above

[500] Based on the current practice of the authorities, the Greek Council for Refugees expects the deadline of 15 days for the information of the asylum-seeker not to be respected in many cases, due to delays by the administration.

There is presently no such an official list regarding legal assistance) dressed by the authorities, although in several local police authorities such information on organizations promoting refugee rights, albeit not exhaustive, is provided orally and some times in writing.
The MPO[501] has informed the authors of this report that in the detention areas there are posted information notices, in various languages, which describe asylum seekers' rights and there is also information (it is not mentioned if this is in writing) about the organizations that cater to refugee matters.

UNHCR helps refer asylum seekers on to the Greek Council for Refugees. Many of them learn about their services through friends, other asylum seekers or other service providers. The Police also refer them on to the Greek Council for Refugees, although this does not happen systematically

Asylum seekers staying at one of the reception or accommodation centres usually have better and quicker access to information about legal assistance services available to them. Most of the NGOs involved in providing assistance to asylum seekers have produced information material about the asylum procedure and legal assistance services available.

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Please see answer to Q17 A above

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

Please see answer to Q17 A above

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

Please see answer to Q10 above.

There are currently in Greece about twenty five (25) such organizations active in the asylum field.

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

[501] Letter of 18/10/2006 by Mr. D. Panopoulos, Director General of the Aliens Department , MPO

Practice: The “in-service note” is followed by the “pink card” which is provided to asylum applicants and carries the name, address and a photograph of the applicant, is of a 6-month duration, renewable and it is the only proof of status and identity that an asylum seeker has in Greece while his application is being processed.

PD: PD art. 5.1 provides for a document to the asylum applicant, which certifies that he/she has applied for international protection and is allowed to remain in Greek territory during consideration of the application and to circulate freely in all or part of the Greek territory. This document includes a photograph of the applicant and has a 6- month duration, renewable until final decision on the application.

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for “procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory” as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

Practice: As mentioned above, the “in-service note” is the preliminary document, prior to issuance of a “pink card”, while the stamped copy of the application which is usually provided instead of an “in-service note” as a receipt of application deposit, has no formal value.

PD: PD art 5.2 excludes provision of the aforementioned document in cases the applicant is in detention or while an application which has submitted at the border is being processed (according to the provisions of PD 61/1999).

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

Please see answer to Q 19 A above

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[1]?

Practice: Please see answers above, regarding the various delays for the issuance of those documents

PD: PD art. 5.1 provides for a deadline of 3 days following submission of an application and immediately after the finger-printing results become available. It is not clarified however whether the moment “an application is submitted” is considered the first contact of the applicant with the authorities or the date of the first interview.

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

PD: PD art. 5.4 provides for such occasions.

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

Practice: The MPO (Asylum Department) is supposed to provide EUROSTAT with detailed reports on the registered asylum seekers every three months.

PD: PD art. 16.3 provides for updating of the UNHCR and the EC by the MHSS with the number of persons to whom reception conditions are provided, their country of origin, their gender and age and generally all pertinent statistics as well as full information regarding the types of documents provided to the applicants and covered by PD art. 5 (such as finger-printing results, refugee applicant document and travel document)

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers :

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Practice: An asylum seeker is free to move on the entire territory, as long as the change of address notifications mentioned above are respected. He or she is also free to choose the place of residence and that does not affect the reception conditions (again, if an applicant chooses to stay at a reception centre he/she cannot ask for a work permit and vice versa).

PD: PD art 6.1 mentions that applicants may move freely within the Greek territory OR within the area assigned to them by the Central Authority (Aliens Department of the Central Headquarters of the Greek Police) and to choose their place of residence, under the obligation of Informing the authorities in charge of examining their application (Greek Police Services) of their current residence.

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extent the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

Practice: Choice of residence does not depend on the stage of the asylum procedure. The authorities may decide on the residence of the asylum seekers in a certain place, if there are reasons of public interest or public order. A recent attempt by the police authorities to impose a place of residence to an applicant, under the threat of discontinuing the application process, have been struck down by a decision of the Council of State (please see below).

PD: The authorities may decide on the residence of the asylum seekers in a certain place, if there are reasons of public interest, public order, or when it is necessary for the swift and effective processing of the application (PD art. 6. par. 5).
The Central Authority (Alien Department of the Central Headquarters of the Greek Police) may refuse reception conditions (including accommodation in reception centres) in case the applicant abandons the place of residence determined by the Authority without permission (PD art. 15, par 1a).

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

Practice: Please see answers to Q A and B above. The current practice does not allow applicants to remain for over 3 months at a reception centre (please see answer to Q 25 B below), although certain reception centres allow applicants to remain longer. The usual practice is to encourage reception centres residents to acquire the financial means through their employment, so as to relocate.

PD: PD art. 13.2 stipulates that the accommodation in reception centres cannot exceed the period of one (1) year, following which every possible assistance is provided to applicants in order to secure their own place of residence.
However, following final rejection of an application for asylum and the issuance of an expulsion order, applicants must vacate the reception centre within a period that may not exceed 30 days (PD art. 13.9).
PD art. 13.3 mentions that every possible effort will be made so that families are lodged together and minors stay with their parents or with the adult relative in charge of their custody and care.

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)

The MHSS informs the Central Authority (Aliens Department of the Central Headquarters of the Greek Police) of the availability of spaces in reception centres and other accommodation facilities suitable for lodging of the applicants and decisions are taken accordingly.
Decisions by the Central Authority (PD art. 7.3) are based on the principle of preservation of the family unity and adequacy of social services.

There is no mechanism of appeal against such decisions of the Central Authority.

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

PD. art 6.6 stipulates that the Central Authority may in exceptional circumstances grant applicants permission to temporarily leave their place of residence or assigned geographical territory and the refusal of such a permission must be adequately justified. Such a permission is not required when the applicant's absence is necessary for appearance before courts or public authorities.

Q.21 A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

PD: PD. art. 12. 3 provides for withdrawal of all or part of reception conditions if it is established that applicants have concealed financial resources and have therefore unduly benefited from material reception conditions.

Furthermore, PD art 15 provides for withdrawal or limitation of reception conditions in case applicants abandon their place of residence without notifying the authorities or obtaining permission (when this is required), do not provide required information, do not appear to a personal interview regarding examination of their application, have already applied for international protection in Greece, have not applied for asylum immediately when this is practically possible after entering the Greek territory or violate regulations of the reception centre they reside in.

In any case, the access to emergency health care is always insured (draft PD art. 15.7)

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice?

Practice: There are no reported cases of refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late application.

PD: The PD provides for refusal of reception conditions in such a case (art. 15 par. 3).

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

PD: PD art 15.7 stipulates that such decisions are taken individually and they are "specifically reasoned". There is no particular mention of a mechanism insuring objectivity and impartiality (through the use of an independent arbitrator). There is no mentioning of the condition of proportionality.

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the document attached to our sending)?

Only the provision of emergency healthcare is mentioned in PD art. 15.7.

Q.21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome?

There is no information on such cases.

Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

Practice: There is no mechanism for such cases.

PD: The decision of a director of a reception centre on expulsion of a resident is appealable within 5 days from communication of the decision before the MHSS (PD art. 15.5). Furthermore, if benefits are withdrawn or limited due to disappearance of an applicant, if the applicant is subsequently located or appears in his/her own volition before the authorities, a sufficiently reasoned decision is issued by the Central Authority on whether these benefits will be restored (PD art. 15.2).

PD art. 22 provides for recourse against a decision withdrawing or limiting reception conditions before the Supervisor of the Security Department of the Headquarters of the Greek Police, lodged within 5 days from communication of the decision. The appeal has suspensive effect and a negative decision can be appealed through a Petition to Annul before Greek administrative courts according to Act 3068/2002.

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

Practice: In general, applicants can benefit from free legal assistance for any claim regarding their status (not necessarily for such an appeal) through the services of various NGOs.
UNHCR helps refer asylum seekers on to the Greek Council for Refugees. Many of them learn about their services through friends, other asylum seekers or other service providers. The Police also refer them on to the Greek Council for Refugees, although this does not happen systematically.
Asylum seekers staying at one of the reception or accommodation centres usually have better and quicker access to information about legal assistance services available to them. Most of the NGOs involved in providing assistance to asylum seekers have produced information material about the asylum procedure and legal assistance services available.

The Greek Council for Refugees' (GCR) Legal Unit provides legal aid to asylum seekers, and facilitates, if possible, the asylum procedure. Its lawyers, accompanied by interpreters of the GCR, visit the detention centres in the Athens area on a daily basis in order to maintain contact with detained asylum seekers and to facilitate their access to the asylum procedure. Applicants may also receive legal counselling at any stage of the asylum procedure from one of the Legal Aid Network (LAN) lawyers throughout the country.
Furthermore, the Athens Bar assigns refugee cases to specializing lawyers.
The Athens Bar Association has also established a legal aid network for those aliens who are unable to pay for their legal expenses. However, this system, which is not state supported but financed from the Bar's own resources, cannot deal with all of the requests for legal assistance submitted to the Bar Association. Furthermore, there is currently not enough funding available to the Bar Association to pay lawyers.
Asylum seekers may also receive legal assistance and legal information from other NGOs, such as the Greek section of Amnesty International, the Ecumenical Refugee Programme, the International Social Service, the Hellenic Red Cross, the Refugee Association, the Medical Rehabilitation Centre for Torture Victims, Social Solidarity (in Thessaloniki) and the Network for Support of Migrants (a network of Immigration and Asylum lawyers).

PD: There are no provisions in the PD for legal assistance

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

There is no information on such cases

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

Practice: There is no formal mechanism for complaints.

PD: PD art. 21 provides for a mechanism of complaints about decisions regarding reception conditions.

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

Current practice and the PD cover fully the family unity (PD art 1 par.d transposes art. 2 of the Directive and it even adds parents and dependent adult children who because of physical or mental incapacity cannot apply individually).

The measures taken in current practice provide for detention and for reception centres accommodation of family members, preserving family unity. Furthermore, the relevant provisions of the PD (PD art 13.3 transposes Directive art. 14.2 and PD art. 7 transposes Directive art. 8) cover adequately the aspects of family unity.

Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

Practice: The only housing facilities currently available to asylum seekers as part of reception conditions, are reception centres.

PD: PD art. 13 is dedicated to the conditions of accommodation in reception centres..

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers? Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

There are currently 770 places available in reception centres (85 of which are reserved for unaccompanied minors).

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?

According to the opinion of the UNHCR and NGOs, this number is currently insufficient.

Furthermore, there is a great number of asylum applicants who choose (in spite of all difficulties that this may entail) to live outside reception centres because they prefer to remain in urban centres, since most reception centres are situated in remote areas with extremely difficult access to the city.

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?
There are no such special measures.

Q.25 Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A. Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

There are no different categories of accommodation (reception) centres according to the stage of the procedure.

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

Practice: There is a general practice (not based on any law or ministerial decision) whereby the usual period of stay is 3 months (extended by another 3 months for vulnerable cases) but administrations of reception centres exercise their own discretion on that matter, all the while trying to introduce their guests to the labour market, thereby making them financially autonomous and securing private housing for them.

For the Lavrio centre the relevant PD stipulates that an asylum seeker must leave the centre within 30 days after the decision is communicated to him. In practice, this period may well exceed one year, as mentioned above. However, the general effort is to discourage asylum seekers' institutionalization by integrating them in the society while awaiting the decision on their application.

PD: PD art. 13.2 actually limits the period of residence at a reception centre to one (1) year.

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

Practice: There is no such a general regulation or an obligation on the centres to adopt one but the MHSS, as the supervising authority, could intervene if provisions of a certain centre's internal regulation were found to be contrary to legislation or accepted norms of practice.

Certain reception centres have developed their own rules on internal functioning using as standard the provisions of PD 299/1999 on Lavrio reception centre on internal functioning. The rules on Lavrio are quite complete. The reception centre of Thessaloniki run by Social Solidarity, operates on a complete set of by-laws using the Lavrio rules as standard.

PD: PD art13.1 simply mentions that in each reception centre must be run "according to its Internal Regulation".

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision? Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

Practice: Presidential Decree 266/1999 on the Lavrio Reception Center provides for sanctions against asylum seekers who do not comply with their obligations. Art. 5 provides that the asylum seeker is first warned by the Director of the centre and if he persists in his behaviour after this warning, his asylum application is examined by priority. The aim of this peculiar "sanction" is that a final decision on the application claim is reached as soon as possible, since after the issue of the final decision the asylum seeker will have to leave the centre.

PD: PD art. 15 par. 4 provides for consequences or even expulsion of an asylum applicant from a reception centre, following motivated decision by the Director of the centre, due to violations of the centre's regulations.

Such decision is appealable (please see answer to Q 22 A above).

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

Asylum seekers are not involved in the management of the centres but organize themselves in volunteer teams that perform certain tasks for their fellow residents and they can be engaged in paying assignments (by the centre's administration) as translators etc.
Fees are covered by the NGOs funds for these programs, who instead of paying outside professionals they hire the services of the guests.

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

No such rules exist, work inside a centre is on a volunteer basis or it is paid according to outside market conditions.

In some centers (for e.g. those run by the Hellenic Red Cross) the guests have on their own initiative decided to organize in teams that offer services to all fellow residents, such as picking up children from school, doing additional cleaning etc. This is done on an entirely voluntary basis.

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

Practice: Legal advisers, UNHCR and NGO representatives can actually communicate with asylum seekers once an initial contact is made at the initiative of the former, since there is no systematic provision of information and encouragement on the part of the authorities (please see answer to Q 22 B above).

PD: PD art. 13.5 provides for the possibility of applicants' communication with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs but does not specify how this communication is to be established.

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

Practice: There are no problems in the access of NGO representatives and legal advisers to reception centres but such problems have been reported in detention or "closed" centres.

PD: PD art. 13.7 provides for full access of legal advisors and UNHCR to reception or detention centres, but NOT to NGO representatives. This is clearly a derogation from art. 14.7 of the directive.

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

Practice: No restriction of access of UNHCR representatives is possible under the asylum legislation currently in force. As far as access of other persons is concerned, this cannot be limited unless there is specific and temporary police order under the general provisions of Greek legislation (e.g. in case of crimes). However, deviations from this exist at times (please see above answer to Q 26. b)

PD: Yes it can (PD art. 13.7) on grounds relating to the security of the centres and facilities and of the asylum seekers, as per art. 14.7 of the Directive.

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

Practice: There is currently a practice of medical screening of all illegal entrants whenever a mass arrival of aliens occurs in border areas. Asylum seekers who are accepted in reception centres where there is no regular presence of a doctor or nurse are also requested to go through medical screening before they enter a reception centre. In large reception centres where a doctor is present there is also medical screening as soon as they arrive in the centre. If the asylum seeker refuses to be medically screened (which is very rare) and there are signs that his health condition is poor, the responsible of the centre can refuse his access, but in most cases he will try to convince the asylum seeker to be screened. HIV tests are not currently included in the medical screening.

PD: PD art. 8 stipulates that such medical screening can take place only when there are serious indications regarding the possibility of danger to public health due to epidemics or communicable diseases.

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

Practice: Asylum seekers receive full medical care in hospitals and health centres (please see below answer to Q 27 C)

PD: PD 14 provides for the necessary medical and health coverage that includes laboratory and medical examinations in public hospitals or medical centres, provision of pharmaceutical medication following a doctor's prescription and hospital care in public hospitals

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?

Asylum seekers who are in possession of the refugee applicant document ("pink card") have currently access to free medical care in public hospitals.
Apparently, through an internal memo the MHSS has instructed that these services be available to holders of an "in-service note" as well.
In practice, when an asylum seeker presents the refugee applicant document, he/she is treated free of charge as medical authorities will never attempt to verify whether he/she has sufficient resources to cover medical expenses.
The situation in accommodation centres varies. In Lavrio, a doctor is present on a daily basis whereas in Sperhiada, there is no resident doctor but only a nurse who visits the camp on a daily basis. In smaller camps and reception centres, as in Thessaloniki, there are no doctors present. However, the fact that the specific camp is situated within the city of Thessaloniki gives easy access to resident asylum seekers to public hospitals. The situation is the same in the rest of the camps in rural areas.

Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

Practice: According to the Presidential Decree No. 189/1998, asylum seekers can be granted a temporary work permit which is valid while their application is under determination procedure.

In practice it is very difficult for asylum seekers to find employment which has legal status and which offers access to social security insurance. In most cases, the work permit is requested in order that applicants can work as self-employed street vendors.

An asylum seeker holding a valid asylum seeker's document ("pink card") and not staying at a Temporary Residence Center has access to temporary employment in the private sector, provided that the particular employment is of no interest to Greek nationals, other EU citizens or recognized refugees. The length of period that limits the applicant's access to legal employment depends on when the initial interview will take place (as mentioned above, this usually takes more than one year).

The time required for issuance of a work permit is minimal (it can take place immediately or in the worst cases within a few days' delay, following an application and medical test results for transmissible diseases).

PD: PD art. 10 stipulates that asylum-seekers have immediate access to the labour market. In case they reside in a reception centre they must report their gainful employment to the Director of the reception centre.

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

Please see answer to Q 28 A above.

Work permits are of a six month duration, renewable at the same time as the refugee applicant document ("pink card").

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

Please see answers to Q 28 A and B above.
No limitations on maximum work hours exist.

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Please see answers to Q 28 A and B above

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

Practice: Article 3 of PD 189/1998 provides that only recognized refugees may register with the training units of the Manpower Employment Agency on criteria which also apply to Greek citizens. In spite of a gap in the legislation, in practice, asylum-seekers also take part in vocational training programmes.

PD: PD art. 11 provides for full access of asylum applicants to vocational training programmes of private or public organizations under the same terms and conditions as for Greek nationals.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

It would appear that the rules after adoption of the PD are more generous than before.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

Practice: An asylum seeker who stays in a reception centre has no right to employment and, inversely, one who has access to the labour market has no right to reside in a reception centre because he is supposed to earn enough income to afford the costs of lodging and other needs (which is a complete fallacy).

PD: PD art. 12.3 and 12.4 stipulate that provision of part or the total of material reception conditions, including medical and health care, is subject to the asylum applicant not possessing sufficient resources, which is to be established by the authorities in charge of reception. If such resources are proven to exist the asylum applicant's benefits may be reduced to the extent that the needs of the applicants are covered by these resources. Asylum-seekers must contribute to the partial or total coverage of the material costs of reception and medical care.

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

PD: PD art. 17 describes as vulnerable persons minors, disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children and persons who have been subject to torture, rape or other serious forms of psychological, physical or sexual violence.

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

PD: PD art.12.2 provides for subsidies toward disabled asylum applicants (with over 67% of incapacity) who do not reside in reception centres during the period of examination of their application, while PD art. 12.1 specifically mentions the provision for all basic needs of disabled applicants and of applicants in detention.

PD art. 14.3 provides for specialized medical and hospital care for asylum applicants with special needs, such as torture victims and minors, while PD art. 15.7 makes special mention of individuals of the vulnerable category with regard to decisions on refusal, limitation or withdrawal of reception conditions.

Furthermore, there are special provisions for minors, unaccompanied minors and torture and violence victims in PD art.18, 19 and 20 respectively.

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

PD: PD art. 17 only mentions that the “appropriate authorities” and organizations of local government will identify, after individual evaluation of the applicants, those belonging to vulnerable groups and they will provide for their special treatment.

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Please see answer to Q 30 b re: PD art. 14.2

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

Practice: The current practice for minor refugee applicants is based on provisions for treatment of minors in general, since there is no specific legislation referring to minor refugee applicants. The only relevant provision in Greek legislation on asylum is that of Article 1, para. 4 of PD 61/1999 and this simply provides for the appointment of the Public Prosecutor for Juveniles as the Special Provisional Guardian of a juvenile asylum-seeker until a final judgment is delivered on the relevant asylum application.
According to Greek Civil Law, children are considered to be unaccompanied if they reside in the country without their natural parents or without a legal guardian. The Greek Police do not consider minors to be unaccompanied when there is a relative in the country willing to look after the minor.
Article 1(4) of Presidential Decree No. 61/1999 sets out that when asylum applications are submitted by unaccompanied minors, the police authority must submit a request for the Public Prosecutor for Minors or the local First Instance Public Prosecutor to act as a temporary guardian for the minor until the asylum application is decided. Alternatively, the police official conducting the interviews may consider that the minor is mature enough to apply for asylum on their own if they are between 14 and 18 years old.

There are no specific provisions for the processing of asylum claims submitted by unaccompanied minors. However, they are normally considered as vulnerable and their cases examined as a priority.

PD: PD art. 2f (Definitions) defines as an unaccompanied minor asylum seeker any individual under 18 years of age who has entered the Greek territory unaccompanied by an adult responsible for his/her care or who has been left unaccompanied after his/her entry into Greek territory.

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

Practice: All aliens resident in Greece have a right of access to all levels of education. As regards language teaching to refugee and asylum-seeking minors and adults, juveniles children have direct access to primary and secondary education in Greece.

PD: PD art. 9.1 provides for full access of minor children of asylum applicants, as well as of minor applicants, to the Greek educational system, identical to the conditions for Greek nationals.

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

PD: Yes (PD art. 9.2)

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

Practice: Three “intercultural centres” of the Greek Council for Refugees in Athens and education centres run by the Athens Voluntary Work and by Social Work Foundation offer free language classes for refugee and asylum seeker children.

At the Lavrio Centre, the applicants are offered social support, educational programmes including Greek language tuition, mother tongue tuition for children (Kurdish and Farsi), English language tuition for children and adults, legal assistance and counselling.

Furthermore, selected schools in areas of Athens and Thessaloniki with a high percentage of foreign student intake, the Centre for Intercultural Education in Athens University, as well as Aristotelio University in Thessaloniki, run special courses for all foreign children, funded by the Ministry of Education. Language courses are also offered as part of vocational training programmes.

The Greek Council for Refugees has established the centre 'Pyksida' ('Compass') which organises various programmes of integration of asylum applicants and refugees into the local society.

The Hellenic Red Cross has established the Multi-Functional Centre of Social Support and Integration of Refugees in Academia Platonos, Athens. The centre offers services and programmes of social support and social integration to refugees, regardless of nationality and residence.

Since December 2002, a programme funded by the European Social Fund called 'New Beginning' provides asylum seekers and refugees with Greek language tuition and various training seminars to facilitate their integration into the labour market and social life. The Greek Council for Refugees has participated in the implementation of this programme offering logistic, social and legal support to the participants.
Regarding people with special needs, such as unaccompanied minors in particular, a noteworthy reception centre for unaccompanied minor asylum seekers has been operating at Anogia, in Crete since January 2001. This centre is managed and staffed by the Hellenic Youth Foundation, a public organisation under the auspices of the Ministry of Education. Minors are given the opportunity to learn Greek and English and also to gain vocational training.

PD: Yes (PD art. 9.2)

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Practice: Yes

PD: Yes (PD art. 13.3 and 19.2 a)

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

Practice: Rehabilitation services for minors with special needs are currently available in the same facilities that serve adults. Torture victims are offered rehabilitation at the Medical Rehabilitation Centre for Victims of Torture, mentally ill asylum seekers are referred for diagnosis and treatment to various mental health Institutions and disabled asylum seekers are referred to the Medical Rehabilitation Centre for the Disabled

PD: draft PD art. 18.2 mentions that the authorities in charge of reception will assure that minors with special needs will have access to units of social care for the purpose of receiving appropriate psychological help and specialized care.

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

Practice: Please see answer to Q 31 A above

PD: PD art 19. 1 provides for immediate representation of unaccompanied minors by an appointed guardian, through intervention of the Public Prosecutor for Minors. No regular assessment process is mentioned.

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

Practice: The placement of unaccompanied minors takes place through the intervention of NGOs., with adult relatives or in special reception centres.

PD: PD art. 19.2 par a provides for satisfaction of the placement needs of a minor through adult relatives, foster families or in other accommodation centres with special provisions for minors.

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

Practice: The tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors is organized by NGOs and especially the Hellenic Red Cross.

PD: PD art. 19. 2c and art. 19.3 provide for the tracing, in the soonest possible interval, of members of the minor's family and for the training and confidentiality duties of the personnel handling cases of unaccompanied minors.

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

No

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

No

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

In some cases of "emergency" asylum seekers have been accommodated in hotels in Athens. The expenses were covered by the MHSS. This solution might be adopted if normal housing capacities are temporarily exhausted.

Q.32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

Illegal entrants who are apprehended at a border crossing are temporarily kept in border posts (in facilities without fundamental living conditions, such as converted storage areas) and then transferred to the "closed centres" of the area.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

No

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see articles 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[1] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

This is a very complex issue, which is not dealt with by the draft PD. Here, we will present the general structure and principles of the system, which is regulated by other legal texts.

Individuals are not arrested or detained in Greece for the sole purpose of being asylum seekers. In many cases the police arrest aliens, who later apply for asylum, for illegal entry (registered asylum seekers cannot be arrested and detained as illegal entrants).
Individuals who present themselves at a border crossing and ask for asylum, or individuals who have crossed the border and present themselves inland to the authorities on their own volition and claim refugee status are not arrested and detained. (Presidential Decree 61/1999). This has been confirmed in writing to the authors of this report by the MPO[502].

If illegal aliens are arrested in-land, they are detained for up to three months, until they are expelled or tried for illegal entry in the country(Art. 83, para. 2 and 76, para. 3 Act 3386/2005).

Asylum seekers who were arrested as illegal entrants prior to lodging a claim for asylum are usually detained in special detention centres (“closed centres”) or at police stations, and some rejected asylum seekers subject to a deportation order are detained in mainstream prisons. In May 2001, the UN Committee Against Torture criticised Greece for its use of harsh detention conditions for asylum seekers, particularly for those held in police stations, which lack adequate facilities, and in prisons, which are severely overcrowded.

Currently, about 90 percent of people who claim asylum in Greece arrive illegally. Since illegal entrants are liable to be detained, those individuals who only lodge a claim for asylum after an arrest for illegal entry can be detained for the duration of the asylum determination procedure, although if their deportation is not ordered by a court, they cannot be detained for more than three months (see below).

The decision on administrative detention is issued immediately and the decision on administrative expulsion-deportation is issued within three days (“decision of administrative deportation”, Art. 76, para. 3 Act 3386/2005).
If the asylum seeker applies for asylum before the decision on administrative expulsion has been issued, then he is released. If however he decides to apply for refugee status (while in detention) after the decision on his expulsion has been issued the deportation (expulsion) order will then be suspended but detention will continue until a final decision on the asylum application or until the expiry of three months, at which point the applicant will be released from detention.
According to a Ministerial Decision of 1992 (the conformity of which has been questioned in relation to the Constitution) and the new Aliens Act (Article 44(3)), asylum seekers who have applied for asylum after being arrested for an illegal stay in Greece and who are detained by an order of the police authorities ("decision of administrative detention") because a deportation order ("a decision of administrative deportation") has been issued against them, should remain detained until a final decision on their asylum application has been made or until their detention exceeds the three month maximum length of detention.

[502] Letter of 18/10/2006 by Mr. D. Panopoulos, Director General of the Aliens Department , MPO

If the alien lodges an asylum application after the issuance of the deportation and detention order, his/her deportation and/or any measure of return will be suspended, but his/her detention would continue.
After three months expire, the asylum seeker must be released from detention.
If during the three-month period of detention a positive decision on his/her asylum application is reached, he/she must immediately be released from detention and cannot be deported as a refugee (other than under the cessation and withdrawal grounds provided for by the Geneva Convention).
If during the three-month period of detention a final negative decision on his/her asylum application has been reached, the authorities have until the expiration of the three-month deadline to attempt to deport him/her, after which he/she must be released.

According to the provisions of Article 44 of the Aliens Act, an appeal ("objection") against the decision of administrative detention may be lodged by the asylum seeker before the President of the First Instance Administrative Court in the area of his detention.
If the President considers that the asylum seeker is not a threat to public order and that there is no strong likelihood of him/her absconding, he/she will immediately be released.
In practice, many asylum seekers in administrative detention have been released through this procedure, after having claimed that they do not pose a threat to public order since their only offence was illegal entry, and that there is no strong likelihood of absconding.
There are, however, exceptions if an asylum seeker's detention has been ordered by a court.

According to the Ministerial Decision of 1992, if an asylum seeker is detained after a court (and not the police authorities) ordered his deportation, there is no precise time limit to his detention. There are general limits, however, provided for by the Greek Constitution on "lawful conditions for arrest and detention".
When the deportation ordered by a court is impossible or cannot take place in due time for reasons related to 1) international embargo, 2) violations of article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights and/or of article 3 of the UN Convention Against Torture etc., or 3) other material obstacles to the deportation, an appeal ("objections") against the deportation order can be submitted before the competent judicial authority.
Furthermore, Ministerial Decision No. 137954/16-10-2000 provides that the initiative for the release of the detainee should be taken by the Public Prosecutor in all cases where the deportation ordered by a court cannot take place.
In practice, the majority of foreigners in detention are unaware of their legal situation and legal rights. They receive no information about when they will be deported.
The European Court of Human Rights in a recent decision held that Greece lacks the necessary mechanisms to allow detainees to challenge the legality of their detention prior to deportation.
Another problem is that although lawyers have access to detainees, there are bureaucratic hurdles to accessing the centres and visits are often therefore very time-consuming.
In addition, NGOs in the region state that there are a significant number of cases in which asylum seekers are unlawfully being held beyond the three-month maximum detention period.

The European Court of Human Rights has decided in two cases that the detention conditions of illegal immigrants in Greece are in violation of Art. 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights (Kaja v. Greece, application no. 32927/03, Judgment of 27 July 2006; Dougoz v. Greece, application no. 40907/98, Judgment of 6 March 2001).

Please see also the answer to Q 11.

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Practice: In a recent decision of the Council of State (Application 700/2006 against the Minister of Public Order) the administrative decision of assigning a specific reception centre as residence to a refugee claimant, as pre-condition for continuation of processing of his claim, was deemed unlawful since it did not even invoke reasons of public order

PD: PD art. 6.5 stipulates that the Central Authority in collaboration with the MHSS may decide on the residence of asylum applicants in a certain area for reasons of public interest, public order or, when necessary, for the swift and effective monitoring of his/her application. However, this is not a case of confinement.

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

There are no alternatives to detention (such as guarantors or financial guarantees) once an illegal alien is apprehended and arrested for illegal entry/stay.

Asylum-seekers are offered a place in a residence centre or choose their own lodging during the regular procedure.

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

The decision on administrative detention of an arrested illegal alien in view of trial or of expulsion is taken by the Police Director or the Police Director on Immigration Matters (Act 3386/2005, art. 76, par.2 and 3, Art. 83, para. 2 of the same Act).

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

Please see answer to Question 33 A above.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

Aliens who claim refugee status upon arrival in the Greek territory are not supposed to be arrested and detained and this is the case for aliens who appear on their own volition to the Greek authorities at the border or inland and claim asylum.

However, aliens who arrive at a port of entry (airport or sea port) and claim refugee status can be detained for a maximum of 15 days while their application is processed through the Accelerated Procedure.

Arrested illegal aliens against whom an expulsion order is issued (this includes individuals arrested at border crossings or illegal aliens who have been arrested inland and later claim refugee status or even arrested illegal aliens who never claim refugee status) are initially detained in police station detention areas and then sent to two types of "closed detention centres":

1.In normal "detention facilities" for illegal aliens, established and run by the MPO.
There are 7 such facilities, in the Aliens Administration of Attiki of 384 places capacity, the New Detention Centre of the Ellinikon Airport of 123 places capacity, the Old Detention Centre of the Hellinikon Airport of 40 places capacity, the Detention Centre of Amigdaleza of 105 places capacity, the Detention Centre of Aspropirgos of 145 places capacity, the Detention Centre of Amarousion of 38 places capacity and the Aliens Administration of Pireus of 56 places capacity. There is also a detention facility in the island of Kos (detention cells of the police sub-directorate) of a 25 places capacity (when more, they are moved to a hotel), with very bad detention conditions and minimum information to detainees.
These facilities are for short term stay and do not have catering or leisure facilities.

2. In "special reception facilities", which are in effect closed detention centres preserved exclusively for illegal entrants.
These centres are set up by the Ministry of Interior (while reception centres for asylum-seekers are under the authority of the MHSS) and are administered by police authorities (MPO).
There are 7 such facilities, in Vrisika and Dikea of Orestiada of 150 and 450 places capacity respectively (for aliens who enter through the Evros river natural border from Turkey), in Peplos (also for aliens who enter through the Evros river natural border from Turkey), Ferres, Soufli and Tychero of Alexandroupoli of 70 places capacity (reported problems there involve lack of sufficient interpretation services, reports of re-activation of the Greece/Turkey readmission agreement and deportations, problems of access of NGO lawyers), in Vena of Rodopi of 400 places capacity, in Pagani of Lesbos (Mytiline) of 350 places capacity (a relatively new detention facility, one of the "best practice" examples), in Mesinidi of Chios of 40 places capacity, in Vathi of Samos of 120 places capacity and in Tavros of Attiki of 680 places capacity.

These centres do not fulfill conditions for long term stay and have been deemed as unsuitable for their purpose by the Ombudsman. Currently, there are two new centres under construction, one in the village of Filakio of Orestiada to cover the Evros area (capacity of 350 places) and one in the island of Samos. The current facilities in the island of Samos are significantly sub-standard (an old cigarette factory in the centre of town) with insufficient legal counselling to detainees, lack of cooperation with the local hospital for initial and regular medical screening and limited access of detainees to free space (the foreyard).

Illegal aliens who do not claim asylum or asylum seekers whose applications have been rejected and they have not respected the delay for departure from Greece (and they are later apprehended and arrested) are first kept in police station detention areas, along with other inmates and then transferred to those centres, pending deportation.

The only differences among various detention centres at the border and in the territory are with regard to accommodation facilities (certain closed centres, such as in Mersinidi of Chios, are better equipped than others).

It must be mentioned that aliens arriving by sea to the island of Kos are detained in the detention cells of the police station (police sub-directorate) when they do not exceed the number of 25. Any additional detainees are transferred to a hotel. There are numerous problems regarding prolonged periods in bad detention conditions, minimal information to detainees and asylum seekers and refusal by the police to transfer detainees to rented by the Sub-Perfect premises (in the area of Psalidi).

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

According to current legislation only UNHCR representatives have full access to places of detention. NGO representatives are being regularly faced with difficulties in gaining access to asylum seekers in detention.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

There is no automatic judicial review for detainees.

According to article 73, par. 3 Immigration Law 3386/2005, an appeal ("objection") against the decision of administrative detention may be lodged by asylum seekers before the President of the First Instance Administrative Court. Asylum seekers will be released if they do not pose a threat to public order and if their only offence is illegal entry.

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

There are no relevant provisions in the PD. It is understood that the current conditions in cases of detainees who are illegal aliens (as outlined in parts of this report regarding detention) will continue to apply.

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

It cannot be said that exceptional modalities in reception involving detention in "closed centres" are in compliance with art. 14.8 and art. 13.2 of the Directive, as the detention periods are neither short nor are the standards of living of the detainees comparable to those in reception centres.

Reception centres provide support personnel, language courses, social counselling and many other services not available in detention centres.

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

There are no special measures foreseen in the draft PD, other than the general "special treatment" mentioned in art. 17

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Minor asylum seekers are detained together with their relatives and they are accommodated together with their relatives in reception centres.

Unaccompanied minors are detained in some detention centres separately and in some together with adults, for a period of between 7 to 10 days (and some times even longer) which is the shortest period required for identification, referral to reception centres that cater to minors (in collaboration with NGOs) and for informing the Prosecutor for Minors (or the Prosecutor of the First Instance Administrative Court) so that a legal guardian can be assigned to the minor. The information of the MPO mentions that in detention areas lacking specially modified areas for unaccompanied minors there are always measures taken to guarantee that unaccompanied minors are kept separately from adults.[503]

In the area of Attiki unaccompanied minors who are arrested for illegal entry are kept in special areas of police detention centres for a very short period and then they are sent to the Aliens Administration of Attiki where they are lodged separately from adults.

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

PD art. 9.2 provides for education of minors whose access to the education system is impeded due to special reasons (such as detention), through special arrangements.

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

According to the MPO, there can be at any time up to 1, 000 illegal aliens detained in all detention centres of Greece. An approximate 5-10% of this number decide to apply for asylum after an expulsion order is issued.

The MPO had no statistics on the actual number of detainees who applied for asylum.

According to the MPO, the majority of these applications is abusive, as a means of avoiding expulsion, since most well-founded asylum applications are deposited immediately after arrival in the Greek territory. According to our information from NGOs this is not always the case, especially in mass arrivals in the Greek islands, where lack of interpreters and the psychological state of refugee applicants prevents them from immediately applying for asylum.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

The system of providing reception conditions is quite centralised. The funding and supervisory functions belong exclusively to the MHSS.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)

[503] Letter of 18/10/2006 by Mr. D. Panopoulos, Director General of the Aliens Department , MPO

Accommodation or reception centres are private (either owned or rented by NGOs) with the exception of the Lavrio centre which is the only public owned reception centre. They are run by NGOs with financial support from the State (which is either exclusively State funds or it also includes ERF funding)

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?

There are currently ten such centres (table provided by UNHCR Athens, updated to April 2006).

Area / Centre	Responsible agency	Maximum capacity	Types of beneficiaries	Main Functions
Lavrion (Eastern Attica)	Hellenic Red Cross	320	Mixed	Reception and accommodation of general groups of asylum seekers according to specified order of priority
Sperhiada (Prefecture of Fthiotida-near the city of Elassona)	Hellenic Red Cross	110	Families	Provision of accommodation to asylum seekers and their families
Anogia (Crete)	National Youth Foundation	25	Unaccompanied children	Provision of accommodation to unaccompanied minor asylum seekers
Iolaos (Athens)	Greek Council for Refugees	11	Psychiatric cases	Provision of specialized medical treatment for asylum seekers with mental and psychiatric
Aspropyrgos (Western Attica)	Hellenic Institute of Solidarity (ELINAS)	130	Mixed	Provision of accommodation to all asylum seekers
Thessaloniki	Social Solidarity	90	70 places for families and 20 for unaccompanied children	Provision of accommodation to all asylum seekers
Ios (Athens)	Voluntary Work Athens	25	3 four or five-member families and 10 single men	Provision of accommodation to asylum seekers and their families

Housing project “STEGI”	PRAKSIS	20	Mixed	Provision of accommodation to all asylum seekers
Makrinitsa (Pilion)	ARSIS	30 (with the possibility of including another 5)	Unaccompanied children	Provision of accommodation to unaccompanied minor asylum seekers
Athens	ARSIS	10	Unaccompanied children	Provision of accommodation to unaccompanied minor asylum seekers

Unaccompanied minors seeking asylum can also be accommodated in various State-run Centres of Child Care operating under the authority of the Ministry of Health and Social Solidarity.

Furthermore, a programme of emergency assistance run by the Greek Council for Refugees (NGO) provides accommodation in hotels for asylum seekers transferred from other centres to Athens for specific reasons (e.g. medical treatment).

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

No such rules exist.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?

No such body exists.

Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

Reception centres are supervised by the Ministry of Health and Social Solidarity of the central State.

PD art. 16 provides for a system of guidance, monitoring and control of the system of reception conditions by the MHSS, whereby the MHSS is in charge of the human resources in the peripheral services of health and welfare in terms of training, funding and collaboration with the appropriate authorities for the realization and monitoring of reception conditions. The appropriate authorities, which are not specifically enumerated in the PD, are supposed to review on an annual basis the application of the provisions of the PD and to submit the relevant reports.

Whether the MHSS and the appropriate authorities will discharge of their duties in an effective manner according to the provisions of the PD remains to be seen.

Q.39. B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?

No such standards exist.

Q.39. C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?

Under the current practice, representatives of the Department of Awareness and Social Solidarity of the MHSS pay visits to reception centres every three months, in addition to the regular visits of the Body of Inspectors of Health and Welfare.
Furthermore, UNHCR and the Ombudsman also visit reception centres and provide their observations to the government

Q.39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?

Practice: Under the current practice, the administrations of all reception centres prepare reports every three months and they forward them to the MHSS (Department of Awareness and Social Solidarity).
These reports are for internal use only and they do not become public.

PD: Relevant, albeit more general, is PD art. 16 par.2, which provides for the obligation of competent authorities to submit reports on the implementation of the PD.

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

According to a July 2006 report provided by the MHSS to the European Commission the total number of asylum applicants who were accommodated in reception centres in 2005 till May 2006 was 1,109.

However, there are no figures available regarding the rest of asylum applicants who were covered by reception conditions but were accommodated in lodgings of their own choice.

UNHCR reports that the total number of asylum applications for 2005 was 9,050.

Q.40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?

The total budget for reception conditions in 2005 was 2,561,896.07 euro (1,949,501 euro from the MHSS and 612,395.07 from the ERF).

Q.40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?

According to MHSS figures for 2005 the average cost for Lavrio reception centre was 3.5 euro per asylum seeker per diem (or 1277.5 euro per year), while for the other reception centres it was 5.5 euro per asylum seeker per diem (or 2005.5 euro per year).

Q.40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

Some reception centres (Lavrio, Sperhiada) are financed exclusively through the state (central government) budget while others are co-financed by the state and the European Refugee Fund (ERF). There are no other actors financing reception conditions for refugees.

Q.40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?

Please see answer to Q 39 A above.

According to PD art. 16.1 par. c the MHSS provides the necessary resources in connection with the material reception conditions.

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

The total number of persons working on reception conditions (excluding professionals such as doctors and social workers, who do not provide full-time services to reception centres) is 113 (108 employees in the reception centres and 5 employees at the MHSS). This number does not include the numerous NGO workers who provide assistance to refugee applicants.

Q.41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?

PD: According to PD art. 13.6 the personnel of reception centres will be properly trained through seminars organized by the UNHCR and the MHSS or other specialized organizations.

Q.41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?

There are no such special rules, besides the deontology rules of individual professions (social workers, doctors etc.), which include the client confidentiality principle and the provision of article 2 par 12 of PD 61/1999 whereby declarations made by a refugee claimant in the course of the application procedure are of confidential nature and treated according to the principle of "sensitive data" of the Greek law.

However, the reception centre of Thessaloniki run by Social Solidarity, operates on a complete set of by-laws that covers matters of deontology with particular emphasis on confidentiality.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

There was no problem with the translation of the directive.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

No such rules existed in a single legal instrument, The system has been very fragmented.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

Definitely yes

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

No such important changes have been detected.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

No such debate has yet taken place and one is not anticipated since the transposition of the Receptions Directive will take place by Presidential Decree.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

The most interesting example of a more generous rule than that of the Directive concerns the immediate access of asylum-seekers to the labour market of Greece.

It can be said that, overall, transposition of the Directive will make internal rules clearer. The PD includes the more generous provisions among those proposed by the Directive.

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?

Weaknesses (under the current system, excluding the draft PD):

Human rights organizations have raised their concern that in practice border authorities do not differentiate between undocumented asylum seekers and irregular migrants who attempt to enter Greece by land and in the process of returning those individuals back to the country they entered from they deny asylum seekers access to the asylum procedure.

As a result, most asylum seekers enter Greece illegally and the vast majority of applications are made in-country.

In theory, the police must interview an asylum seeker within three months from submission of his claim (Presidential Decree 61/1999) but in practice this appointment is postponed several times, resulting often in delays of over one year. During this period the applicant is protected from readmission (refoulement) but does not enjoy the social rights and benefits enjoyed by refugee claimants whose examination of application has already begun, especially the right to work. This unfair practice leaves asylum seekers without an asylum seeker's status, which would allow them to seek accommodation or take up work and without any means of subsistence for periods exceeding one year.

The provision of art 4 par 1a of PD 189/1998 prohibiting asylum seekers from receiving a work permit if they reside in a reception centre is counter-productive to the policy of integration of asylum seekers to the society, it encourages institutionalization and it deprives individuals from obtaining necessary means of subsistence through their personal labour. It also deprives individuals from a sense of self-worth thus contributing further to their isolation and compounding the psychological traumas of their refugee experience.

The isolation of many reception centres (e.g. Aspropyrgos, Sperhiada, Makrinitsa) due to lack of transportation services results in asylum seekers' restricted access to education, medical services, recreational activities and their integration in the local communities.

Consultation on employment issues is not actively promoted in the reception centres and the informal job placement assistance only results in temporary or part-time employment.

There is no systematic legal counselling programme other than the legal support provided by the legal department of the Greek Council for Refugees (NGO) which only covers basic needs of asylum seekers.

In most centres there is no preventive medical treatment and when a medical problem arises asylum seekers are referred to nearby clinics or hospitals.

Greek language lessons are offered in most centres but there are no educational provisions for vocational training or cultural awareness. Children's access to primary education in Greek schools is delayed due to legal or bureaucratic issues (eg. Lavrion) while in other occasions enrolment is limited since children prefer to seek work in order to cover fundamental needs.

The lack of professional translators presents one more problem, while psychosocial support for the social integration of asylum seekers is lacking as centres do not benefit from the services of social workers and psychologists (trained in asylum issues).

A general problem closely related with the transposition and implementation of the Directive is the insufficiency of infrastructure and capacities with respect to reception conditions. Despite the formal transposition measures that are envisaged by the PD, the truth is that the infrastructure, including reception centres, is insufficient, and the response to the public order authorities to the presence of asylum-seekers is some times inappropriate (see for instance, the 2005 Human Rights Report on Greece by the US Department of State http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/hrrpt/2005/61651.htm)

There is a serious problem in that Greece does not apply at all the Directive to places where asylum seekers are detained. Please refer to the recent report of the European Parliament:

The European Parliament sharply criticised conditions in Greek detention facilities in a report adopted by the European Parliament's Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs (LIBE) on 17 July, 2007.
The report comprises observations and findings of a LIBE Delegation that visited detention centres on the Greek island of Samos and in Athens on 14-15 June (See article in ECRAN Weekly Update of 25 June 2007). MEPs found inhumane detention conditions in over-crowded, unhygienic and seriously understaffed facilities, which in their view “represent a complete disregard for the obligations established by the Reception and Procedures directives”. Especially alarming was the regular detention of unaccompanied minors in solitary confinement as well as different detention periods for different nationalities. Further concerns were raised about the availability of medical services, interpretation and legal assistance.

The MEPs met the relevant Greek Ministers as well as representatives of Greek NGOs to discuss the situation of asylum seekers and irregular migrants held in detention.

During a meeting with the Greek Ombudsman, Mr Giorgios KAMINIS and his deputy, Mr Andreas TAKIS (14.06.2007), the ombudsman said that legislation foresees that an asylum seeker can only be kept in a detention centre by way of exception. However, the trend is the other way around. More specifically the Ombudsman identified the following problems with regard to the protection of persons seeking asylum:

- Issues of erroneous interpretation of the existing framework such as the Geneva Convention on the Status of Refugees.
- The expulsion and detention of asylum seekers (statutory measures for the expulsion and detention of irregular migrants are applied to those seeking asylum as well).
- The failure of the police to safeguard the exercise of the right of appeal and judicial protection of asylum seekers.
- The preconditions for discontinuing the examination of an asylum application.
- The lack of effective access to asylum procedures in harbours, airport transit zones and foreign flagged ships calling at Greek ports.
- The inability or unwillingness of the police to apply the regulations relating to the procedures for granting political asylum, even when these have been clarified via circulars.
- People applying for asylum while already being in detention in a closed centre are in general not moved to the open centre, but instead remain in detention in the closed centre.

Strengths:

Strength of the system under the PD is the unconditional recognition of the right of asylum-seekers to work, and the right to free medical care by the National Health System.

The establishment of independent state-funded administrative bodies such as the Ombudsman's Office [504]and the National Committee for Human Rights (NCHR)[505] according to similar European models, with the task to control state authorities' conduct toward Greek citizens and aliens residing in Greece, have been positive developments in refugee protection and the relationship between the state and individuals' human rights.

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States

The right to free medical care by the National Health System. (and the right to work immediately according to the PD).

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answer.

QUESTIONNAIRE FOR THE NATIONAL REPORT ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DIRECTIVE :
RECEPTION CONDITIONS OF 27 JANUARY 2003

IN: Hungary
by Boldizsár Nagy
nagyboldi@ajk.elte.hu

This report is a substantively revised text of the 2006 report as the new legislation has been adopted in the course of 2007. Since the most recent piece of substantive legislation, the government decree containing the implementing rules of the Asylum Act only was published in mid-November 2007 the report could not be produced earlier. As the new system will only enter into force in 2008 no practical experience with the new system exists yet.

The reporter would like to thank all of those who helped to present his previous report and again to Ms Ágnes Ambrus and Julia Mink, who made substantive efforts to get the update ready

Abbreviations:

AA = Asylum Act of 2007

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

Hungary is a unitary state. The competence to regulate matters affecting individual rights of natural persons primarily rests with the Parliament which adopts Acts.[506] Acts may empower the government to adopt Decrees implementing the Acts, and the Government, in turn may entitle the Ministers to adopt decrees implementing the Decrees of the Government. In the asylum context the competent Minister until June 2006 was the Minister for the Interior.

Following the elections of April 2006 a new governmental structure was adopted by the elected Parliament. The Government was approved on 9 June 2006. Act LV. of 2 June 2006 on the listing of the ministries changes the former administrative structure. The former Ministry of the Interior is re-named as Ministry of Local Administration and Regional Development, loosing competence in all police and asylum matters, whereas the former Ministry of Justice's competences are extended to include control over Police, Border Guards, as well as over aliens-policing and asylum. Accordingly the designation is also new: Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

Two levels were chosen. Parliament adopted the Asylum Act No. LXXX of 2007 (henceforth: AA) comprehensively transposing the EU acquis (including the procedures directive), Government adopted the rules implementing decree Government Decree 301/2007. (XI.9.) on the implementation of Act LXXX of 2007 on Asylum (henceforth GD)

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

The transposition has been a careful and well-controlled and documented process.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

They have been adopted.

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

There is a version of the AA which contains detailed footnotes showing the correspondence between the Act and the elements of the EU acquis. Unfortunately it is not in the public domain, but the author of this report had the benefit of consulting it.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

As the rules only appeared in July and November 2007, no academic reflection is available yet.

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

As the rules only appeared in July and November 2007, no jurisprudence on the new rules is available yet.

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

In reality the reception conditions of the asylum seeker depend largely on the circumstances in which she applied for asylum.

The ideal-type asylum seeker, who voluntarily and early on communicates her intention of seeking the protection of Hungary as a rule will receive accommodation and subsistence in one of the open reception centers operated by the refugee directorate of the Office of Immigration and Nationality of the Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement (henceforth: OIN[507]) (located in towns of Bicske, Békéscsaba and Debrecen.) The exception is if the asylum seeker has accommodation provided by other actors (family, friends, churches etc.) Practically there have been hardly any such cases until recently, but in the very few instances the asylum seeker is entitled to stay there. According to most recent data the number of such (mostly Chinese and Vietnamese) applicants is rising, but the widespread perception is that these are applicants who already lived and worked in Budapest and exploit the refugee status determination procedure to legalise their stay.

Most of the asylum seekers in reality are apprehended while violating aliens law, either trying to cross the border without the necessary prerequisites or stopped as persons without a right to stay or work. In their case the aliens police procedure aimed at sanctioning the violation starts first. During the aliens police procedure the persons may express their need for protection and apply for refugee status. (§ 62 (7) GD) Alternatively in the process threatening with expulsion they may reveal that the return to their country of origin would entail a threat of inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment or a breach of any other norm which must not even indirectly (by refoulement) be violated. If this happens the aliens police procedure or – more frequently – the implementation of the already adopted expulsion order - is suspended. If the persons applied for refugee status the determination procedure – in front of another branch of the OIN – is started. If the person claims the threat of torture, inhuman or degrading treatment or death penalty (without applying for refugee status) then that will be investigated by the aliens policing authority. In fact the latter scrutiny is an ex officio obligation of the expelling authority, even without a claim being made by the "illegal foreigner". (§ 51 of the Act II of 2007 on the entry and stay of third country nationals henceforth: AESTCN)

According to the new system applicable from 1 January 2008 (henceforth 2008 system) detention of the asylum seeker is limited to the duration of the so-called "preliminary assessment procedure" which is limited to 15 days. (§ 55 (3) AA) At the end of that , the refugee authority shall designate at the request of the person concerned, a private residence as his/her place of residence. If no such request is articulated, the refugee authority shall designate a reception centre or another accommodation facility maintained on the basis of a contract as the place of residence.

Q.11. Q11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

In general reception conditions do not depend on the "stages" of the procedure.

However, the 2008 system mentions a "reception centre for the accommodation of those under preliminary assessment procedure"(GD § 64 (3)), which has not been identified yet. Probably it will be one of the existing reception centres offering the same services and conditions as the others.

There is one more factor which in principle could (and in the past did) influence the actual reception conditions. This is the so-called airport procedure (AA § 72, and GD § 97.) Asylum seekers arriving without papers or with falsified documents (in general not meeting entry conditions at the international airport) may be subjected to the airport procedure, which has to be completed in eight days. In case of an airport procedure the OIN's refugee directorate is informed about the presence of the asylum seeker and the interview is conducted before admittance to Hungary. Entry may be denied and if so, then during the airport procedure the asylum seeker is accommodated at the so-called transit centre where other persons without the right to enter or awaiting removal stay. However, if the in-merit procedure follows the preliminary assessment procedure (i.e. no Dublin rule is applied and the application is not ineligible) then the asylum seeker is admitted to the country.

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

In general material reception conditions are only provided if the applicant has no means to sustain herself.

Material conditions are provided in kind. Neither vouchers, nor money is used, except for the monthly allowance of the applicant and for the reimbursement of justified travel costs (e.g. attending the court hearing) or the travel costs of voluntarily returning home. Travel on train in second class is free by the force of Government Decree 85/2007 (IV.25.) if the asylum seeker already has a residence permit and a justification document from the refugee authority. (The humanitarian residence permit must be issued within three days from submission of the application. In that three days he/she may travel once free of charge) The monthly allowance is due in the second month after the start of the in-merit procedure. Its sum is 25% of the old age pension minimum. As the old age pension minimum on 31 December 2007 is 27 130 HUF (approximately 110 euros) the monthly allowance amounts to 25-30 euros. (Depending on the HUF/euro exchange rate). This is a remarkable change to the previous 8pre 2008) system in which minors under the age of 14 were not entitled to the monthly allowance.

In fact recently in all reception centers self-catering units were created in order to change material reception into self-maintenance. These cooking kitchens are often used, but the basic care remained the full board provision. As no money is earmarked for self catering, those who want to use this opportunity must do it from their own wealth or income.

Supprimé : One travel on a long distance coach is also free, but only with a special certificate of OIN. (same decree, § 10 82).)

Supprimé : from the third month" of staying at the reception centre, and is provided to asylum seekers above the age of 14.

Supprimé : The experience of the Southern Slav wars has an imprint on GD 25/1998: it envisages that camps and other accommodation may operate on the basis of contracts. Should that occur they are supposed to provide the same in kind provision as the presently operative reception centers.

Supprimé : (§7 (3))¶

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

Opinions on the appropriate answer to this question would show a certain spread. Observers would fully agree that basic needs are met, subsistence in any condition is guaranteed, shelter, food, medical care, education - according to the domestic rules in force – is assured.

Life in the open reception centers normally offers an adequate standard of living, however when it comes to details, shortcomings show themselves. (Limited social assistance, limited leisure activity offers, difficulties for groups with special needs.)

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. Q 13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

Yes, as the refugee authority is obliged to investigate if the person is a Geneva Convention refugee even if the person has only applied for subsidiary protection status. (AA§ 58 and commentary thereto)

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

They are extended to all individual applicants.

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

There are no such rules as there is no possibility to apply at representations.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

Yes, asylum seekers get the reception conditions from the moment of application except for the monthly allowance (Pocket money) (GD § 16 and 17 (3)) As to the conditions see response to Q 21 A.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect)

Reception conditions only end when the judicial review leads to the reaffirmation of the refusal of status. (But bear in mind that there is no appeal against the administrative decision, so the whole process only consists of one administrative and one judicial phase.) see AA § 27

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Yes. According to AA§30 (1) g) reception conditions may be revoked or denied if the applicant "repeatedly submits an application for recognition on unchanged factual grounds". According to GD § 35 essentially all conditions may be revoked or denied, except the health care and the reception conditions grated to persons with special needs. Exempt is also the language training provided to children above five years of age serving their school participation.

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Yes, about the full set of provisions and benefits they are entitled to in accordance with the AA and the GD, of all the obligations they must fulfil relating to reception conditions and of organisations providing specific support or legal assistance throughout reception.

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

It is provided in writing

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

It must be. GD § 17 (4). No practice exists yet, based on the 2008 system

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Yes. The refugee authority must decide on granting or denying the reception conditions by the end of the preliminary assessment procedure. (Until that moment they are automatically granted) In principle the preliminary assessment procedure must not last longer than 15 days – so the RD requirement is met.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?

Assumedly there will be since according to § 17 (4) the information provided in writing must include "organisations providing specific support or legal assistance throughout the reception period"

Q. 18. B. Is the information provided to the asylum seekers, and if yes, in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

In writing. (see responses above)

Q. 18. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify if possible the list of languages in which it is available.

Yes. see response to Q 17/A

Q. 18. D. How many organisations are active in that field in your Member State?

The major players are:

Hungarian Helsinki Committee Refugee Program (www.helsinki.hu) It provides free legal counselling and representation in the refugee status determination procedures. HHC is also instrumental in running refugee legal clinics – a special cooperation of law students, lawyers and academia.

Menedek Association for Migrants (www.menedek.hu) engaged in individual social counselling, occasionally providing that service on behalf of OIN on contractual basis and running community programs (clubs for women, children);

Cordelia Foundation for the Rehabilitation of Torture Victims (www.cordelia.hu) offers psychological treatment and rehabilitation.

There are approximately half a dozen other NGO-s which are involved in refugee-related activities, including sports, culture, intercultural education, community development. some of their activities may involve applicants.

Q.19. Documentation of asylum seekers (see article 6):

Q.19. A. What kind of document is delivered to the asylum seeker? Explain the legal value of this document (just a certification of the status as asylum seeker or also prove of identity?) (see §1 of article 6 which is a mandatory provision)

According to AA § 5 (1) a) (1) "A person seeking recognition shall be entitled to stay in the territory of the Republic of Hungary under the conditions set forth in the present Act and to a permit authorising stay in the territory of the Republic of Hungary as defined in separate legal rule;". The 2007 Act on the entry and stay of third country nationals expands on this in its § 29 (1) c which, then, in turn is implemented by §§ 70 (2) and 71 () of the Government Decree 114/2007 implementing the AESTCN. Their combined effect is that the asylum seeker receives a so called "humanitarian residence permit" entitling for a stay for a year.

Q.19. B. Are there situations or specific cases in which another equivalent document or even no document is issued? (in particular is there an exception for "procedures to decide on the right of the applicant legally to enter the territory" as made possible by §2 of article 6)?

No

Q.19. C. For how long is this document in principle valid and is it necessary to renew it after a certain period?

The document is valid for a year. AESTCN, § 29 (2) a).

Q.19. D. What is the deadline for the delivery of that document? Is the mandatory deadline of 3 days set by article 6, §1 respected[508]?

Yes, 114/2007 Government Decree, § 70 (2)

Q.19. E. Is it possible for an asylum seeker to get a travel document for serious humanitarian reasons (see §5 of article 6 which is an optional provision)?

There is no rule on how applicants could get access to a travel document.

Q.19. F. Is there a central system of registration of asylum seekers and is it or not separate from the registration of aliens? If yes, describe it briefly (content) and indicate in particular if it is an electronic database.

There is a central digital registration, separate from the aliens' registration. This is how the AA describes it:

"Chapter X
DATA MANAGEMENT
81. §
The refugee authority shall manage the personal details of refugees, beneficiaries of subsidiary and temporary protection and persons seeking recognition (hereinafter collectively referred to as "persons coming under the effect of the present Act") and the data related to their residence, the provisions and benefits which they are entitled to as well as any changes therein in the refugee records for the purpose of

a) establishment of the existence of the legal status of refugee, beneficiaries of subsidiary or temporary protection and providing the benefits which are attached thereto,
b) establishment of the entitlement to the provisions and benefits determined in the present Act and in separate legal rule,
c) identification,
d) prevention of parallel procedures and
e) establishment of the multiple submission of applications.

For the purposes of the present Chapter, the following details of the persons coming under the effect of the present Act shall qualify as natural identification data:
a) surname(s) and first name(s);
b) surname(s) and first name(s) at birth;
c) former surname(s) and first name(s);
d) pseudonym(s);
e) place and date of birth;
f) sex;
g) mother's surname(s) and first name(s);
h) current and former nationality, nationalities or stateless status;
i) in case of refugee or beneficiary of subsidiary protection, the personal identifier.

(1) The refugee records shall contain the following details of a person coming under the effect of the present Act:
a) natural identification data;
b) facial image;
c) fingerprints of persons older than fourteen years of age;
d) if the applicant is an unaccompanied minor, this fact,
e) if the applicant was taken over in the Dublin procedure, this fact and the date of the take-over,
f) the date of submission of the application for recognition as refugee or beneficiary of subsidiary or temporary protection as well as the date of the withdrawal of such application,
g) the fact and the date of recognition as refugee or beneficiary of subsidiary or temporary protection, the name of the authority or court issuing the recognition decision as well as the number of persons covered by the decision,
h) the fact, reason and date of rejecting the application for recognition, the discontinuation of the procedure and the revocation of the recognition; the deadline to comply with the obligation to leave the country, the name of the authority or court that made the decision, and the number of persons covered by the decision,
i) the fact and reason of the hand-over of the applicant in Dublin procedure, the dates of the resolution providing for the hand-over as well as of the actual hand-over, and the number of persons covered by the resolution,
j) marital status, occupation, education;
k) place of residence, place of stay and accommodation;

l) name of country of origin;
m) from among data relating to racial or ethnic affiliation, membership of particular social group, religion or political convictions, those which the person referred to in the reasoning part of his/her application;
n) data of identification and travel documents (identification mark and number of document, term of validity, date of issuance, name of issuing authority, place of issuance);
o) natural identification data of family members arriving together with him/her and the legal title of residence in Hungary;
p) data relating to his/her income and pecuniary situation which were contained in his/her declaration, the document supplied by him/her or in the data supplied by the tax authority and/or the agency fulfilling social security responsibilities."

Q.20. Residence of asylum seekers :

Q.20. A. Is in principle an asylum seeker free to move on the entire territory of your Member State or only to a limited part of it and in case, which part? (see article 7, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

According to §48 (2) of the AA during the preliminary assessment procedure (the first 15 days) "[t]he applicant may only leave the reception centre in particularly justified cases, with the permission of the refugee authority, provided that his/her absence does not prevent the performance of the relevant procedural acts" After the preliminary assessment procedure asylum seekers are free to move, (AA 5§ (1) a) If they live in the reception centre they can be away from 8 a.m. till 22. p.m. without notice. If they indicate the intention to be absent for a longer period it is also their right, but absence must be approved by the reception centre and the request has to be submitted three days before departure. No limitations whatsoever apply in terms of the part of the country to be visited.

Supprimé : around if they are not in detention

Q.20. B. About the place of residence (see §2 of article 7): explain to which extend the person is free to choose her residence and if this depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance processing of application, attribution of reception conditions,…).

During the preliminary assessment procedure applicants must live in the reception centre (unless in detention) Thereafter asylum seekers may stay outside the reception centers, but their place of residence has to be designated/approved by the refugee authority AA § 56. According to the GD (§ 32 (4) and (5) unaccompanied minors are to be accommodated in the appropriate child protection institution, in a reception centre which guarantees their separate accommodation or with a relative who does not qualify as a close family member, but undertakes in writing to accommodate the minor and take care of and provide for the minor

Q.20. C. About the place of reception (meaning where the asylum seeker has to stay to benefit from reception conditions) (see § 4 of article 7): explain which are the general rules about the determination of this place (to which extend are the decisions determining the place taken individually and do they take into account the personal situation of the asylum seeker?) and to which extend the person is free to choose it and if it depends of the stage of the asylum procedure (for instance before and after admissibility); if there are constraints limiting the choice, explain which ones and their reasons (for instance attribution of reception conditions, processing of the application,…).

Beyond the idea that the preliminary assessment period be spent in a centre (to be designated) there are no rules on the placement, it depends on the availability of places and other non-normative conditions. (E.g. are buildings being renovated or not.) There was only one exceptional period in which asylum seekers of a certain national background were collected at an ad hoc centre designed for that specific group. (Afghans after September 11 2001)

Material conditions are only available of the applicant lives regularly in the centre. (GD § 20 (1)

Occasionally -as a sanction – asylum seekers are transferred from one reception centre to the other.

Q.20. D. If all asylum seekers are not placed in accommodation centres because of capacity limits, explain how the persons are distributed between accommodation centres and other accommodation facilities (which authority takes the decisions, on the basis of which elements, can that decision be appealed by the asylum seeker,…)

There is no current practice on this issue. Back in the early 1990s ad hoc reception centers had been set up in former military barracks, etc.
The 2008 system envisages that beyond the actual reception centres other "accommodation or camps operated on a contract basis" may also (legally) qualify as reception centres. GD § 12 (4). That, probably, is a measure of precaution for inflows exceeding the normal capacity limits. (Note the term: „camp"!)

Q.20. E. How can an asylum seeker ask to leave temporarily the place of residence or of reception or an assigned area? How is the individual AND impartial character of the decision ensured? (see §5 of article 7 which is a mandatory provision)

According to § 48 (2) AA, during the preliminary assessment procedure the applicant can only leave the centre with the express consent of the refugee authority in particularly justified cases. Thereafter temporary (daily) leave is free.

Q.21. Q.21. A. Do rules on reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions exist in internal legislation and if yes in which cases (mention in particular if there are cases not foreseen by article 16, § 1 and 2 which are optional provisions)? Distinguish in your answer between cases of reduction and withdrawal and explain which conditions can be reduced and if access to emergency health care is always ensured as requested by article 16, §4, last sentence.

Yes, they do exist. The AA contains a separate subsection, entitled " Revocation and Denial of Conditions of Reception"

"(1) Except as set out in subsection (2)-(3), the conditions of reception provided for a person seeking recognition may be revoked or denied if the person seeking recognition
a) repeatedly or grossly violates his/her obligation of cooperation;
b) leaves the accommodation facility designated for him/her for a period of more than twenty-four hours without the permission of the refugee authority;
c) repeatedly or grossly violates the rules of conduct which govern at the designated accommodation facility;
d) has departed from the designated accommodation facility for an unknown destination and a period of fifteen days has elapsed since his/her departure;
e) issues an untrue declaration with respect to his/her property and/or income in the interest of acquiring entitlement to the material conditions of reception or refuses to issue a declaration;
f) manifests seriously violent behaviour because of which criminal or minor offence procedure is initiated against him/her;
g) repeatedly submits an application for recognition on unchanged factual grounds.
(2) The conditions of reception shall not be revoked or denied in case of persons requiring special treatment.
(3) The emergency health care services shall be provided even in the event of the revocation or denial of the conditions of reception referred to in subsection (1).
(4)..."

The implementing GD further specifies the permissive rule ("may be revoked or denied")

"Article 35

(1) Regarding provisions and benefits listed in Article 15, pursuant to Article 30 (1) of the Act the following may be withdrawn or refused:
a) accommodation and care at the reception centre, except for language education for minors older than five years with a view to facilitate participation in public education,
b) monthly expense allowance and
c) travel allowance.

(2) Accommodation and care at a reception centre may not be withdrawn from or refused to an asylum seeker in need when lodging his or her application for asylum for the first time."

From the context of these rules follows that health care can not be denied or reduced and in general those who are undergoing their first procedure (i.e. it is not a repeat application) and need the provision of accommodation and care at the centre can not be removed from the centre.

Q.21. B. Has article 16, §2 dealing with refusal of reception conditions for unreasonably late applications for asylum been transposed by your Member State (or was this case already applicable before transposition)? Are there cases in practice?

Not. In fact the 2008 system removed the accelerated procedure from the regulations. Late submission is mentioned in the AA § 59 h), but even in that case the full in-merit procedure has to be conducted. The commentary to the act confirms this.

Q.21. C. How is it ensured that decisions of reduction or withdrawal are taken individually, objectively AND in particular impartially (for instance through and independent arbitrator) (see article 16, §4 which is a mandatory provision)?

The AA in § 30 sates:
4) The refugee authority shall decide on the revocation or denial of the conditions of reception in an order. The revocation or denial set forth in the order shall be proportionate to the breach of obligation referred to in subsection (1).
(5) After its decision regarding the revocation or denial of the conditions of reception becomes final and absolute, the refugee authority shall - upon request by the applicant or ex officio - regularly review the necessity of the maintenance of such revocation or denial."

The implementing GD expressly refers back to the RD language when it states in § 36 (6):

"Decisions regarding the withdrawal or refusal of reception conditions or the restitution or granting thereof shall be based on the individual assessment of the situation of the asylum seeker concerned"

Q.21. D. Is statement 14/03 adopted by the Council at the same moment as the directive respected (see the document attached to our sending)?

Yes, it is.

Q.21. E. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements on cases of reduction, withdrawal or refusal which have been taken, and if yes, what has been the outcome?

Not yet under the 2008 system

Q.22. Q.22. A. Appeal against a negative decision relating to the granting of benefits or based on article 7 (see article 21 which is a mandatory provision): indicate against which decision an appeal can be introduced, describe the system of appeal in general and include in particular in your answer the information given to asylum seekers about possibilities of appealing, deadline for appealing, if the appeal has or not a suspensive effect, if there are different steps (for instance first an administrative appeal and in particular if the guarantee of an appeal before a judicial body in the last instance is respected)?

This might be a weak spot in the 2008 system. According to § 31 there is no separate appeal against an order withdrawing or denying conditions of reception. That order may only be challenged in the judicial review request against a decision not to start the in-merit procedure, the substantive decision on recognition or the decision on terminating the procedure.
If the asylum seeker is in detention at the time of submitting her application, the preliminary assessment procedure is conducted while the person is detained. However, at the end of the maximum 15 days procedure if the application is eligible for substantive investigation (in-merit procedure) detention ends as the aliens policing authority must terminate it by force of law. AA § 55 (3).
During the detention period the rules of aliens policing apply,. Any detention, longer than 72 hours must be approved by the court, whether the detained submits a complaint requesting that or not. §§ 57 and 58 of the AESTCN and §§ 126-129 of GD 114/2007 implementing the AETCN.

Q.22. B. Explain which are the possibilities for asylum seekers to benefit from legal assistance when they introduce such an appeal (see article 21, §2 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to Member States)?

Asylum seekers who request the judicial review of the detention decision may hire a lawyer. The Hungarian Helsinki Committee, a leading NGO does maintain a network of lawyers who personally or through students assistants working in a legal clinic regularly visit detention facilities and make their services available free of charge.
This practice has been confirmed by AA § 68 which ensures that applicants may appoint representatives and that applicants arrested or detained must be accessible to NG

Q.22. C. Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

There are none.

Q.22. D. Is a mechanism of complain for asylum seekers about quality of receptions conditions in general (even if they are not personally concerned) organised? If yes, before which authority? Is it linked to the system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions (see below question n° 39)?

There is no such system of "general complaint" by the non-affected persons, representatives of groups. Individual complaints can be submitted to the head of the reception centre. Against that decision a further complaint or request may be lodged with the general Director of the OIN. This might change when the detailed rules on the reception centres will be adopted (replacing the earlier Decree of the Minister.)

6. RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.23. Family unity of asylum seekers: define how a family is defined in relation with article 2, (d) which is a mandatory provision and explain how housing is provided to a family (see articles 8 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space to member States and 14, §2, (a) which is a mandatory provision).

The AA in the section determining the meaning of certain expressions (§ 2) defines "family member". According to § 2 i) it refers to foreigner's spouse, minor child (including adopted and foster child) and parent(s) if the person seeking recognition is a minor.

Supprimé : immediate

Supprimé : f

The Hungarian definition of the family follows that of the RD inasmuch it does not include the child of the spouse (who is not the child of the applicant). Unmarried couples in a stable relationship do not qualify as family according to the text of the rule.

The AA of 2007 has a new provision clearly enunciating the principle of family unity (AA § 4 (2)). Further, § 7 of the AA again stresses the unity of the family, stating that "for the purpose of maintaining family unity, upon application, the family members of a foreigner recognised as a refugee ... shall be recognised as refugees. ... If a child is born in the territory of the Republic of Hungary to a foreigner recognised as a refugee, upon application, the child shall be recognised as refugee." § 13 (2) repeats this rule mutatis mutandis in connection with the beneficiaries of subsidiary protection, but sets as a requirement that the family member's application be submitted together with the primary applicant or at least before the primary applicant is recognised as a beneficiary of subsidiary protection.

Q.24. Q.24. A. How is housing of asylum seekers organised: describe the system in general and indicate in particular what is the most frequently system used (see article 14, §1 which is a mandatory provision but leaves space for Member States; distinguish between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels places or other premises).

Housing is practically exclusively organised in open reception centers, except for those who are detained. It is rare (but on the rise) that an asylum seeker would stay on her own costs outside of the centers. Three such centers exist: in Békéscsaba, in Bicske and in Debrecen. Asylum seekers are entitled to stay there during the administrative and the court phase (if any) of their status determination procedure.

The 2008 system is clear on this task § 12 of the GD declares the following :

"(1) Providing conditions for the subsistence of asylum seekers, refugees and beneficiaries of subsidiary or temporary protection and facilitating their social inclusion is a state competence.
(2) Tasks pursuant to paragraph (1) above shall be performed directly by the refugee authority or through the notary of the competent municipality or, in the capital city, of the competent district (hereinafter referred to as notary) where the reception centre or other suitable accommodation (hereinafter referred to as reception centre) is situated.
(3) A reception centre is a facility operated by the refugee authority in order to accommodate and care for asylum seekers, refugees and beneficiaries of subsidiary or temporary protection. "

§ 21 (6) of the GD prescribes that -even if the family members have different status - accomodate together the family members unless they otherwise request.

Separated children (unaccompanied minors) are accommodated by a specific home run by the Hungarian Red Cross in Nagykanizsa.

Q.24. B. What is the total number of available places for asylum seekers? Distinguish in your answer between accommodation centres, private houses and apartments, hotels or other premises.

The number of places depends on the stage of renovations. According to information from OIN on 31 December 2005 the capacity of Békéscsaba was 350, Bicske 100 and Debrecen 1395 places. The home for separated children accommodates 20 such persons. The capacity of Bicske was limited by deputy the director's instruction.

Q.24. C. Is this number of places for asylum seekers sufficient in general or frequently insufficient?

In general the number of places is sufficient. New arrivals were below 2500 for the last years. (2004: 1600, 2005: 1609, 2006: 2109, 2007 January –September: 1975). The same reception capacity could handle much larger numbers in the late nineties. (1999: 11 499, 2000: 7 801). When comparing the past with recent years a qualification has to be added: since the late nineties the time spent in the reception centers has dramatically increased. In the years with greater numbers a significant portion of the asylum seekers disappeared from the centers within weeks.

Supprimé : January 1-June 30: 999

Q.24. D. Are there special measures foreseen in urgent cases of a high number of news arrivals of asylum seekers (outside the case of application of the directive on temporary protection)?

There are no publicly known plans. It is assumed that in the frame of national defence planning contingency plans for large scale influxes are elaborated, but no hard evidence is available.

Q.25. Accommodation centres (important note: all the following questions are about open and not closed centres where asylum seekers are detained which are covered by another question)

Q.25. A Are there different categories of accommodation centres, for instance depending of the stage of the procedure (admissibility and eligibility)?

The 2008 system envisages that there will be an accommodation centre for those under the preliminary assessment (i.e. eligibility) procedure (0 GD 81 (1), but details have not been revealed yet. Unaccompanied minors are also housed in a separate institution.

Q.25. B. Is there a legal time limit for accommodation in a centre after which the asylum seekers have access to private houses or apartments or is this limit linked to a stage of the asylum procedure?

No. There is no time limit. Accommodation in private houses is not on offer. Asylum seekers stay in the reception centre until the final (court) decision is taken.

With the approval of the refugee authority they may move out, at their own cost.

(Recognised refugees have to leave the reception centre 6 months or maximum a year after recognition, except for very special cases who may stay longer.)

Q.25. C. Is there a general regulation about the internal functioning of those centres and the rights and duties of the asylum seekers? If yes, is this general regulation applicable to public and private centres? If not, are the centres supposed to adopt an internal regulation and does a central authority have or not a kind of control about its content?

At the moment Annex to the Decree of the Minister of the Interior No 24/2001 (XI.21) on the organisational structure of refugee affairs and the responsibilities of refugee reception centres contains the House Rules which are applicable at each reception centre. It is expected that it will be re-drafted in the close future.

Q.25. D. Do the regulations foresee the possibility of sanctions against asylum seekers in case of breach of the rules? (see article 16, §3) If yes, which sanctions for which rules? Which is the competent authority to decide? How is it ensured that decisions are taken individually, objectively and in particular impartially (for instance through an independent arbitrator) as requested by §4 of article 21 which is mandatory provision*?* Which are the possibilities of appealing against those decisions if the system is different from the general one under question n°22? Are there already administrative appeal decisions or judgements which have been taken and if yes, which are the main important ones?

See the response to Question 21

Q.25. E. Are asylum seekers involved in the management of these centres? If yes, how (advisory board, appointment or election of representatives)? (see article 14, §6 which is an option provision)

There is no formal rule on this. According to observers no efforts are made by OIN to achieve participation. OIN notes that in their experience those asylum seekers staying for a longer period in a reception centre become informal mediators and sometimes spokespersons of others. On the other hand, the nationality breakdown of the asylum seekers accommodated in the Hungarian centers shows a great variety and the different nationality appear to be reluctant to co-operate with each other in order to forma common advocacy group

Q.25. F. Do specific rules exist on work of asylum seekers inside the accommodation centres different from the general ones about employment (see below)? If yes, which ones? Can working inside accommodation centres be considered as a (mandatory) contribution of the asylum seekers to the management of the centres, is it or not paid and considered as implying access to the labour market and subject to the same rules?

According to point 5 of the House Rules the asylum seeker must participate in the cleaning of her own room and in "keeping the immediate vicinity of the building tidy." Otherwise there is no obligation to work.

The specific rule on work is that asylum seekers may take up paid employment within the reception centre without a work permit (which - in the first year - they can not do outside.) The amount of paid work is limited in 40 hours per month (See: GD § 21(4))

Q.26. Q.26. A. How can asylum seekers communicate with legal advisers, representatives of UNHCR and NGOs? (see article 14, §2, (b) which is a mandatory provision).

See response to Q 26 B

Q.26. B. What are the rules about access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs regarding access to accommodation centres and other housing facilities (see article 14, §7 which is a mandatory provision)

The AA includes detailed rules on access of the abovementioned persons to the centres. § 5 d) states that the applicant is entitled to "enter into and maintain contact with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international or non-governmental organisations during the term of the asylum procedure.". §§ 37-38 elaborate:
"... (3) The person seeking recognition shall be given the opportunity to use legal aid at his/her own expense or, if in need, free of charge as set forth in the Act on Legal Assistance, or to accept the free legal aid of a registered non-governmental organisation engaged in legal protection.
(4) The person providing legal assistance authorized by the person seeking recognition
a) may attend the personal interview of the person seeking recognition;
b) may view the documents generated in the course of the refugee procedure and may make copies thereof;
c) may enter the premises of the institution serving to accommodate the person seeking recognition or, if the person seeking recognition is in detention, may enter the premises of the detention facility, for the purpose of maintaining contact with the person seeking recognition.
38. §
The representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees may take part in the refugee procedure. As part of this,
a) with the consent of the person seeking recognition,
aa) may attend the personal interview of the person seeking recognition;
ab) may view the documents generated in the course of the refugee procedure and may make copies thereof;
ac) shall be informed by the refugee authority of the progress of the refugee procedure and the decisions adopted, including any court decisions;
b) may present his/her opinion related to the application for recognition in any phase of the refugee procedure;
c) may enter the premises of the institutions serving to accommodate the person seeking recognition or, if the person seeking recognition is in detention, may enter the premises of the detention facility."

Q.26. C. Can the access of legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs be limited for security reasons or any other reason (see article 14, §7, last sentence)?

See response to Q 26 B

Q.27. Q.27. A. Is a medical screening organised by the receiving State, is it mandatory or voluntary? Does it include HIV tests? (see article 9 which is an optional provision)

Rules on medical screening change with the 2008 system. The earlier compulsory screening and quarantine is replaced with a flexible system, in which starts from § 5 (2) d) of the AA. It provides that the applicant must "subject him/herself to health tests, medical treatment prescribed as mandatory by law or required by the relevant health authority and to subject him/herself to the replacement of any missing vaccinations prescribed as mandatory by law and required by the relevant health authority in the case of the danger of disease." GD § 63 provides the details. According to para. (1) the subregional chief medical officer has to be notified, with a view to have the those medical screenings ordered, "which are corresponding to the epidemic situation". Afterwards, once already in the centre the local general practitioner is supposed to notice if the applicant suffers from any illness necessitating her/his separation. (subpara (2)).

Q.27. B. Do the legal provisions on reception conditions ensure that asylum seekers receive at least emergency care and essential treatment of illness as requested by article 15 §1 which is a mandatory provision? Do they have a further access to health care?

The GD contains detailed rules developing the earlier system. According to § 26
" If the applicant ...is not covered by the social security system, he shall be entitled to the following health care services free of charge in the case of illness:
a) examinations and curative treatments falling within the sphere of basic health care;
b) examinations and curative treatments within the framework of outpatient health care in the case of emergency, , as well as the medicine and bandage used in the course of health care;
c) inpatient hospital care in the case of emergency, and curative treatment in the hospital according to the prescriptions of the physician, including surgical operations and the therapeutic materials and prosthetic instruments used in the course of such operations, as well as therapeutic care, and the medicine, bandage and meals necessary for the treatment;
d) after outpatient health care or inpatient hospital treatment, until the stabilization of the person's health condition
da) the examinations and curative treatment required;
db) medicine which cannot be replaced with any other medicine and which does not fall within the types of medicine referred to in paragraph h) and any medical instruments necessary for the application thereof;
e) other medical instruments not included in point db but ordered by the physician and their repair
f) emergency dental treatment and dental preservation treatment provided the lowest category treatment is utilised
g) prenatal and obstetric care, including interventions aimed at interrupting pregnancy in line with the law on the protection of the life of the foetus.
h) medicine and bandage which can be prescribed free of charge for those "entitled to public health care" or which can be ordered with a 90% or 100% social security subsidy on the basis of a "health care provision";
i) ambulance service in the case of the care/maintenance mentioned in paragraphs b) c) and da of d) if, due to the condition of the patient, transportation of the patient cannot be solved in any other manner.
j) the compulsory immunization linked to a given "

The AA in § 29 (2) ensures that the persons with special needs enjoy more:
"persons requiring special treatment ... shall be entitled to health care provisions suited to their particular needs, free of charge, in case of need."

This is confirmed and elaborated by § 34 of the GD: "a person who has special needs – when in need – shall be entitled to use health care services justified by their condition free of charge, including rehabilitation, education for the mentally handicapped, psychological care and clinical psychiatry, as well as psychotherapy"

Q.27. C. What is the practice regarding access of asylum seekers to health care and how is it organised? In particular, what is the situation in accommodation centres (are doctors coming to the centres or do asylum seekers go to doctors outside)?

Nurses are available 24 hours, doctors and paediatricians come to the centre (twice a week) and have office hours, so do psychiatrists and non-verbal therapists of the Cordelia Foundation providing psychological care for psychiatric patients (torture victims, etc.) .

For specialized treatment asylum seekers have to attend the local special treatment centers. In case of hospitalisation need they are brought to the public hospitals.

Q.28. Q.28. A. What is the length of the period determined by the concerned Member State during which asylum seekers have no access to the labour market? (see article 11 which is a mandatory provision)

It is 1 year. (AA § 5 (1) c)) As indicated above asylum seekers are allowed to work within the reception centre from the submission of the application.

Q.28. B. After that period, are asylum seekers or not obliged to obtain a work permit? In case is there a limit for the administration to deliver the permits and how quick are they delivered? What is their length?

After the expiry of the year asylum seekers are obliged to obtain a work permit according to the general rules applicable to foreigners. Those are detailed in Decree No. 8/1999 (XI.10) of the Minister for Social and family Affairs, implementing Act No IV. of 1991 on the promotion of employment and on unemployment benefits.

Work permits are supposed to be delivered in ten days.

Their duration coincides with the length of the offer or has a maximum of one year, whichever is shorter.

Q.28. C. After that period, what are the conditions for access of the asylum seekers to the labour market? (in particular, are there rules concerning the maximum allowed of working hours or days per week, month or year, limits in terms of type of work or of professions authorised?

There are no such limits (except for the jobs reserved for Hungarian nationals, naturally.) Asylum seekers are free to take up employment as any foreigner who is not an EEA national.

Q.28. D. What are the rules in terms of priorities between asylum seekers on the one hand and nationals, EU or EEE citizens and legally third-country nationals on the other?

Asylum seekers qualify as legally resident third country nationals. EEA nationals have priority before them.

Q.28. E. Do asylum seekers have access to vocational training, does this or not depend of their right to access to the labour market, and in case at which conditions? (see article 12 which is optional regarding §1 and mandatory regarding § 2)

There are no direct rules dealing with that issue. Occasionally OIN itself or the NGO Menedék organize ad hoc vocational training courses. In the past trainings as carpet waiver, ceramist and social worker have been offered. GD § 14 (2) only envisages subcontracting for vocational training and re-training for the benefit of recognised refugees and beneficiaries of subsidiary protection which may be interpreted on the basis of an a contrario reasoning that the legislator does not intend to provide that opportunity to applicants.

Q.28. F. Are the rules regarding access to the labour market adopted to transpose the directive more or less generous than the ones applicable previously?

One of the few transpositional rules adopted in 2004 was the insertion of the 1 year deadline into the prohibition of employment. (§ 48 of Act No XXIX of 2004, amending § 16 (2) of the 1997 AA) (Before that prohibition was unlimited) Accordingly the rules became more generous.

Q.29. Are reception conditions subject to the fact that asylum seekers do not have sufficient resources? Are asylum seekers requested to contribute to reception conditions when they have personal resources (for instance if they work) or to refund the authorities if it appears that they have resources? (see article 13 §§ 3 and 4 which are optional provisions)

Yes, the provision of the conditions - except for the accommodation and the food provided in the reception centre - is subject to the asylum seekers own resources. (Wealth and/or income). According to § 18 of the GD they are free from contributing if the average income per head of the applicants constituting one household does not exceed the minimum monthly wage. In 2007 this is 65.500 HUF which is approximately 225 euros.

Supprimé : of old age pension

The applicant has to make a formal statement concerning her wealth and income when applying. (GD §17 (1).) That statement is subject to renewal upon request of the refugee authority. The statement ends with a declaration in which the applicant takes note of the fact that she is obliged to pay for the services if her income exceeds the above mentioned limit. According to OIN the occurrence of the existence of own resources is 1 to 1000 among the applicants.

7. SPECIAL NEEDS OF PARTICULAR CATEGORIES OF ASYLUM SEEKERS

Q.30.

Q.30.A. Which of the different categories of persons with special needs considered in the directive are taken into account in the national legislation (see article 17, §1 which is a mandatory provision): disabled people, elderly people, pregnant women, single parents with minor children, persons who have been tortured, raped or victims of serious physical or psychological violence? Include in your answer all other categories envisaged in national law.

The text essentially is literally incorporated into the new AA.

AA § 2 k :
"person requiring special treatment: a vulnerable person, in particular, a minor, unaccompanied minor, elderly or disabled person, pregnant woman, single parent raising a minor child and a person who has undergone torture, rape or any other grave form of psychological, physical or sexual violence and has special needs because of his/her individual situation".

AA § 19 (2) reinforces the general principle of § 17 RD when it declares:

"persons requiring special treatment shall be entitled to health care provisions suited to their state of health, as determined in a separate legal rule, free of charge in case of need."

GD § 3 (1) makes it a duty of the authority to find out if the person is in a special situation (is a vulnerable person) or not. The same article envisages the involvement of expert doctors or psychologists in case of doubt. The expert involvement requires the consent of the affected person.

Q.30. B. How is their specific situation taken into account (see articles 13, §2, second indent, 16 §4 second sentence and 17 which are mandatory provisions)?

RD 13 (2) is reflected in § 28 of the AA in general terms (calling for material conditions satisfying the health needs and basic needs of the applicant.)

§ 30 (2) of the AA sets a serious barrier: reception conditions must not be denied or revoked in respect of persons "requiring special treatment" – meaning persons with special needs.
The GD devotes a separate subsection to persons with special needs (§§ 32-34) In essence it guarantees, that the - vulnerable person be accommodated in a personal accommodation (not a common space)

- family unity be maintained,
- needs and best interest of the unaccompanied minor be taken into account,
- psychological treatment and rehabilitation be available free of charge.

Q.30. C. How and when are the special needs of the concerned persons supposed to be legally identified (see article 17 § 2 which is a mandatory provision and clarify how it has been interpreted by transposition)?

As already mentioned under response to § 30 A, GD § 3 (1) makes it a duty of the authority to find out if the person is in a special situation (is a vulnerable person) or not. The same article envisages the involvement of expert doctors or psychologists in case of doubt. The expert involvement requires the consent of the affected person. The obligation of the authority is phrased in general terms (”in the course of the application of the provisions of [the AA] and of the [GD]”), so no specific time limit is set.

Q.30. D. Is the necessary medical and other assistance provided to persons with special needs as requested by article 15, §2 which is a mandatory provision and in particular to victims of torture and violence as requested by article 20 which is a mandatory provision?

Yes it is, see responses to Q. 30 A and B.

Q.31. About minors:

Q.31. A. Till which age are asylum seekers considered to be minor?

Till the age of 18. According to AA § 2 f) ”unaccompanied minor is a foreigner under 18 years of age, who has entered the territory of the Republic of Hungary not accompanied by an adult person responsible for her/him on the basis of law or tradition, or who remains without supervision following entry, until s/he gets under the attendance/supervision of such a person”

Q.31. B. How is access of minor asylum seekers to the education system ensured? Is it at school or in case inside accommodation centres and can it be considered as similar to the conditions for nationals as requested by article 10, §1?

According to the Act on Public education (Act No LXXIX of 1993), unaccompanied minors, and children of asylum seekers have access to the educational system, until the age of the educational obligation, which at present is 18 years. (§ 110 of the Act).

They must attend an educational institution after one year of stay in Hungary. However, they may start attending the educational institution earlier “upon the request of the parent” (§ 110 (3) a))

Attendance occurs on the same conditions as that of the Hungarian nationals (paragraph (4) of the same section), which means that education and services provided at the school are free of charge.

Q.31. C. Is access to education ensured not later than 3 months as requested by article 10, §2 (or after maximum one year if specific education for asylum seekers is provided) and till an expulsion decision is really enforced?

If the parent so wishes access is ensured legally (from the first day). The 2008 system made it unequivocal in AA § 94 (5) which states that the right to send the child to school starts "from the submission of the application for recognition". However, if the parent does not intend to send the child to school, at present she can withhold her for a full year. Education does last until expulsion is enforced.

Q.31. D. Is specific education (like language classes) available for asylum seekers, in particular to facilitate their effective access to the education system of the reception Member State (see article 10, §2 which is an optional provision)?

According to § 21 (2) of the GD minors who have passed their fifth birthday must be provided with language education with a view to their participation in the public education.

Q.31. E. Are minors in general accommodated with their parents or with the person responsible of them? (see article 14, § 3)

Yes, they are. Unaccompanied minors under the age of eighteen years who make an application for asylum shall be placed in reception centres with special provisions for minors.
Unaccompanied minors may be placed with adult relatives if the latter undertake in writing to house, care and provide for the minor and from their personal relationship with the minor it becomes obvious that such an arrangement shall be in the best interest of the unaccompanied minor asylum seeker. Accommodation designated for an unaccompanied minor may only be changed in exceptional cases while taking into consideration the best interests of the minor.[509]
(7) When placing unaccompanied minors, family unity shall be maintained by keeping siblings together, taking into account their age and degree of maturity.

Q.31. F. Do minors with special needs enumerated by article 18, §2 which is a mandatory provision, have access to appropriate mental health care and qualified counselling?

[509] Provision drawn up pursuant to Article 19 (2) of the reception directive.
"Article 19 (2): Changes of residence of unaccompanied minors shall be limited to a minimum."

According to GD § 33 (3)) in the course of reception the interests of minors who make an application for asylum shall be taken into account. The paragraph expressly states that during the placement in the reception centre clothing, food, mentalhygenic and health care, general care and education and accommodation must "correspond to the child's age, health condition and other needs" and "must be conducive to her/his physical, intellectual, emotional and moral development". See also response to Question 30 A. and B.

Q.31. G. How and when is organised the representation of unaccompanied minors (guardianship, special organisation) and regularly assessed? (see article 19, §1 which is a mandatory provision)

"If the person seeking recognition is an unaccompanied minor, the refugee authority shall, without delay, provide for the appointment of a guardian serving to represent the minor" –states § 35 (6) of the AA.

In practice there is a difference among guardians in the perception of their role. Some limit it to participation in the refugee status determination procedure, others undertake to represent the minor's interests in other contexts of the everyday life.

Q.31. H. How is placement of unaccompanied minors organised (with adult relatives, a foster family, in special accommodation centres or other suitable accommodation)? (see article 19, §2 which is mandatory provision)

.GD § 33 contains the relevant rules. They can be summarised in the following way: Unaccompanied minors under the age of eighteen years who make an application for asylum shall be placed in reception centres with special provisions for minors. Unaccompanied minors may be placed with adult relatives if the latter undertake in writing to house, care and provide for the minor and from their personal relationship with the minor it becomes obvious that such an arrangement shall be in the best interest of the unaccompanied minor asylum seeker. Accommodation designated for an unaccompanied minor may only be changed in exceptional cases while taking into consideration the best interests of the minor. When placing unaccompanied minors, family unity shall be maintained by keeping siblings together, taking into account their age and degree of maturity.

Q.31. I. How is the tracing of the family members of the unaccompanied minors organised? Are measures taken to protect confidentiality of information when necessary? (see article 19, §3 which is a mandatory provision)

According to § 4 of the GD it is the responsibility of the refugee authority to trace person responsible for the minor unless there are reasons to believe on the basis of the information available for the refugee authority that there is a conflict of interest between the minor and the adult responsible for her/him, or - with a view to the best interest of the child - tracing of the adult is not called for.

The authority may turn to refugee authorities of other EU member states, or rely on the assistance of UNHCR, ICRC, Red Cross and Red Crescent societies and other international organisations dealing with support of persons in need of international protection. (GD § 4 (3)

8. EXCEPTIONAL MODALITIES OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.32. Apart from detention covered by the next question, are there exceptional modalities for reception conditions in the following cases and if yes, which ones and for how long are they applicable, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)?

Q.32. A. Persons with specific or special needs, regarding in particular the period of assessment of those needs?

Apart from free health care provided under the general provisions of Act on Asylum and its implementing government decree applicants having special needs are entitled, in particular, to rehabilitation, psychological health care and psychotherapeutic treatment. These persons shall also be accommodated separately, if it is justified by their personal circumstances, though the unity of the family shall be maintained in case of this separate accommodation as well (§ 32, § 33, paras. 1-2, § 34, GD). The Refugee Authority is to examine ex officio whether the specific rules related to persons having special needs are applicable or not. This assessment may comprise medical examination with the assistance of a doctor or psychological expert. Nevertheless, no medical examination can take place without the consent of the person concerned who is to be duly informed on the scope, method, purpose, significance of the medical examination. If the person concerned fails to consent to the medical examination, the specific rules are not applicable (Article 3, GD.).

Moreover, minors are entitled to special care and attention with respect to the provision of reception conditions, encompassing accommodation, education, health care, mental hygienic care etc, which shall be compatible with the interest of the child, while it shall also promote his or her physical, emotional, mental and moral development, furthermore, it shall respond to needs of his or her age, state of health (§ 33, para. 3., GD)

Unaccompanied minors are to be accommodated in special accommodation facilities or with relatives if it serves the interest of the child. Their place of accommodation can only be altered exceptionally and the unity of the family shall be ensured by the joint, identical placement of brothers and sisters. The Refugee Authority is also to take measures in order to find the responsible person for the supervision of the unaccompanied minor (§ 4; § 33, paras. 4-5. GD).

Q.32. B. Non availability of reception conditions in certain areas

No.

Q.32. C. Temporarily exhaustion of normal housing capacities

No.

Q.32. D. The asylum seeker is confined to a border post

Yes, that is possible, but not practiced in the so-called border procedure (See response to Question 11) Those who directly apply for recognition with the Border Guards may spend hours or a day in custody before transfer to a reception centre.

Q.32. E. All other cases not mentioned in the directive (for instance urgent situation in case of a sudden high number of applicants outside a case of application of the directive on temporary protection).

No

Q.33. Detention of asylum seekers (we do not cover the situation of rejected asylum seekers detained for the purpose of their return) (see §s 6 §2, 7 §3, 13, §2 2nd indent and 14 §8 which implies that the directive is in principle applicable in case of detention):

Q.33. A. In which cases or circumstances and for which reasons[1] (identity verification in particular if the persons have no or false documents, protection of public order or national security, refugee status determination, way of entry into the territory, etc) can an asylum seeker be detained during the asylum procedure till his request has been finally rejected. Quote precisely in English in your answer the legal basis for detention of asylum seekers in national law.

The regulation of the possible grounds for asylum seekers has changed considerably on account of the entry into force of the new AESTCN and the adoption of AA. The existing main grounds may be summarized as follows:

A) As lex generalis, the applicable rules are contained in AESTCN, which renders possible the detention of foreigners violating alien policing rules in the following cases:

1. Under § 54 of AESTCN The alien policing authority of OIN or the Border Guards may impose alien policing detention upon the foreigner "In order to secure the expulsion of a third-country national" if the person in question is "hiding from the authorities or is obstructing the enforcement of the expulsion in some other way"; or "he/she has refused to leave the country, or, based on other substantiated reasons, is allegedly delaying or preventing the enforcement of expulsion"; "he/she has seriously or repeatedly violated the code of conduct of the place of compulsory confinement"; "he/she has failed to report as ordered, by means of which to forestall conclusion of the pending immigration proceeding"; or "he/she is released from imprisonment as sentenced for a deliberate crime".

The alien policing authority may order detention for a maximum duration of seventy-two hours, which may be extended by the court of jurisdiction, until the departure of the third-country national or the court may extend the foreigner's detention "for a maximum duration of thirty days at a time". The alien policing detention shall cease immediately "when the conditions for carrying out the expulsion are secured"; or "when it becomes evident that the expulsion cannot be executed"; or "after six months from the date when ordered".

2. Under § 55 of AESTCN the alien policing authority of OIN or the Border Guards may order the "detention of the third-country national prior to expulsion in order to secure the conclusion of the immigration proceedings pending, if his/her identity or the legal grounds of his/her residence is not conclusively established". The detention prior to expulsion may be ordered for a maximum duration of seventy-two hours by the alien policing authority and then may be extended the court heaving jurisdiction "until the third-country national's identity or the legal grounds of his/her residence is conclusively established, or for maximum thirty days".

3. While formerly only unaccompanied minors were exempted from alien policing measures as of the new AESTCN, minors are explicitly exempted from such measures, nevertheless, the alien policing authority may order their confinement in a designated place. As to families: the alien policing authority may also order, instead of detention, the confinement of a third-country national in a designated place, if the third-country national in question: "should be placed under detention, in consequence of which his/her minor child residing in the territory of the Republic of Hungary would be left unattended if he/she was to be detained". (§ 56 (1) and 62 (1), AESTCN)

4. Any detention measure shall be immediately terminated if when its grounds "no longer exist" (§ 56 (2), AESTCN).

Thus, in comparison to former rules,

a) There are no obligatory cases of expulsion.
b) The maximum length of alien policing detention was reduced from one year to 6 months AESTCN.
c) The rules on court intervention altered significantly, since now the court is required to review detention first 72 hours (not five days) after its ordering and afterwards judicial review is to occur every 30 days.
d) The detention for refusal (return to another country on the basis of readmission agreement) was abolished.

As to alien policing detention measures, it shall also be noted, however, that in the case of former short-time alien policing detention measures (e.g. detention for refusal) there had already been a practice of "early release" of asylum seekers (see below, point A).

B) Nevertheless, as lex specialis, the AA basically seems to curtail considerably the applicability of alien policing norms on detention in the case of asylum seekers. The AA renders possible the detention of asylum seekers only during the preliminary assessment of the asylum application which may not exceed 15 days, and this time limit can not be extended (see § 47 (2) and § 55 (3)). Although § 55 (3) prescribes that the detention of the asylum seeker shall be terminated by the alien policing authority, after the Refugee Authority made a decision on referring the case to the in merit phase of the procedure, „at the initiative of the refugee authority" it is expected that upon such referral this initiative follows automatically. Nevertheless, the practice attached to these provisions still remains to be seen.

It shall be noted, however, that in the case of former short-time alien policing detention measures (e.g. detention for refusal) there had already been a practice of "early release" of asylum seekers (see above, point A). The explanation for this was the fact that after the submission of the asylum application it became evident that due to the average length of such procedure, the purpose of the short-time detention was manifestly impossible to be attained within the maximum possible period of detention, especially that measures taken in view of returning, refusal or expulsion had to be suspended during the asylum procedure. As the maximum period of alien policing detention dropped from one year to 6 months, a situation similar to the former short – time detention measures emerges. Since "any third-country national whose application for refugee status is pending may be turned back or expelled only if his application is refused by final and executable decision of the refugee authority" it seems to be evident that if the case is referred to the in-merit procedure by the Refugee Authority, expulsion (which is the purpose of alien policing detention) can not be implemented within the 6 month time limit.

The AA also specifies that the material conditions of reception shall also be provided to persons seeking recognition while detained. It remains to be seen how this would be implemented in practice.

It follows that asylum seekers may not be held in detention for the sole reason of being an asylum applicant.

RELEVANT LEGAL ACTS:

A) Act LXXX of 2007 on Asylum (AA)

28. §

(1) The refugee authority shall provide for the availability of the material conditions of reception suited to the state of health and satisfying the basic needs of the person seeking recognition.
(2) The material conditions of reception shall also be provided to persons seeking recognition while detained.

Preliminary Assessment Procedure

(1) The refugee authority shall subject an application for recognition as a refugee or as a beneficiary of subsidiary protection (in the present Chapter hereinafter referred to as the "application") to a preliminary assessment following its submission.
(2) The preliminary assessment procedure shall be completed within fifteen days. The time limit for administration may not be extended.

(1) If the refugee authority establishes the admissibility of an application, it shall refer the application to the in-merit procedure.

(2) No legal remedy shall lie against a resolution referring the application to the in-merit procedure.
(3) If the refugee authority refers the application to the in-merit procedure and the applicant is in alien policing detention, the alien police authority shall, at the initiative of the refugee authority, terminate his/her detention.

B) Act II of 2007
on the Admission and Right of Residence of Third-Country Nationals

Article 51.

(1) Third-country nationals may not be turned back or expelled to the territory of a country that fails to satisfy the criteria of safe country of origin or safe third country regarding the person in question, in particular where the third-country national would be threatened with persecution on account of his/her race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political conviction, nor to the territory of a state or to the frontier of a territory where there is substantial reason to believe that the returned or expelled third-country national would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or any other form of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (non-refoulement).

(2) Any third-country national whose application for refugee status is pending may be turned back or expelled only if his application is refused by a final and executable decision of the refugee authority.

Detention
Article 54.

(1) In order to secure the expulsion of a third-country national the aliens policing authority shall have powers to detain the person in question if:

a) he/she is hiding from the authorities or is obstructing the enforcement of the expulsion in some other way;

b) he/she has refused to leave the country, or, there are substantive reasons to believe that he/she delays or prevents the enforcement of expulsion;

c) he/she has seriously or repeatedly violated the code of conduct of the place of compulsory confinement;

d) he/she has failed to report as ordered, by means of which to forestall conclusion of the pending aliens policing proceeding;

e) he/she is released from imprisonment as sentenced for a deliberate crime.

(2) Aliens policing detention shall be ordered by way of a formal resolution, and shall be carried out when communicated.

(3) Aliens policing detention may be ordered for a maximum duration of seventy-two hours, and it may be extended by the court of jurisdiction by reference to the place of detention until the third-country national's departure, or for maximum thirty days.

(4) Aliens policing detention shall be terminated immediately:

a) when the conditions for carrying out the expulsion are secured;

b) when it becomes evident that the expulsion cannot be executed; or

c) after six months from the date when ordered.

(5) In the application of Paragraph c) of Subsection (4), the duration of detention in preparation of expulsion shall be included in the duration of detention.

(6) In connection with the termination of detention under Paragraphs b) and c) of Subsection (4), aliens policing authority ordering the detention shall designate a compulsory place of residence for the third-country national affected.

Article 55.

(1) The aliens policing authority may order the detention in preparation of expulsion of the third-country national in order to secure the conclusion of the pending aliens policing procedure, if his/her identity or the legal grounds of his/her residence is not clarified.

(2) Detention in preparation of expulsion shall be ordered by way of a formal resolution, and shall be carried out when communicated.

(3) Detention in preparation of expulsion may be ordered for a maximum duration of seventy-two hours, and it may be extended by the court of jurisdiction by reference to the place of detention until the third-country national's identity or the legal grounds of his/her residence is clarified, or for maximum thirty days.

Article 56.

(1) The detention of a third-country national who is a minor under aliens policing laws or in preparation of expulsion (hereinafter referred to collectively as "detention") may not be ordered.

(2) Detention shall be terminated immediately when the grounds therefore no longer exist.

Article 62.

(1) The aliens policing authority shall have powers to order the stay of a third-country national in a designated place, if the third-country national in question:

a) cannot be returned or expelled due to commitments of the Republic of Hungary conferred upon it in international treaties and conventions;

b) is a minor who would be subject to detention;

c) would be subject to detention, in consequence of which his/her minor child residing in the territory of the Republic of Hungary would be left unattended if he/she was to be detained;

d) is released from detention, however, there are still grounds for his/her detention;

e) has a residence permit granted on humanitarian grounds;

f) has been expelled, and is lacking adequate financial resources to support himself and/or does not have adequate dwelling.

Q.33. B. Has your member State adopted measures to transpose §3 of article 7 which is an optional provision? If yes, how has this provision been legally understood (is it a case of detention or an obligation to stay in and not leave a certain place?) and for which reasons can an asylum seeker be "confined" in such a place?

Supprimé : Although there was no formal transposition of that rule yet, some Hungarian rules in force "resemble" its meaning.¶

The person seeking asylum is obliged to stay "at the accommodation facility designated by the refugee authority for him/her according to the present Act and observe the rules of conduct governing residence at the designated accommodation facility" (§ 5 (2) a) of AA, Under § 48 of AA, the refugee authority designates a reception centre for the place of accommodation of the asylum seeker "until the decision closing the preliminary assessment procedure or the one on the delivery or acceptance of the foreigner" based on the Dublin procedure becomes final "unless the applicant is under the effect of a measure restricting personal freedom or under the effect of punishment". This placement implies a restriction on the freedom of movement of the applicant as "The applicant may only leave the reception centre in particularly justified cases, with the permission of the refugee authority, provided that his/her absence does not prevent the performance of the relevant procedural acts" (§ 48 (2), AA).

Q.33. C. Are there legally alternatives to detention, like obligation to report to the authorities, obligation to stay in a place, provision of a guarantor or of a financial guarantee?

Supprimé : ¶

As already indicated, detention need not be experienced by the applicant. It only occurs when an alien policing rule had been violated. (Exception: border procedure and the 12-24 hours before the applicant is directed to the reception centre after contacting an authority, whether Police or Border Guards.)

In the case of minors and families the confinement of the asylum seeker to a designated place may be seen as an alternative measure to detention. (§ 62(1), AESTCN). The rules of alien policing expulsion also indicate the existence of reporting obligations – though not much practice has been attached to this in the case of asylum seekers so far (§ 54 (1) point d), AESTCN). See also comments on Q 33A.

Q.33. D. Which is the competent authority to order the detention of an asylum seeker? Explain if different authorities are involved to first take and later confirm the decision.

As indicated under subquestion A the aliens police authority of OIN or the Border Guards (also having aliens policing powers) may order detention. (In case of foreign criminals the court may also order expulsion which leads to detention). Both of them order detention as a consequence of violating the rules of entry, stay or departure. Merely the fact that someone is an asylum seeker may not serve as a ground for detention if the identity of the asylum seeker is not in doubt.

After 72 hours the local courts have to confirm (extend) detention, which may be prolonged by 30 days on each occasion. The maximum period of detention is 6 months. Nevertheless, the new rule introduced by AA will only make possible the detention of asylum seekers for 15 days. See also comments on Q 33A..

Q.33. E. For how long and till which stage of the asylum procedure can an asylum seeker be detained?

Under AA Asylum seekers may only be detained during the preliminary assessment of their application for a maximum period of 15 days. See also comments on Q 33A.

Q.33. F. In which places (can we call them "closed centres"?) are asylum seekers detained (places in a special closed centres reserved only to asylum seekers, together with returnees like illegal aliens or even in a normal prison, in case within separated areas or with the other detainees)? Indicate if a difference has to be made following the location of the "closed centres" at the border or on the territory? Which is the authority managing those places and is it the same as the one in charge of reception conditions?

Detention takes place in seven specific detention facilities, of the Border Guards, spread all over the country (Budapest, Győr, Kiskunhalas, Orosháza, Nyírbátor, Szombathely). In these only persons awaiting expulsion or the implementation of return agreements (plus Dublin II) are to be found. In special cases (release from previous criminal punishment) a further institution (a genuine prison) may be involved: for men Nagyfa National Prison, and for women: Pálháza National Prison. According to reports the latter practically never accommodates asylum seekers, whereas the prison in Nagyfa does.

Q.33. G. Does UNHCR and NGOs have access to the places of detention and under which conditions?

Under § 38 of AA point c states the representative of UNHCR "may enter the premises of the institutions serving to accommodate the person seeking recognition or, if the person seeking recognition is in detention, may enter the premises of the detention facility." NGOs also have access on permission or on the basis of long term cooperation contract – like that of the Hungarian Helsinki Committee and the Border Guards enabling lawyers of the HHC accessing the detained persons.

Q.33. H. What appeal(s) can asylum seekers introduce against the fact he is detained? Is article 18 of the directive on asylum procedures of 1 December 2005 following which "Where an applicant for asylum is held in detention, Member States shall ensure that there is a possibility of speedy judicial review" respected (even if it has not yet to be transposed)?

For automatic judicial review, please see comments on 33 A. Otherwise, under § 57 of AESTCN the detained third country national "lodge a complaint - as a form of remedy, on the grounds of an infringement of the law - against the resolution ordering his/her detention within seventy-two hours from the time when ordered" to the local court having jurisdiction.

Q.33. I. Is the directive on reception conditions considered to be in principle applicable to the places where asylum seekers are detained? In particular which information do they receive about their rights, which access do they have to legal advice and health care?

See comments on Q33A. Under § 28 (2)AA, the "material conditions of reception shall also be provided to persons seeking recognition while detained".

Q.33. J. Apart from freedom of movement, what are the main differences between normal reception conditions and exceptional modalities for reception conditions in case of detention, knowing that they should be "as short as possible" (see article 14, §8)? If it is about closed centres, are the regulations of those places in line with the requirements of the directive (is article 13, §2, second indent of the directive following which "Member States shall ensure that standards of living is met (…) in relation to the situation of persons who are in detention" respected?).

See comments on Q33A. Under § 28 (2)AA, the "material conditions of reception shall also be provided to persons seeking recognition while detained".

The level of control is much more intensive. The telephone conversations may be overheard – for security reasons – correspondence checked if suspicion emerges, visits from the outside of other than lawyers, authority representatives or embassy employees and international organisations' delegations may be limited. The Decree of the Minister for Justice and Law Enforcement, 27/2007 (V.31) on the execution of detention ordered in the aliens policing procedure goes into details, the need to provide heating. It also states that food must have 10 900 joule energy and pregnant mothers must get at least half a litre of milk per day. In practice payphones are only accessible when the asylum seeker is escorted to them.

Supprimé :

Q.33. K. Are measures taken to avoid detention of asylum seekers with special needs (if yes, which ones?) or are special measures taken because of their needs?

Minors can not be detained (§ 56 AESTCN) and for persons who should be placed under detention, in consequence of which his/her minor child residing in the territory of the Republic of Hungary would be left unattended if he/she was to be detained" a confinement to a designated place instead of detention may be ordered (§ 62 AESTCN). See also comments on Q 33A.

Q.33. L. Can minor asylum seekers be detained together with relatives? Can unaccompanied minor asylum seekers be detained? If yes, are there special measures which take into account that children are concerned?

Minor asylum seekers are explicitly exempted form detention (§ 56, 62, AESTCN).

Q.33. M. In particular is article 10 regarding access to education of minors respected in those places?

Minor asylum seekers are explicitly exempted form detention (§§ 56, and 62, AESTCN).

Q.33. N. How many asylum seekers are for the moment detained in your Member State? Which proportion does this represent in comparison of the total number of asylum seekers at the same moment?

The number of persons in detention varied between 58 and 268 between January and October 2007. They constituted 1/2 - 1/5 of those living in reception centers.

9. ORGANISATION OF THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Respondent's warning: the whole system of reception is being overhauled but the new scheme is not formulated yet. It is expected to be created (at least "on paper") by 1 January 2008 when the 2008 system will enter into force.

Q.34. Explain if the system of providing reception conditions is centralised or decentralised (which levels of government do provide practically reception conditions?) (do not confuse this question with question number 3 about the competence to make rules about reception conditions).

The system is centralised, it is OIN which runs reception centers. (Any NGO participating in providing reception conditions concludes a contract with the central office of OIN.

Q.35. In case, are accommodation centres public or/and private (managed by NGOs? If yes, are the NGOs financially supported by the State?)

Except for the very small home for unaccompanied children which is run by a Hungarian NGO (the Hungarian Red Cross) all accommodation centers (in fact: reception centers) are public, run by OIN.

Q.36. In case, how many accommodation centres are there in your Member State (distinguish in your answer between public and private centres)?

Supprimé : ¶ ¶ ¶ ¶ ¶

As mentioned earlier at the moment there are three reception centers (Békéscsaba, Bicske, Debrecen) and a home for unaccompanied children. (Nagykanizsa).

Q.37. Is there in the legislation a plan or are there rules in order to spread the asylum seekers all over the territory of your Member State to avoid their concentration in some areas like big cities or to share the costs of their reception between central, regional and local authorities?

There are no such plans. In fact rumour sometimes refers to closing one of the three centers as the number of applicants is a fraction of that of the late nineties. In preparatory works to the amendment/redrafting of the AA the idea was also raised to attribute a specific profile to one of the centers (reserving it to eligibility procedures, e.g.) That intention is now expressed in the new rules, but no implementing regulation exists. What was consequent in the past and is predictable in the future is that asylum seekers are not received in Budapest, the capital, where one fifth of the population lives.

Q.38. Does a central body representing all the actors (like NGOs) involved in reception conditions exist? Does it play a consultative role for the State authorities, a coordination role for the actors or any other role?

There is no such body. The three most important actors mentioned in response to Subquestion 18 D act as "de-facto" umbrella organisations which are usually - but not always – involved in dialogue with the state agencies about conditions. Frequently they take public positions on existing practice or desired changes. E.g. Menedék issued a widely publicised statement shortly before the transposition deadline of the RD was to expire, listing points where harmonisation had not been achieved. The Hungarian Helsinki Committee, Menedék and OIN have jointly produced the report on transposition which went to the European Parliament as part of a comparative report.

Asylum seekers do not maintain stable NGO-s engaged in policy dialogue or in controlling the everyday operation of the centers.

To repeat the main point: there is no central body in which government, NGO-s, churches and municipalities would participate together and discuss reception conditions related matters.

UNHCR noted that it organises twice a year a half day long operational partners' meeting which brings together OIN, relevant ministries and NGOs (and naturally UNHCR itself) and is an informal forum for discussing current issues.

Q.39. Q.39. A. Which is the body in charge of guidance, monitoring and controlling the system of reception conditions as requested by article 23 which is mandatory provision? Include in your answer which is the competent ministry (Interior, Social affairs, etc) for reception conditions?

The body in charge is Office for Immigration and Nationality, which in turn is an organisation under the supervision of the Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement..

Q.39. B. Has your Member State (like the Czech Republic did recently) approved quality standards (not necessary legally binding) for housing services (for instance about the number of persons per bedroom on the basis of its size, number of accessible toilets, bathrooms, showers and washing machines per number of persons, existence of common rooms with radio, television, newspapers, books, computers, accessibility of telephone, existence of recreative rooms for children,…) to be respected in particular in accommodation centres?

Not really. § 21 (1) of the AA Decree fixes the basic requirement of guaranteeing three meals per day, utensils, hygienic tools and clothes. Genuine quality standards may come in the rules on reception centers.

Q.39. C. How is this system of guidance, control and monitoring of reception conditions organised?

Guidance, control and monitoring is the duty of OIN (§ 1 of the Decree of the Minister of the Interior No 24/2001 (XI.21) on the organisational structure of refugee affairs and the responsibilities of refugee reception centres). The general director of OIN is the employer of the directors of the reception centers and exercises direct bureaucratic and personal control over them through the head of the refugee affairs directorate. An organigram is available at: http://www.bmbah.hu/szervezeti_egysegek.php . The Department of Reception and Refugee Integration, supervises directly the professional operation of the reception centers and of the unaccompanied minors home. The financial supervision is run by the Directorate of Finances of the OIN.

Q.39. D. Does the body in charge of guidance, control and monitoring produce reports about the level of reception conditions? If yes, how frequently and are they public?

OIN does not produce reports for the general public, nor for Parliament. The reception centers have an obligation to report on a monthly bases. The Directorate of Refugee Affairs completes a report about the operation of all the centers twice a year. These reports are not made public, but according to OIN can be requested. Each year the OIN sends a full report about activities and figures connected to the field of asylum, reception and integration, including costs, budgets etc. to UNHCR but neither that, nor UNHCR's country report is in the public domain.[510]

Assumedly there are also reports on spending ERF money on reception conditions.

It is noteworthy that the Committee on Human Rights, Minorities, Civil and Religious Matters of the Hungarian Parliament recurrently organizes hearings at which leaders of the OIN report about their activities. The Committee occasionally relocates to one of the affected institutions and proceeds with the hearing there. Another institution which may serve as a source of knowledge about certain aspects of the reception conditions granted or withheld is the Office of the Parliamentary Commissioner of Human Rights

Q.40. Q.40. A. What is the total number of asylum seekers covered by reception conditions for the last year for which figures are available (see article 22 obliging Member States to calculate those statistics about which we also asked the Commission to require them from Member States for mid June)?

The monthly average in 2006 was 470 without those in detention. (The average of those in detention was around 76).

Q.40. B. What is the total budget of reception conditions in euro for the last year for which figures are available?

No such data is available at the moment.

Q.40. C. What is the average cost of reception conditions in euro per asylum seeker for the last year for which figures are available?

No such data is available at the moment.

Q.40. D Are the costs of reception conditions of asylum seekers supported by the central/federal or federated government or are they shared with regional and/or local authorities?

Costs are born by the central government. health care costs are immediately born by the health care system (also governmental) and then reimbursed by OIN.

Q.40. E. Is article 24 § 2 of the directive following which "Member States shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the nationals provisions enacted to implement this directive" respected?

[510] The author of this report occasionally was not seen as a member of the general public, but as an insider...

Naturally this is by definition subject to debate. This reporter would believe that in a European context a cautious "yes" would be appropriate. More criticism would go for issue areas not covered by this report, namely integration of persons in need of international protection.

Q.41. Q.41. A. What is the total number of persons working for reception conditions?

At the end of 2005 it was 82 in the three centers altogether. Many tasks are contracted out for external service providers

Q.41. B. How is the training of persons working in accommodation centres organised? Does it take into account specific needs of unaccompanied minors when relevant as well as the gender dimension? (see article 14 §5, 19 § 4 and also 24 §1 which are mandatory provisions)?

In OIN's budget there is no separate budget line for training. The directorate of refugee affairs of OIN organizes frequent (every 2-3 month) meeting for social workers.. EU funded projects also offer training. Country of origin information training is given on specific countries (upon the request of the centers) during the meeting of social workers. Special training modules are and will be offered to workers of the unaccompanied minors home.

Q.41. C. Are there rules about the deontology of persons working in accommodation centres, in particular on confidentiality?

Social workers get training in ethical questions during their professional education. The professional association of social workers has adopted an ethical codex in April 2005, which enjoys very wide support in the profession and has been adopted for the workers of the reception centers too. Other staff working at the centre - to this reporters knowledge – do not get a specific training. Nevertheless all the staff is expected to obey the general rules on data protection which are quite strict in Hungary.

10. IMPACT OF THE DIRECTIVE

Legal impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.42. Specify if there are or not big problems with the translation of the directive in the official language of your Member State and give in case a list of the worst examples of provisions which have been badly translated? (please note that this question has in particular been added to the questionnaire concerning the new Member States)

As with practically all the EU acquis, especially those which have been adopted around or after accession, there are major problems with the Hungarian text version.

Below comes a small table summarising salient differences.

Text in RD	Hungarian	Hungarian re-translated (back) to English	German
§ 8 to maintain as far as possible family unity	a család egységét adott formájában, amíg lehetséges, fenntartsák	to maintain as long as possible	so weit wie möglich zu wahren
§ 9 medical screening	orvosi vizsgálatát	medical examination	medizinishce Untersuchung
§ 13 (2)persons who have special needs in accordance with article 17	"különleges igényeket támasztó személyek" (§ 13 (2)	persons rasing special demands	besonders bedürftigte Personen
14 (8) specific needs of the applicant	"A kérelmező egyedi szükségletei" (§ 14 (8))	the individual/specific needs of the applicant	spezifische bedürfnisse des Asylbewerbers
§ 15 (2) applicants who have special needs	"különleges elbánást igénylő kérelmezők"	applicants requiring special treatment	Asylbewerbern mit besonderen Bedürfnissen
§ 17 "vulnerable persons"	"kiszolgáltatott személyek"	"persons at mercy /defenceless persons"	besonders schutzbedürftigen Personen
§ 8 and 14(1) housing	8: elhelyezés 14 szállás	8 placement/lodging 14 accommodation	8 Unterkunft 14 Unterbringung
§ 18 best interest of the child	"elsődlegesen a gyemek érdekeit"	primarily/foremost the interests of the child	das Wohl des Kindes
§ 21 last instance	"végső szakban"	final stage	letzten Instanz
§ 23 ensure that appropriate guidance, monitoring and control of the level of reception conditions are established	"gondoskodnak megfelelő vezetés, ellenőrzés és irányítás kialakításáról a befogadási feltételek szintjén."	[does not really make sense, approximately sg. like] provide for the establishment of appropriate guidance, control and governing at the level of reception conditions [sic]	gewährleisten..eine geeignete Lenkung, Überwachung und Steuerung des Niveaus der Aufnahmebedingungen.
§ 24 shall allocate the necessary resources in connection with the national provisions enacted to implement this Directive	ezen irányelv végrehajtására hozott nemzeti rendelkezéseknek megfelelően osztják el a szükséges erőforrásokat	shall distribute the necessary resources according to the national provisions enacted to implement this Directive	stellen die ressourcen bereit, die im Zusammenhang mit den nationalen Durchführungsvorschriften zu dieser richtlinie erforderlich sind

As this table shows, translation difficulties may stem from the difference between two other language versions, but sometimes it is sheer misinterpretation of the original.

Q.43. Where there precise legal rules on reception conditions for asylum seekers before the adoption of the norms of transposition of the directive (if yes, specify what the nature of those rules was (legislation, regulation, administrative instructions,…)?

Before the 2008 system there was a complete set of rules, the AA of 1997 its implementing Government decree and several decrees of the Minister of the Interior.

Q.44. Did the legal rules applicable to reception conditions become more clear, precise, coherent or detailed with the adoption of the transposition norms (for instance do you now have after the transposition one basic text dealing with reception conditions instead of numerous different texts in the past?

The 2008 system is more detailed than the rules in force between 2004 and 2008 were. Especially persons with special needs are in a better position. Also appeal rights on the revocation of benefits are more clear.

Q.45. Did the transposition of the directive imply important changes in national law or were the changes of minor importance? In case, list the most important changes that have been introduced.

The most important changes introduced relate to access to the labour market the formal procedure regulating the revocation of benefits and the legal appeals going beyond mere complaint. Persons with specific needs have already benefited (in practice) from the existence of the directive.

Political impact of the transposition of the directive:

Q.46. Explain briefly if there has been an important debate about the transposition of the directive (in particular in the Parliament, but possibly also in the government, between political parties, including in medias, etc; underline in case the main points which have been discussed or have created difficulties)

The media does not take note of the issue of transposition as an EU obligation. There is no social discourse about "us" and "them" and the issues of fairness in distributing resources between the asylum seekers and the rest. The small numbers of asylum seekers explain this low visibility of the theme.

The general debate in Parliament on the whole AA lasted for approximately for 90 minutes and none of the lead contributions by the opposition challeged the proposal's rules on reception conditions (except for calling for compulsory medical screening).

In the small NGO community dealing with asylum seekers and refugees, and among other stakeholders (primarily UNHCR) naturally transposition is a deliberated issue. Gap analyses and reports have been produced, informal exchange of views is constant, but is not elevated to the public policy debate level.

The website of the Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement does not include a single contribution to the draft Government Decree (as it was) which was made available on that site for public comment.

Q.47. Did the transposition of the directive contribute to make the internal rules stricter or more generous? In particular, did your Member State use the occasion of the transposition to abolish more favourable provisions of national law? Does your Member State still have rules more favourable than the provisions of the directive (if yes, try to give the more important examples).

On balance the rules emanating are more generous. However in this reporter's judgment the most important were and will be three impacts:

- a continuous sensitisation to persons with special needs;
- the limitation of discretion exercised by the authorities. In general that discretion may have been used in favour of the applicant, but with the transposition of the directive the applicant will be entitled to resist in the few cases when it is not. (Think of access to schooling, e.g.)
- The dramatic curtailment from 1 January 2008 of the detention period from 12 months to 15 days

11. ANY OTHER INTERESTING ELEMENT

Q.48. What are in your view the weaknesses and strengths of the system of reception conditions in your Member State?

The strength of the system is a still living tradition of hospitality going back to the early formative periods of the system in 1989-1993, when asylum seekers from Romania and Yugoslavia sought refuge in Hungary. A firm desire to meet international (not only EU) requirements still prevails, UNHCR is a potent actor in the setting of standards.

It is a strength of the system that it guarantees access to services related to basic needs. (Shelter, clothing, food, health).

A major strength is the absolute limit on detention (15 days) amounting to a prohibition of detention during the in-merit procedure.

Weaknesses there are, also.

The state is reluctant to go beyond the minimum. and tries to retreat even from the most basic duties, leaving it to project financing, relying on ERF and independent funds. (social work, interpretation, legal aid, mental health of traumatised persons.)

Q.49. Mention any good practice in your Member State which could be promoted in other Member States

The absolute limit on detention (15 days) amounting to a prohibition of detention during the in-merit procedure

The compulsory language education for those above five years of age.

The guaranteed access to psychological assistance in case of persons with special needs, free of charge.

The extension of the reception conditions to those only qualifying for subsidiary protection.

The protected environments for single female asylum seekers and mothers with children are really appreciated by the affected persons and by the competent stakeholders

Access to internet appears to be very useful.

The active involvement of NGO-s in preparation of integration and the wide rights of human rights organisations in gaining access to asylum seekers.

Q.50. Please add here any other interesting element about reception conditions in your Member State which you did not had the occasion to mention in your previous answer.

The 2008 system is still not clearly visible. The above description is based on the analyses of the legal rules. Some of them (on reception centres) are still missing (on 6 December! 2007)

1. NORMS OF TRANSPOSITION

Q.1. Identify the main norm of transposition (indicate the title, date, number, date of entry into force and references of publication into the official journal) and indicate its legal nature (legislative, regulatory, administrative); indicate in your answer if this norm was only devoted to the directive or if it has been included in a more general text and indicate in that case by quoting precisely the numbers of the provisions adopted to transpose the directive.

Article 1 of the Protocol on the position of the United Kingdom and Ireland, annexed to then Treaty on European Union and to the Treaty establishing the European Community, Ireland may 'opt in' to measures establishing a Common European Asylum System.
Preamble 20 of the Reception Directive stated that Ireland is not participating in the Directive.

The main norms of reference for reception conditions for asylum seekers are as follows :

Department of Social and Family Affairs (DSFA) Ministerial Circular 04/00

DSFA Ministerial Circular 05/00

DSFA Ministerial Circular 02/03.

Internal Practice

Refugee Act 1996

Child Care Act 1991

Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 2005 (mentioned for comparative analysis only)

Q.2. List by order of importance by using numbers (1, 2, 3) the others norms of transposition if there are more than one (indicate for each norm the title, date, number and references of publication into the official journal; include in your answer the administrative measures taken to ensure implementation of the directive and of the transposition norms like regulations, administrative circulars, special instructions,…)

Ministerial Circular 04/00
Ministerial Circular 05/00
Ministerial Circular 02/03.
Internal Practice
Refugee Act 1996
Child Care Act 1991
Social Welfare (Consolidation) Act, 2005 (mentioned for comparative analysis only)

Q.3. Explain which level of government is competent to adopt the legal norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers (specify in particular in case of a federal or regional State, if it is the federal/central power or the components; in case, specify below when it is impossible for you to answer a question because it is about the competence of the components and it is impossible for you to gather reliable information about all of them)

As has been noted above Ireland is not bound by the minimum standards which the Reception Conditions Directive lays down.

The Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform, and in particular the Reception and Integration Agency, located within the department, is the body which is responsible for forming 'legal' norms on reception conditions for asylum seekers. However, Circulars were issued by the Department of Social and Family Affairs (DSFA). Within the National Parliament, it was usually the Minister for Justice, Equality and Law Reform who answered questions relating to the reception of asylum seekers and not the Minister for Social and Family Affairs.

Q.4. Explain the legal technical choices done to transpose the directive (comment on the nature and level of the norms used to do the transposition: legislative, regulatory, administrative like instructions, etc). Add any other element about the technique of transposition of the directive which is interesting for the implementation of Community law.

Not applicable.

Q.5. Mention if there is a general tendency to just copy the provisions of the directive into national legislation without redrafting or adaptation them to national circumstances? If yes, give some of the worst examples and explain if there is a risk that those provisions remain unapplied or will create difficulties of implementation in the future.

Not applicable.

Q.6. Have all the texts necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the new rules of transposition been adopted, prepared or at least foreseen in the future (for example a regulation completing a new law and the necessary instructions telling the administration how to apply the new rules)?

Not applicable.

2. BIBLIOGRAPHY

Q.7. Has an in-depth preparatory study been made public about the changes at the occasion of the transposition? If yes, thanks for trying to provide us a copy (please contact to answer this question adequately the body and person who was responsible for the preparation of the transposition of the directive in the public administration).

Not applicable.

Q.8. Quote any recent scientific book or article published about the directive, the transposition rules or the question of reception conditions for asylum seekers in general (answer even if this literature is only available in your language and provide the complete title in your language (without translation) with all references; indicate author, title, in case name of periodical, year and place of publication).

Not applicable

Q.9. Quote any interesting decision of jurisprudence based on the implementation of the new rules of transposition of the directive (indicate references of publication if any)?

Not applicable

3. GENERAL INFORMATION ABOUT THE SYSTEM OF RECEPTION CONDITIONS

The purpose of the following two questions is to help the reader to understand easily and quickly the system of reception conditions in your Member State and also to avoid that you have to repeat general elements in other parts of the questionnaire. Please do not write more than one or maximum two pages and do not include large historical developments.

Q.10. Describe in general the system of reception conditions in your Member State (in particular which are the main actors in charge of reception conditions?)

This system is known as 'direct provision' and has been in place since 10 April 2000. Asylum seekers are entitled to bed and board accommodation in reception centres and to €19.10 per week per adult and €9.60 per week per dependent child. This system is under the auspices of the Reception and Integration Agency (RIA). The RIA is located within DJELR. The RIA place the asylum seekers in the centres, while the payment is made by the Health Services Executive (HSE). The HSE provides an asylum seeker with two exceptional needs payments of €100 per year, as well as Back to Education Allowance if the asylee has child attending dependents.

Q.11. Q11. A. Explain if you have different types and levels of reception conditions following the different stages of the asylum procedure (this implies that you have to give briefly the necessary explanations about the asylum procedure). Make if relevant for reception conditions a distinction between the following procedural stages: determination of the responsible Member State on the basis of the Dublin II regulation, special procedures at the border (including transit zones in airports), accelerated procedures, admissibility procedures, eligibility procedures and the different possibilities of appeals (suspensive or not) against a refusal of the asylum request. Indicate what the main differences of reception conditions are between the different stages (if necessary by detailing between the different elements of reception conditions, in particular housing) and explain what the evolution of reception conditions is following the different stages of the procedure.

There is no differentiation in the level of support for asylum seekers at the different stages of the status determination process. However, as explained above, depending on the date that asylum seekers entered the determination process, his/her social aid rights may be different.

Q 11. B. Indicate precisely for which stage(s) of the asylum procedure the answers on reception conditions you give below are valid.

The reception conditions are the same for all asylum seekers throughout the refugee status determination procedure.

4. GENERAL RULES ON RECEPTION CONDITIONS

Q.12. Q 12. A. Are material reception conditions provided in kind, in money or in vouchers or in a combination of these elements (see article 13, §5 which is an optional provision)? Distinguish between the different elements (housing, food, clothes, health, transportation, pocket money,…). If reception conditions are provided in money (in general or in some cases, for instance when no places are anymore available in accommodation centres), indicate the precise amount given to the asylum seekers. Indicate in your answer what is provided in general and if there are exceptional cases. Specify in your answer if reception conditions are different from the general system of social aid for nationals or aliens and if yes, if and when (which stage of the asylum procedure) can asylum seekers have access to the general system of social aid?

Reception conditions for asylum seekers use a mixture of provision in kind and monetary support. Given the different social aid rights which asylum seekers may have due to the date of their application for refugee status, three different systems of support shall be considered.

Pre April 10 2000

Those who applied for asylum pre April 10 2000 were entitled to receive Supplementary Welfare Allowance and all the additional benefits that went with this. Some asylum seekers were entitled to the other social aid payments, by satisfaction of non-discriminatory nationality/residence criteria i.e. old age (non-contributory) pension, widow/widowers (non-contributory) pension, orphan's (non-contributory) pension, one parent family payment, carers allowance, disability allowance, then they would not be entitled to Supplementary Welfare Allowance, which is a residual social aid payment. Child benefit was available to all those with children. The current amounts of all these payments are listed below. Generally most persons who applied for asylum before April 10 2000 have had their claims determined.

Post April 2000

With the introduction of direct provision accommodation, Ministerial Circular 04/00 stated that the cash needs of those within direct provision accommodation centres, where bed and board are provided would be €19.10 per adult and €9.60 per dependent child. Asylum seekers were also entitled to two exceptional needs payments of €100 every six months. Even asylum seekers who received this payment, and direct provision accommodation may have been entitled to child benefit (if s/he had a child/children) or the other social aid payments (listed above). While not prohibited from applying for supplementary welfare allowance, there were general refusals from the Health Services Executive to make any other payment. Those asylum seekers coming within Circular 05/00 exception status continued to receive rent supplement and supplementary welfare allowance and/or social aid payments. Generally most persons who applied for asylum between April 10 2000 and May 1st 2003 have had their claims determined. Children of asylum seekers could also apply for back to school allowance for their children.

Post May 2003

Section 13 of the Social Welfare (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 2003 prohibited payment of rent allowance to any asylum seeker, other than those who were in receipt of that payment. All asylum applicants after this date were catered for exclusively within the direct provision system. Applicants could still possible (but improbably) receive Supplementary Welfare Allowance, and if they satisfied the non-discriminatory requirements for entitlement social aid, they could still receive this payment. Those who had been in receipt of rent supplement prior to May 1st 2003 would still be entitled to it. Generally those persons who applied for asylum post May 1st 2003 have had their claims determined, however there may be a number of applicants for whom this is not the case, hence the relevance of the historical background.

Post May 2004

Section 17 of the Social Welfare (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 2004 introduced a habitual residence requirement for all persons within the state for entitlement to all social aid payments (excluding exceptional and urgent needs payments). It would be very unlikely that asylum seekers who applied for asylum after May 1st 2004 would be entitled to supplementary welfare allowance, child benefit or any of the social aid payments (outlined above). It would be very difficult to prove habitual residence when asylees may be in the country for a relatively short time. Those who received the social aid payments prior to May 1st 2004 may still be in receipt of them if their refugee claim has not been exhausted. Asylum seekers who applied post May 2004 (and many before this time, especially young single men and single women without children/disability etc) are within a system of social aid that is separate to the social aid system of citizens and legal aliens. Only if an asylee was granted refugee status, or exceptional leave to remain in the country, would s/he be entitled to enter the mainstream social welfare system. All asylum seekers receive two €100 exceptional needs payments per year. Those on SWA are usually entitled to other benefits such as supplementary rent allowance and mortgage interest payment, a heat allowance and/or a special dietary allowance (for medical purposes). Those who qualify for SWA also receive Back to School Clothing and Footwear Allowance. Asylum seekers with school going children will receive this allowance of €120 for each child between the ages of 2-11 and for those aged 12-17, €190 per child.

Direct Provision Stipend €19.10 per adult/€9.60 per dependent child
Supplementary welfare Allowance €165.80/€110 per dependent adult*
Old age (non-contributory) pension €182(max.)/€120.30 per dependent adult*
Widow/widowers (non-contributory) pension €165.80/€182 (if over 66)*
Orphan's (non-contributory) pension €138*
One parent family payment €165.80/€182 (if over 66)*
Carers allowance €180/€270 (if more than one person)*
Disability allowance €165.80*
Child Benefit 1st & 2nd child €150, 3rd & subsequent children €185*
Back to School Educational Allowance €180 (Children between 2-11)
(Once off payment per year) €285 (Children between 12-17)

All payments are made weekly, except child benefit which is a monthly payment.

* May not be paid to all asylum seekers

May not be paid to all asylum seekers and rate differs if there is some other income source, rate given here is maximum allowable payment with no other income, dependent child rates excluded.

Q 12. B. Can the reception conditions in kind, money or vouchers be considered as sufficient "to ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of applicants and capable of ensuring their subsistence" as requested by article 13, §2 of the directive (which is a mandatory provision but leaves a certain space to Member States)? In order to help to assess the respect of this rule when reception conditions are provided in money, include if necessary in your answer points of comparison with the minimum amount of social aid guaranteed for nationals in your Member State.

Reception conditions could not be described as 'sufficient' given that currently the vast majority of asylum seekers are within the direct provision system, are entitled to bed and board and not entitled to any other benefit other than €19.10 per week per adult, €9.60 per week per child, two exceptional needs payments of €100 per year. Asylum seekers with school-going children are entitled to Back to Education Allowance. In comparison with Irish nationals, the level of support is quite low. The Free Legal Advice Centres Report(of 2003) notes that single Irish nationals who receive bed and board, and as a guideline figure receive €65 per week (in 2003). This compares unfavourably to the monetary support which a single asylum seeker receives.

5. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

Q.13. Q 13. A. Does the national legislation specifically provide that a request for international protection is presumed to be under the Geneva Convention unless explicitly requested otherwise? (see article 2, b which is a mandatory provision)

Under national legislation all applications for international protection are presumed to be made under the Geneva Convention.

Q. 13. B. Explain if the scope of application of reception conditions is extended to other asylum seekers than refugees in the sense of the Geneva Convention, in particular to persons asking for subsidiary protection or to other forms of protection like humanitarian statuses (see article 3, § 4 which is an optional provision)? If not, explain briefly which the differences between these special regimes and the directive are.

There is no differentiation of social aid provision between those who claim different forms of state protection.

Q. 13. C. Are there specific provisions in national law for reception conditions in case of diplomatic or territorial asylum requests submitted through a diplomatic or consular representation (see article 3, §2 which is an optional provision)?

No.

Q.14. Are reception conditions available as from the moment one asylum application is introduced? How is article 13, §1 which is mandatory legally understood? Do asylum seekers have to satisfy any other condition in order to get reception conditions?

All asylum seekers appear to be obliged to accept accommodation provided by the Reception and Integration Agency and post May 2003 cannot claim rent supplement. Although not a party to the reception directive, Ireland would be compliant with article 13, §1.

Q.15. Explain when reception conditions end, for instance after refusal of the asylum request (include in your answer the link with the right of appeal against a decision of refusal of the status, in particular the question of its suspensive effect).

The reception conditions will end if the asylum seeker (whose claim has failed) is deported from the country. There is no suspensive effect of reception conditions if an asylum seeker appeals findings of the refugee status determination bodies. Even where the refugee claim is rejected, if an asylum seeker makes an application for subsidiary protection or humanitarian leave to remain, s/he will continue to be supported within the asylum reception framework.

Q.16 Are there special rules or practices regarding reception conditions in case of successive applications for asylum introduced by the same person?

Although there are special rules on procedures to be followed in relation to determination of successive applications, it appears from national practice that reception supports will remain.

Q.17. Information of asylum seekers about their rights and obligations in terms of reception conditions, in particular about established benefits (see article 5 which is too large extend a mandatory provision; do not confuse this question with the information to be provided to asylum seekers about the asylum procedure):

Q. 17. A. Are asylum seekers informed, and if yes about what precisely?

Upon making an asylum application, the individual will receive immediately information in writing (which will also be explained to them orally) on their reception conditions and their obligations while in the country. Upon arrival in the accommodation centre there will be information on local support groups and information on the availability of legal advice from the Refugee Legal Service (RLS).

Q. 17. B. Is the information provided in writing or, when appropriate, orally?

Information is provided in writing and is also communicated orally to the asylum seekers.

Q.17. C. Is that information in general provided in a language understood by asylum seekers? Specify the list of languages in which it is available

There is no legislative requirement to provide this information in a language understood by asylum seekers. The Reception and Integration Agency provides written information in the following languages, Albanian, Arabic, Croatian, Czech, French, Farsi, Polish, Romanian, Russian, Serb-Croat.

Q. 17. D. Is the deadline of maximum 15 days respected?

Yes.

Q.18. Information of asylum seekers about the existence of organisations or groups promoting their interest and defending their rights (see article 5 which is to a large extend a mandatory provision):

Q. 18. A. Is there a list of organisations dressed by the authorities and if yes is it comprehensive? Is this in particular the case about the possibilities to get legal assistance and health care?
